U.S. Congress.

Congressional Record

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES

OF THE

FIRST SESSION OF THE SEVENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS

OF

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

VOLUME 79—PART 9

JUNE 14, 1935, TO JUNE 28, 1935

(Pages 9255 to 10398)

UNITED STATES
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE
WASHINGTON : 1935

RESEARCH LIBRARY
FEDERAL EMERGENCY RELIEF ADMINISTRATION

AUTHENTICATED
U.S. GOVERNMENT
INFORMATION
GPO

26,508

Law
J
11
.R5
copy 2

Congressional Record

SEVENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

SENATE

FRIDAY, JUNE 14, 1935

(Legislative day of Monday, May 13, 1935)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	King	Pope
Ashurst	Costigan	La Follette	Radcliffe
Austin	Couzens	Lewis	Reynolds
Bachman	Davis	Lonergan	Russell
Bailey	Dickinson	Long	Schall
Bankhead	Donahey	McAdoo	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Duffy	McCarran	Sheppard
Black	Fletcher	McGill	Shipstead
Bone	Frazier	McKellar	Smith
Borah	George	McNary	Steiwer
Brown	Gerry	Maloney	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	Gibson	Minton	Townsend
Bulow	Glass	Moore	Trammell
Burke	Gore	Murphy	Vandenberg
Byrd	Guffey	Murray	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Hale	Neely	Wagner
Capper	Harrison	Norbeck	Walsh
Caraway	Hastings	Norris	Wheeler
Chavez	Hatch	Nye	White
Clark	Hayden	O'Mahoney
Connally	Johnson	Overton
Coolidge	Keyes	Pittman

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], my colleague the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] are unavoidably detained from the Senate, that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is detained on account of illness in his family, and that the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] is absent on account of important public business. I will ask that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] are necessarily absent from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MONUMENT IN MEMORY OF JEAN JULES JUSSERAND

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting copy of a note from the French Ambassador, expressing appreciation on behalf of the French Government and people for the vote of the Congress authorizing the erection at Washington of a monument in memory of Mr. Jusserand, former Ambassador of France, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on the Library.

JOHN L. SUMMERS AND OTHERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation for the relief of John L. Summers, former disbursing clerk, Treasury Department, and various former Treasurers of the United States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

EDGAR M. BARBER AND LEO MARTINUZZI

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation for the relief of Edgar M. Barber, special disbursing agent, Paris, France, and Leo Martinuzzi, former customs clerk, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a petition of sundry citizens, being postal employees of St. Paul, Minn., praying for the prompt enactment of the bill (H. R. 6990) to fix the hours of duty of postal employees, and for other purposes, and the bill (H. R. 7688) to provide for the appointment and promotion of substitute postal employees, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also laid before the Senate petitions of sundry citizens of the United States, praying for an investigation of charges filed by the Women's Committee of Louisiana relative to the qualifications of the Senators from Louisiana (Mr. LONG and Mr. OVERTON), which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by a mass meeting of railroad employees, in station, tower, and telegraph service, held at Chicago, Ill., favoring the prompt enactment of legislation extending the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act to June 16, 1936, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate telegrams in the nature of memorials from several citizens of Wichita, Kans., remonstrating against the enactment of the so-called "Wheeler-Rayburn public-utilities bill", which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND presented resolutions adopted by the Medical Society of the State of New York, opposing the enactment of title 2 of the so-called "Banking Act of 1935", which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Committee Pro-Puerto Rican Economical and Political Legislation, New York City, N. Y., endorsing a legislative plan looking to the economic recovery of Puerto Rico, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

Mr. WALSH presented resolutions adopted by the Independent Milk Dealers' Association, Boston, Mass., opposing proposed amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act pertaining to the dairy industry, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Old Colony Lodge No. 1533, Loyal Order of Moose, of Plymouth, Mass., favoring the taking of necessary action for the relief of the cotton textile industry, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from A. H. Ferguson, manager transportation bureau of the New Bedford (Mass.) Board of Commerce, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation transferring the duties and functions of the Board of Army Engineers of the War Department to a new administrative division of the Government, which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

He also presented letters in the nature of petitions from H. W. Bascom, general secretary of the Newton (Mass.) Young Men's Christian Association, and F. W. Lacey, general secretary of the Melrose (Mass.) Young Men's Christian Association, praying for the enactment of the so-called "Kerr bill", being House bill 8163, pertaining to the deportation of aliens, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from Daniel M. Long, chairman substitute committee, National Association of Letter Carriers, Branch No. 34, Boston, Mass., in behalf of 350 regular substitute letter carriers of the Boston postal district, praying for the enactment of House bill 7688, known as the "Mead substitute letter carriers bill", which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of Worcester, Mass., praying for the enactment of pending legislation extending the effective period of the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act for 1 year, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of the Women's Auxiliary of the Massachusetts Civil Service Reform Association, with offices at Boston, Mass., praying for the enactment of the bill (S. 476) relating to promotions of civil-service employees, and the bill (S. 1952) extending the classified executive civil service of the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

PROPOSED BANKING ACT OF 1935

Mr. WALSH presented a letter from the executive secretary of the Massachusetts Bankers Association with an accompanying copy of a resolution adopted at the annual convention of that association, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MASSACHUSETTS BANKERS ASSOCIATION,
Boston, Mass., June 10, 1935.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Enclosed is a resolution adopted at the annual convention of the Massachusetts Bankers Association, which was held at Swampscott, Mass., on June 7, 1935. This resolution pertains to the proposed banking act of 1935.

It might interest you to know that the membership of this association at the present time is 118 national banks and 73 trust companies out of a total of 203 commercial banks, together with 98 savings banks and 54 cooperative banks. The nonmember commercial banks are the smaller type of bank, and their resources, as compared to the total resources, are negligible.

This data is set forth to inform you that the membership of this association embraces practically 100 percent of the total resources of the commercial banks of Massachusetts.

We earnestly urge you to give this resolution your consideration.

Very truly yours,

JOHN S. GWINN,
Executive Secretary.

Copy of a resolution adopted at the annual convention of the Massachusetts Bankers Association June 7, 1935

This association welcomes the enactment of laws tending to increase the safety of the funds of bank depositors, the more orderly functioning of commercial credit, and the strictest supervision of banks in accordance with established laws.

UNDER TITLE I

We believe that the basis for admission of banks applying for membership in the F. D. I. C. should be not only satisfactory proof of solvency and adequate capital but should take into consideration the general character and ability of its banking management; that the fixed rate to be charged by the F. D. I. C. should not exceed one-twelfth of 1 percent per annum.

UNDER TITLE II

We believe that title II of the Banking Act of 1935 changes so many of the fundamentals of the Federal Reserve System, and fails to cover so many possible important features of a thoroughgoing revision of our banking system, that the enactment of this section of the banking bill would be very disturbing. We would recommend that Congress set this section aside for further study and consideration.

If title II of the proposed act is to have further consideration—

We believe that the governors of the various Federal Reserve banks should be elected each year by their directors and that the approval by the Federal Reserve Board should only be required once in 3- to 5-year periods, always with the understanding that they may be removed for cause.

We believe that the Federal Reserve Board should consist of five members. The part of the bill with reference to the open-market purchases, rediscount rates and reserve requirements should be handled by a committee consisting of the Federal Reserve Board and four Federal Reserve bank governors, elected annually by the Federal Reserve bank governors, this committee of nine to have equal voting power.

We believe that the power to change the reserve requirements should have a maximum and a minimum requirement, should be of an emergency nature, and the present law we feel is sufficient to care for this emergency.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. ASHURST, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 2223) to amend section 1 of the act of July 8, 1932, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 873) thereon.

Mr. AUSTIN (for Mr. CAREY), from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2799) to provide for licensing the taking of water from the Government-owned main at Cascade Locks, Oreg., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 874) thereon.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 3018. A bill to authorize the Secretary of War to acquire by donation land at Valparaiso, in Okaloosa County, Fla., for aviation field, military, or other public purposes (Rept. No. 875); and

H. R. 7022. A bill to authorize the selection, construction, installation, and modification of permanent stations and depots for the Army Air Corps, and frontier air-defense bases generally (Rept. No. 888).

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Commerce, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 2930. A bill to provide a preliminary examination of the Sammamish River, Wash., with a view to the control of its floods (Rept. No. 876);

S. 2933. A bill to provide a preliminary examination of the Nisqually River, Wash., with a view to the control of its floods (Rept. No. 877);

S. 2934. A bill to provide a preliminary examination of the Duwamish River, Wash., with a view to control of its floods (Rept. No. 886);

S. 2938. A bill to provide a preliminary examination of the Cedar River, Wash., with a view to control of its floods (Rept. No. 878); and

S. 2950. A bill granting the consent of Congress to the county of Saline, Mo., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Missouri River at or near Miami, Mo. (Rept. No. 879).

Mr. BURKE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2321) for the relief of S. M. Price, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 880) thereon.

Mr. WHITE (for Mr. BAILEY), from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2751) for the relief of Walter C. Price and Joseph C. Lesage, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 881) thereon.

Mr. COOLIDGE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 69) to provide for the erection of a suitable memorial to the Fourth Division, American Expeditionary Forces, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 882) thereon.

Mr. WAGNER, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 144) to provide for the payment of compensation and expenses of the Railroad Retirement Board as established and operated pursuant to section 9 of the Railroad Retirement Act of June 27, 1934, and to provide for the winding up of its affairs and the disposition of its property and records, and to make an appropriation for such purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 883) thereon.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2488) for the relief of the widows of an inspector and certain special agents of the Division of Investigation, Department of Justice, killed in line of duty, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 884) thereon.

Mr. MOORE, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 1633) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 885) thereon.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2917) authorizing an appropriation to the American Legion for its use in effecting a settlement of the remainder due on, and the reorganization of, Pershing Hall, a memorial already erected in Paris, France, to the commander in chief, officers, and men of the Expeditionary Forces, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 887) thereon.

PREVENTION OF WAR PROFITEERING

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Military Affairs, for the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], I report back favorably with additional amendments the bill (H. R. 5529) to prevent profiteering in time of war and to equalize the burdens of war and thus provide for the national defense, and promote peace, and I submit a report (No. 889) thereon. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance in accordance with the original understanding.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on the 12th instant that committee presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 2591) for the relief of Lyman C. Drake.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 3043) for the relief of the State of Maine (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. STEIWER:

A bill (S. 3044) for the relief of Mrs. Don Nelson; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE:

A bill (S. 3045) providing for payment to the State of Wisconsin for its swamp lands within all Indian reservations in that State; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DUFFY. I introduce a bill as a substitute for Senate bill 2428, previously introduced by me, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

I also introduce a bill to take the place of Senate bill 2465, previously introduced by me, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. DUFFY:

A bill (S. 3046) to amend the Revenue Act of 1934 to allow as deductions from gross income contributions to unemployment-benefit funds; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 3047) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyright", approved March 4, 1909, as amended, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 3048) granting a pension to Dennis Smith; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FRAZIER:

A bill (S. 3049) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WAGNER:

A bill (S. 3050) granting the consent of Congress to the States of New York and Vermont to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Lake Champlain between Rouses Point, N. Y., and Alburg, Vt.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BARKLEY:

A bill (S. 3051) for the relief of William E. Reynolds; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WHITE:

A bill (S. 3052) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Stevenson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WHEELER:

A bill (S. 3053) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Assiniboine Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (S. 3054) to provide for the disposition of unclaimed deposits in national banks; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. SMITH:

A bill (S. 3056) for the relief of N. May Jernegan and Warren Norris Jernegan; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 3057) for the relief of John B. Jones; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 3058) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States" approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PURCHASE OF SUPPLIES AND GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

Mr. WALSH. I ask consent to introduce a bill for appropriate reference, and in view of its importance I also ask to have it printed in the RECORD. It is a brief bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received, appropriately referred, and printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 3055) to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts, loans, or grants by the United States, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in connection with all or any purchases of or contracts for construction, supplies, materials, or service, except personal services, made, extended, or modified hereafter and prior to June 30, 1937, by any executive department, independent establishment, or other agency of the United States, by the District of Columbia, or by any corporation, all the stock of which is beneficially owned by the United States (all of the foregoing being hereinafter designated as agencies of the United States), there shall be required to be included in the proposal or contract a representation or agreement that all persons in classes or employment described specifically or by reference in the invitation to bid, while engaged in the production of the supplies or in the carrying out of the contract or the production of supplies or materials or the furnishing of services in connection therewith, have been and will be paid not less than such minimum wages and employed not to exceed such maximum number of hours as shall be designated specifically or by reference in the invitation to bid, and that no person under 16 years of age has been or will be employed in the production of the supplies or the carrying out of the contract or the production of supplies or materials or the furnishing of services in connection therewith.

SEC. 2. In all or any contracts or agreements made, extended, or modified hereafter and prior to June 30, 1937, by the United States or any agency thereof, for the loan or grant of funds to any State, Territory, possession, including subdivisions and agencies thereof, municipality, the District of Columbia, person, or corporation, there shall be included a representation or agreement by the borrower or grantee, if not a governmental unit, and, whether or not a governmental unit, a covenant that it will require a representation or agreement from those with whom it contracts or from whom it makes purchases of supplies in connection with the carrying out of projects or operations wholly or in part with funds so loaned or granted to it, that all persons in classes of employment described specifically or by reference in the contract or agreement for the loan or grant by the United States or agency thereof, while engaged in the carrying out of the projects or operations or in the production of supplies or materials or the furnishing of services in connection therewith, have been and will be paid not less than such minimum wages and employed not to exceed such maximum number of hours as shall be specified in such contract or agreement for loan or grant, and that no person under 16 years of age has been or will be employed in the carrying out of such projects or operations or in the production of supplies or materials or the furnishing of services in connection therewith.

SEC. 3. Every representation or agreement made pursuant to the provisions of this act shall provide: (1) That any branch thereof shall render the contracting party liable to the United States as and for liquidated damages in a sum equal to the minimum wage represented to have been or agreed to be paid the employee or employees for the period of employment in violation of the representation or agreement; (2) that any sums due as liquidated damages may be withheld out of the moneys due on the contract; (3) that any breach thereof shall entitle the other contracting party to cancel the contract in which the representation or agreement is included; (4) that representatives of the agency of the United States, a party to or furnishing funds for the purchase or contract, may inspect the relevant pay roll and time records of the person, firm, or corporation making the representation or agreement.

SEC. 4. This act shall be applicable to contracts, otherwise subject to its provisions, entered into prior to the enactment of this act, where permitted by the terms of such contracts.

SEC. 5. The provisions of this act shall be carried out under the direction of the President and in accordance with such orders, rules, and regulations as he may issue for that purpose. The President may authorize any of his functions under this act to be performed by an agency or agencies now existing or hereafter established within the Government. The funds appropriated and made available pursuant to section 220 of the National Industrial Recovery Act by the Fourth Deficiency Act, fiscal year 1933, and by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, are hereby made available for the expenses of administration of this act.

DEVELOPMENT OF VOCATIONAL EDUCATION—AMENDMENT

Mr. POPE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2883) to provide for the further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO SOCIAL-SECURITY BILL

Mr. GEORGE submitted an amendment, and Mr. WAGNER submitted three amendments, intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to House bill 7260, the so-called "Social Security Act", which were severally ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

REGULATION OF COMMERCE IN PETROLEUM

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, on February 25 I introduced in the Senate Senate bill 2027, a bill to regulate commerce in petroleum, and for other purposes. This bill was considered by the committee and was reported favorably and is now on the calendar. When the original bill was introduced the interstate compact had not been sent to Congress. Likewise the Supreme Court decision which considerably affects the petroleum industry had not been rendered. At this time I desire to submit an amendment to this bill in the nature of a substitute and ask that the amendment as submitted be printed in the RECORD and also be printed in the usual form and lie on the table. Furthermore, Mr. President, as a part of my remarks, I submit for the RECORD a statement which I ask to have printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table and will also be printed in the RECORD, and the statement referred to by the Senator from Oklahoma will likewise be printed in the RECORD.

Amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma to the bill (S. 2027) to regulate commerce in petroleum, and for other purposes: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"FINDINGS

"SECTION 1. Petroleum is an exhaustible natural resource the prevention of the waste of which in time of peace, as well as in time of war is essential to provisions for and the maintenance and support of the Army and Navy, to the economic and efficient operation of and provision for the instrumentalities of interstate and foreign commerce, and to the economic and efficient operation of and provision for industry in the United States required for the maintenance and support of the Army and Navy. Waste of petroleum is prevented by the orderly, systematic, and scientific development of fields or pools of petroleum and by the balancing of supply with demand.

"Movement in commerce of petroleum and petroleum products in excess of current demand therefor, directly and injuriously affects commerce in petroleum among the several States and with foreign nations and causes waste of petroleum.

"To balance supply with demand and thereby to prevent waste it is necessary and desirable to coordinate commerce in petroleum among the several States and with foreign nations and to coordinate State and Federal activities with respect to petroleum.

"Petroleum moves in commerce in a constant and continuous current in which that which moves in intrastate commerce is commingled with that which moves in interstate or foreign commerce and directly affects it, so that such regulation of commerce as is herein authorized is essential to the regulation of commerce in petroleum among the several States and with foreign nations.

"CONSENT TO INTERSTATE COMPACT

"SEC. 2. The consent of Congress is hereby given to an interstate compact to conserve oil and gas, executed in the city of Dallas, Tex., the 16th day of February 1935, by the representatives of the States of Oklahoma, Texas, California, and New Mexico, and there recommended for ratification by representatives of the States of Arkansas, Colorado, Illinois, Kansas, and Michigan, and since ratified by the States of New Mexico, Kansas, Oklahoma, and Texas, for the purpose of conserving oil and gas and preventing the avoidable waste thereof within reasonable limitations by the prevention of physical waste by the means specified in articles III and IV of said compact, which compact is now deposited in the Department of State of the United States: Provided, That nothing therein or herein contained shall impair or in any manner affect, or be construed as impairing or in any manner affecting, any right, power, or jurisdiction of the United States: And provided further, That in the event it shall be found by the board created by section 3 of this act, at a hearing to which the Governors of all the compacting States, or their respective representatives, are invited to attend, that the compacting States are acting beyond the scope of the terms of the said compact or in a manner not consistent with the purposes of this act, it shall so certify to the President, who shall in such event by proclamation suspend the operation of said compact pending further consideration by the Congress, which may under said circumstances or for any other reason or at any other time withdraw its consent to and terminate said compact.

"PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATIVE BOARD

"SEC. 3. There is hereby established in the Department of the Interior the Petroleum Administrative Board, to be composed of 5 members, 1 of whom shall be chairman. The members shall be appointed by the President for 6 years, except that 2 of the original appointees shall be appointed for terms of 2 years, 2 for 4 years, and 1 for 6 years, and except that any person appointed to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of his predecessor. The members shall hold office until their successors are appointed and qualify, and shall receive compensation at the rate of $9,000 per annum. The board shall function under the general supervision of the Secretary of the Interior. The board shall appoint such qualified and trained employees as may be necessary in carrying out the purposes of this act, and their compensation shall be fixed in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. The scientific and professional employees of the board shall be selected solely upon the basis of their scientific or professional qualifications. The board from time to time shall elect a vice chairman to act in the absence of the chairman. The board shall have a seal which shall be judicially recognized.

"The board shall cooperate with executives, officials, and agencies of the States and with any agency created under the interstate compact consented to by this act in the study and investigation of the status of petroleum reserves and sources of supply to encourage the discovery and systematic and orderly development of sources of supply, to assist in improving methods of production, to study the possibility and expense of repressuring existing fields and related matters pertaining to the petroleum industry, and may hold joint hearings upon such matters with any authorized agency. It is authorized to make investigations and collect data from the industry, and to this end it may require reports from persons engaged in the industry and may examine and inspect books, records, papers, and properties for the purpose of verifying such reports and ascertaining the facts. The several departments, bureaus, and agencies of the United States shall, at its request, provide the board with records and information which they may have available pertaining to the petroleum industry. The board is authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act and to determine procedure for hearings, and it shall have the power to examine witnesses, receive evidence, administer oaths and affirmations, and to take affidavits and depositions.

"Rules and regulations issued under this act and orders or determinations made under sections 5, 6, 7, 9, and 13, before becoming effective, shall be reviewed and approved by the Secretary of the Interior if found by him to conform to the provisions of this act relating thereto.

"ADVISORY COMMITTEES

"SEC. 4. The President is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a Petroleum Advisory Committee from the petroleum industry and such other advisory committees as deemed necessary by him. The Petroleum Advisory Committee, and other advisory committees if appointed, may make recommendations to the Petroleum Administrative Board and perform such other functions as may be delegated to it by the President. No funds appropriated from the Treasury of the United States shall be expended for any purposes of such committees.

"APPROVAL OF PLANS FOR THE ORDERLY, SYSTEMATIC, AND SCIENTIFIC DEVELOPMENT OF POOLS OR FIELDS

"SEC. 5. The Board is authorized to approve voluntary agreements between and among persons engaged in the petroleum industry or plans for the orderly, systematic, and scientific development of fields or pools where it finds after hearing that such agreements or plans will protect interstate or foreign commerce, prevent waste, or aid in providing for the support and maintenance of the Army and Navy. A field or pool within the meaning of this section is any commercially productive accumulation of crude petroleum in its natural reservoir. Whenever any such agreement or plan has been executed by a majority in both number and interest of the persons having the right to produce oil from said field or pool, as determined by the Board, and approved by said Board, and the Board has reason to believe that any person is engaged in drilling or other activities affecting said field or pool which disrupt or threaten to disrupt the effective operation of the agreement or plan incorporated therein, or plan, the Board shall immediately call a hearing at a time and place convenient to all parties in interest as determined by it, and shall through the medium of such hearing determine whether the purposes of this act to protect interstate or foreign commerce, to prevent waste, or to aid in providing for the national defense, will be defeated or threatened with defeat by such drilling or other activities, and should it find that any of such purposes will be defeated or threatened with defeat, it shall order such person to cease and desist from such drilling or other activities.

"In the approval of any such agreement relating to any field or pool located within any State in which there is a duly established regulatory commission or agency charged with the duty of conserving oil and gas and preventing the waste thereof, the Board is directed to consider such agreement jointly with such commission or agency, or representatives thereof, before granting approval to such agreement.

"DETERMINATIONS OF FACT

"SEC. 6. After fair and impartial consideration of pertinent information submitted by any commission, officer, or other agency established under State law for the purpose of conserving oil and gas and preventing the physical waste thereof in any State, the systematic analysis of appropriate statistical data, and consultation with such sources of information within the petroleum industry as it may deem necessary, the Board shall determine periodically, within such limit as is consistent with the prevention of physical waste, the following facts: (1) The reasonable market demand for petroleum in the United States; (2) that part of such demand which constitutes the reasonable market demand for petroleum from each producing State, specifically determining the quantity required from current production to supply such demand from each producing State. The Board shall inform any duly constituted State authority charged under State law with the duty of regulating or restricting the production of petroleum of its said determinations and shall also give public notice of said determinations.

"In any State in which there is no State authority authorized to regulate or restrict production of petroleum or in which no such authority does regulate or restrict production, the Board or agency designated by it is authorized to and shall, if found by it necessary in order to effectuate the purposes of this act to prevent waste and to protect in interstate or foreign commerce, determine in accordance with the provisions of this section the reasonable market demand for crude petroleum from any pool, field, lease, property, storage, well, or other source of supply in such State, and to give notice of such determinations under rules and regulations prescribed by the Board: Provided, That such determinations shall be based on an equitable and ratable taking by each producer from a common source of supply: And provided further, That in such determinations there shall be no unreasonable discrimination in favor of any one such common source of supply as against another.

"QUOTAS TO PROTECT INTERSTATE COMMERCE AND PREVENT WASTE WHEN FOUND NECESSARY BECAUSE OF EXCESS PRODUCTION

"SEC. 7. When and only when the production of crude petroleum in any State exceeds the reasonable market demand therefor, as determined under this act, and the Board after hearing expressly finds that such excess supply or production directly and injuriously affects commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, and causes waste, the Board shall prescribe quotas of crude petroleum for movement in commerce in such manner and to such extent as will limit the movements of petroleum in commerce to the reasonable market demand as determined by the Board, but shall limit its quotas prescribed hereunder to such particular areas or particular sources of supply as it finds necessary in fairly accomplishing the purposes of this act to balance supply with demand and to prevent waste.

"AMENDMENT OF ACT OF FEBRUARY 22, 1935, AND COORDINATION OF IT WITH THIS ACT

"SEC. 8. The act entitled 'An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes', approved February 22, 1935 (Public, No. 14, 74th Cong.), is hereby amended by striking out section 13 thereof providing that said act shall cease to be in effect on June 16, 1937.

"All functions vested in the President by sections 5, 7, 9, and 10 of the said act of February 22, 1935, shall hereafter be vested in the Board; provided that all orders, rules, and regulations heretofore approved by the President or agency designated by him under said act shall remain in full force and effect unless and until amended or revoked under the terms of said act of February 22, 1935, as amended. Any petroleum or any constituent part thereof moved or to be moved in commerce in violation of the provisions of this act, including any quota prescribed pursuant to section 7, shall be considered 'contraband oil' and subject to the provisions of the said act of February 22, 1935, relating to 'contraband oil.'

"IMPORTS

"SEC. 9. The importation of petroleum and its products, including natural asphalt, is hereby limited as hereinafter provided to such quantities as will prevent imports of petroleum and its products, including natural asphalt, from so interfering with current domestic production by supplying an undue proportion of domestic, consumptive, and export demand for petroleum and its products, including natural asphalt, as to directly and injuriously affect commerce in petroleum among the several States and with foreign nations and cause waste of petroleum.

"The four quarters of the calendar year shall be reckoning periods. To the end of 1940, or until such time as the total domestic production plus the percentage of such reasonable market demand hereinafter allowed to imports, shall be insufficient to supply the reasonable market demand, the allowed rate of imports of crude petroleum and the products of crude petroleum, all combined, and including natural asphalt, in barrels total for any reckoning period of three calendar months, shall be 13.50 percent of the quantity of crude petroleum, determined under section 6 to be the reasonable market demand from the United States during the first month of such reckoning period. Crude petroleum or products thereof imported and supplied to vessels at American ports shall be deemed imports, excepting bunker fuel oil for foreign vessels engaged in foreign trade.

"In advance of each reckoning period the Board shall hold a hearing, consider applications for quotas, make fair and equitable allocations, and establish, within the limits herein fixed, just and reasonable quotas of crude petroleum and the various products thereof, including natural asphalt, for persons desiring to import the same during the period, in proportion to their proven trade or manufacturing demand for such imports, over and above their customary and available domestic supply, if any.

"Quotas of particular products shall not be allowed to such extent as will, on the whole, increase the normal importation ratios of such products to the aggregate of crude and other products imported, except when the Board finds a shortage in the domestic supply of such particular products, and should the allowed ratio of crude petroleum, fuel oil, gas oil, paraffin, and asphalt, in aggregate barrels, to all other products of petroleum allowed to be imported, fall below the average ratio which prevailed in the last 6 months of 1932, each barrel excess of such other products having a boiling point below 400° F. shall be deemed the equivalent of three barrels for the purpose of computing total allowable imports. Should the allowable crude-oil production for the United States for any quarter be larger or smaller proportionately than that amount fixed for the first month of any quarter or should there be an overage or shortage of actual imports in comparison with the allowable imports in a quarter, as determined on above basis, such differences shall be adjusted up or down in subsequent quarters, and the final ratio of imports to such demand for consumption in the United States and the demand for export from the United States, reduced to a monthly basis, in each instance shall be 4.50 percent to the end of 1940 or until otherwise ordered as provided in this section. Nothing herein stated shall prevent the importation of products with a boiling point above 400° F. or crude oil in different ratios to the aggregate than those which prevailed in the last 6 months of 1932.

"Whenever the total domestic production of crude petroleum and the products of crude petroleum plus that percentage of the reasonable market demand which is herein allowed to imports into this country, shall be insufficient to meet the reasonable market demand without unduly depleting domestic reserves, then the Board is directed to increase such proportion allowed to imports to an amount sufficient to supply such deficiency, upon the basis of findings made after proper hearings are held.

"The Board shall adopt and promulgate appropriate rules and regulations to permit imports in bond for export, including manufacture in bond and including oil imported under a drawback application coupled with export of resultant products, and such imports shall not be charged against import quotas or included in the computations under section 6.

"When quotas are in effect under this section it shall be unlawful for any person, except as otherwise herein provided, to import into the United States crude petroleum or any product thereof in excess of his quota or without having been assigned a quota under this section.

"No tariff, duty, or excise tax now in force shall be affected by the provisions of this act.

"COURT REVIEW

"SEC. 10. Any person aggrieved by an order issued by the Board in a proceeding under this title to which such person is a party may obtain a review of such order in the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States, within any circuit wherein such person resides or has his principal place of business, or in the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, by filing in such court within 60 days after the entry of such order, a written petition praying that the order of the Board be modified or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon any member of the Board, and thereupon the Board shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record upon which the order complained of was entered. Upon the filing of such transcript such court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to affirm, modify, and enforce or set aside such order, in whole or in part. No objection to the order of the Board shall be considered by the court unless such objection shall have been urged before the Board. The finding of the Board as to the facts, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive. If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Board, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Board and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The Board may modify its findings as to the facts, by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive, and its recommendation, if any, for the modification or setting aside of the original order. The judgment and decree of the court, affirming, modifying, and enforcing or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such order of the Board, shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 346 and 347).

"ENFORCEMENT

"SEC. 11. If any person fails or neglects to obey any order, rule, or regulation of the Board while the same is in effect, the Board or the United States by its Attorney General may apply to an appropriate district court of the United States for the enforcement of such order, rule, or regulation. The court shall enforce obedience to such order, rule, or regulation by a writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise.

"PENALTIES

"SEC. 12. Any person who shall violate any provision of this act or any order, rule, or regulation issued or promulgated or quota prescribed pursuant to this act shall be guilty of an offense and upon conviction thereof in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $2,000 or by imprisonment for not longer than 6 months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, and each day such violation continues shall be deemed a separate offense.

"VOLUNTARY INDUSTRIAL AGREEMENTS

"SEC. 13. The Petroleum Advisory Committee shall be authorized to assist in the formulation of voluntary agreements between members of the industry whereby nonintegrated or semi-integrated producers, refiners, and marketers may compete in their operations on a fair basis with the producing, refining, and marketing units of integrated organizations in the oil industry, or whereby such nonintegrated or semi-integrated producers, refiners, and marketers may be assured fair access to markets. To this end it may provide for the holding of meetings and conferences of members of the industry. Each such agreement shall be valid and effective when the Board finds that such agreement will accomplish the purposes herein stated and approves said agreement. The Board shall withdraw its approval of any such agreement whenever it finds that such agreement or operations thereunder fail to accomplish the purposes herein stated. Each such agreement shall contain a provision for the payment of adequate minimum wages to employees and the maintenance of fair maximum hours of labor for employees. Such minimum wages shall in no case be less than the respective scale in effect June 15, 1935.

"SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

"SEC. 14. If any provision of this act or any clause, sentence, or part hereof be held unconstitutional or invalid for any reason, or the applicability thereof to any person, circumstance, commodity, or class of transactions with respect to any commodity be held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and the applicability of such provisions to other persons, circumstances, commodities, and classes of transactions shall not be affected thereby.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 15. The words defined in this section shall have the following meaning when found in this act, to wit:

"(a) 'Petroleum industry' means the producing, selling, shipping, processing, refining, transporting, or otherwise dealing in petroleum or the products thereof, including natural gasoline and natural gas produced in conjunction with petroleum.

"(b) 'State' means the District of Columbia, and any State, Territory, or possession of the United States.

"(c) 'Person' means any natural person, corporation, association, partnership, joint-stock company, business trust, or an unincorporated organization or any receiver, trustee, or other liquidating agent of any of the foregoing.

"(d) 'Reasonable market demand' means the amount of petroleum, minus proper adjustments for imports and reasonable seasonal withdrawals from storage, required to be produced to meet the current consumptive demand for petroleum and petroleum products, plus proper adjustments for exports (exclusive of exports from import in bond) and reasonable seasonal additions to storage.

"APPROPRIATION AUTHORIZED

"SEC. 16. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of this act. Such appropriation shall be available for the payment of the transportation and Federal travel allowance of duly authorized State officials to whom proper travel authority has been issued by the Board for necessary travel in connection with this act.

"SHORT TITLE

"SEC. 17. This act may be cited as the 'Federal Petroleum Act.'"

Amend the title to read as follows: "A bill to consent to an interstate compact, to conserve petroleum resources, to regulate commerce in petroleum, and for other purposes."

The statement submitted by Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma is as follows:

When the original oil bill, S. 2027, was introduced by me, the interstate compact between oil-producing States had not been submitted to Congress. No decision by our Supreme Court had defined the powers of the Federal Government in its relation to industry as provided by the National Industrial Recovery Act. Some uncertainty existed as to how far it was necessary to go with legislation affecting the industries of the country.

Much confusion heretofore existing has now been clarified. The benefits the industry was receiving under the N. I. R. A. have now ceased. Something is necessary to enable the petroleum industry to maintain the service it renders to the country in preserving for continued use a commodity so essential to our welfare and defense.

The Federal petroleum bill, as amended to meet the recent N. R. A. decision of the Supreme Court, gives congressional consent to the interstate compact, safeguards the rights of every oil-producing State, offers the aid and assistance of the Federal Government to these States, assures the scientific determination of the national consumptive demand, guarantees to each oil-producing State its right and equitable share of the markets for petroleum and its products against any importers of foreign oil or any State or group of States which might attempt to seize more than its rightful and proportionate share of those markets, and by so doing assures continuity of employment to labor, continues the purchasing power of the oil States and protects the Nation against the wasteful dissipation of a natural resource invaluable in time of war.

If the interstate oil compact, to which Congress consents in this measure, will do the job, well and good. We want the job done. And if the compact is sufficiently all-embracing and if the officials operating under the compact and under its authority can regulate production satisfactorily and distribution satisfactorily, then, of course, there would be no occasion for further action by the Federal Government. But in the event the compact for any reason should not work satisfactorily, it is thought by many to be advisable to have congressional legislation in the nature of a sort of a reserve which we might fall back on.

The administrative board set up in this measure is directed to cooperate with the agencies of the interstate oil compact and to make studies and investigations and to provide data and statistics which should assure the States in the compact the fullest possible information as well as direct assistance of the Federal Government if they should require it.

The bill provides for an Advisory Committee from the industry to cooperate with the new Administrative Board and also to assist in the formulation of voluntary agreements between members of the industry whereby nonintegrated or semi-integrated producers, refiners, and marketers may compete in their operations on a fair basis with the producing, refining, and marketing units of integrated organizations in the oil industry or whereby such nonintegrated or semi-integrated producers, refiners, and marketers may be assured fair access to markets. Each such agreement shall contain a provision for the payment of adequate minimum wages to employees and the maintenance of fair maximum hours of labor for employees.

To protect each State in its proper share of the national market, the Board is directed to periodically determine, after fair and impartial consideration of all facts, the reasonable market demand for petroleum in this country and that part of such demand which constitutes the reasonable market demand from each producing State and to furnish these figures to any duly constituted State regulatory body. In States where there is no such authority the Board or agency designated by it is authorized to determine the reasonable market demand for crude petroleum from pools, wells, or other source of supply in the State, basing these determinations on an equitable and ratable taking by each producer from a common source of supply.

This bill does not regulate production in any State. No quotas for production are provided. When production in any State exceeds the reasonable market demand, then the Board, after hearings, is authorized to propose quotas for movement in commerce to limit such movements in commerce to the reasonable market demand from that State, limiting the quotas prescribed to such particular areas or sources of supply as it may find necessary.

Monthly imports are limited by the act to a definite proportion of the reasonable market demand as ascertained by the Board, supplies for vessels being deemed imports, except bunker oil for foreign vessels engaged in foreign trade. Allocations and quotas are to be made to importers in proportion to their proven trade or manufacturing demands.

Following is a detailed discussion of the act as it has been corrected to bring it into line with the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States:

Section 1 of the bill presents findings which are based upon the exhaustive hearings which have already been held by both branches of the Congress. It sets forth that petroleum is an exhaustible natural resource essential to the national defense, prevention of whose waste is essential to the national defense and to the economic operation of the instrumentalities of interstate and foreign commerce, while supply of crude petroleum in excess of current demand directly and injuriously affects interstate commerce and causes waste. The findings hold that "Petroleum moves in commerce in a constant and continuous current in which that which moves in intrastate commerce is commingled with that which moves in interstate or foreign commerce and directly affects it, so that such regulation of commerce as is herein authorized is essential to the regulation of commerce in petroleum among the several States and with foreign nations.

The second section of the bill is formal consent of Congress to the interstate compact executed at Dallas, February 16.

Section 3 establishes in the Interior Department the Petroleum Administrative Board of five members, at $9,000 a year for 6 years, their terms being staggered so that appointments of part of the Board may be made each 2 years. The authority of this Board is very positively limited by the bill. It is directed to make studies for the benefit of the industry as well as to encourage the discovery and orderly development of new sources of supply. The Board is authorized to approve voluntary agreements for the development of fields or pools where it finds, after hearing, that such agreements will protect interstate or foreign commerce, prevent waste, or aid in providing for the support and maintenance of the Army and Navy. It is also authorized to approve voluntary industrial agreements which may be presented to it by the Petroleum Advisory Committee to be nominated from the industry by the President. This committee is authorized to hold meetings and conferences of members in the industry to formulate these agreements which will make possible competition of others with the producing, refining, and marketing units of integrated organizations.

Scientific determination of the reasonable market demand for petroleum in this country is to be made by the Board after impartial consideration of all appropriate data, and also of that part of such demand which properly belongs to each producing State, furnishing this information to the proper State regulatory authorities, or where there is no such authority, making further determinations as to the reasonable market demand for crude from any source of supply in such a State, provided that in such determinations there should be no unreasonable discrimination in favor of any one common source of supply against another, and that these determinations are based on equitable and ratable takings of each producer from a common source.

When necessary to protect interstate commerce and prevent waste, because of excessive production in any State over the reasonable market demand from that State, the Board is authorized to propose quotas for movement in commerce.

The bill strikes out the expiration date of the Connally hot-oil bill.

In section 9, imports are definitely limited by the bill to 4.5 percent of the market demand. Reckoning periods are set up covering the 4 quarters of the calendar year. At such reckoning periods the Board is authorized to establish quotas for the various importers, these quotas not to increase the normal importation ratio of particular products to the aggregate of crude and other products imported except in case of a shortage in the domestic supply of such product. The limitation on such imports is to continue until 1940, or until such time as the total domestic production plus this percentage of market demand permitted to imports shall be insufficient to meet the demand in this country, in which case the Board is directed to increase the proportion allowed to such imports to the amount necessary to provide for such deficiency.

Sections 10, 11, and 12 provide for court review, enforcement of regulations by United States district courts, and impose penalties of $2,000 or 6 months' imprisonment, or both. Section 13 authorizes the formulation of voluntary industrial agreements through the industrial advisory committee which is set up in the industry. The remainder of the bill covers the separability provisions, definitions, and authorization of appropriation.

BIRTHDAY OF BRIG. GEN. AARON SIMON DAGGETT

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I submit a resolution, which I send to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 151) was read, as follows:

Whereas Brig. Gen. Aaron Simon Daggett, United States Army, retired, celebrates his ninety-eighth birthday on June 14, 1935; and

Whereas General Daggett is the oldest officer on the retired list of the United States Army, the oldest officer who served during the Civil War and the Spanish-American War; and

Whereas Gen. Aaron Simon Daggett, who was born at Green Corner, Maine, June 14, 1837, and who enlisted as a private in Company E of the Fifth Maine Volunteer Infantry on April 27, 1861, served throughout the Civil War, attaining the rank of lieutenant colonel, participated in 18 battles of the Civil War, was twice wounded, and thrice commended for gallant and meritorious service during the Civil War; and

Whereas General Daggett served during the Spanish-American War and participated in the battle at San Juan, Cuba, in July 1898, and later participated in the Philippines in the battles at Imus River and Bacoor; and

Whereas he later served as a colonel of the Fourteenth Infantry in China and was recommended for gallantry in the Battle of Yangtsun; and

Whereas although all the allied troops participating in the suppression of the Boxer Rebellion endeavored to be the first to reach and scale Pekin's "Chinese city" wall and open the massive gates from within, this feat was accomplished by troops of the Fourteenth Infantry, commanded by then Colonel Daggett, who, with his troops, was also the first of the allies to enter the imperial city and who had command of the "forbidden city (innermost and most holy)" within his grasp when General Chaffee's order to cease firing was received; and

Whereas the military record of Gen. Aaron Simon Daggett will forever serve as an inspiring influence to American youth, instilling in them the quality of patriotism and the desire to freely and voluntarily serve in the defense of their country: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the United States Senate hereby felicitates and congratulates Gen. Aaron Simon Daggett on his ninety-eighth birthday and acknowledges with gratitude the distinguished, patriotic service which he has rendered to his country; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be appropriately inscribed and presented to General Daggett by the Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. The language of the resolution sets forth its objective. It congratulates General Daggett upon his birthday and the distinguished service he has rendered to the country. He is the oldest living retired Army officer in America. A similar resolution passed the House of Representatives today. I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

CUSTODY OF FEDERAL DOCUMENTS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6323) to provide for the custody of Federal proclamations, orders, regulations, notices, and other documents, and for the prompt and uniform printing and distribution thereof, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. BARKLEY, Mr. MCKELLAR, and Mr. NORBECK conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1611) to authorize an exchange of lands between the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Co. and the United States at Quantico, Va., with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2756) authorizing the Tlingit and Haida Indians of Alaska to bring suit in the United States Court of Claims, and conferring jurisdiction upon said court to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment upon any and all claims which said Indians may have, or claim to have, against the United States, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7982) to amend the Migratory Bird Hunting Stamp Act of March 16, 1934, and certain other acts relating to game and other wildlife administered by the Department of Agriculture, and for other purposes, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7160) to provide for research into basic laws and principles relating to agriculture and to provide for the further development of cooperative agricultural extension work and the more complete endowment and support of land-grant colleges; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. JONES, Mr. FULMER, and Mr. HOPE were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R.

8021) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. LUDLOW, Mr. SNYDER, Mr. ZIONCHECK, Mr. DOCKWEILER, Mr. MORAN, Mr. BUCHANAN, and Mr. POWERS were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 5532. An act to provide for the acquisition of a portrait of Thomas Walker Gilmer;

H. R. 5730. An act to amend section 3 (b) of an act entitled "An act to establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties; to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes", approved March 27, 1934; and

H. R. 7590. An act to create a Central Statistical Committee and a Central Statistical Board, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 410. An act to provide fees to be charged by the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

S. 2100. An act to amend an act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia", approved March 3, 1901, as amended, by adding three new sections to be numbered 802 (a), 802 (b), and 802 (c), respectively.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 5532. An act to provide for the acquisition of a portrait of Thomas Walker Gilmer; and

H. R. 5730. An act to amend section 3 (b) of an act entitled "An act to establish the composition of the United States Navy, with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties; to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, and for other purposes", approved March 27, 1934; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

H. R. 7590. An act to create a Central Statistical Committee and a Central Statistical Board, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

EXPENSES OF N. R. A. ADMINISTRATION

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I intended day before yesterday, when we were considering the N. R. A. joint resolution, to have inserted in the RECORD a statement appearing in the New York Times of that date, which shows that the cost of the N. R. A., that is the cost of the employees and the various administrative agencies, codes, and so on, amounted to $93,884,596, and that does not include many other costs, figures as to which are not available. I ask that the statement be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, June 12, 1935]

COST OF N. R. A. RULE PUT AT $93,884,595—EXPENSE OF ADMINISTERING 578 CODES IN 2 YEARS REVEALED BY CONFERENCE BOARD—SOME ITEMS NOT COVERED—AMOUNTS SPENT BY INDUSTRIES AND INDIVIDUALS NOT LISTED IN NATIONAL STUDY

The cost of administering the N. R. A. and its 578 codes in the 2 years ending this month has been $93,884,595, according to a report of a study made public yesterday by the National Industrial Conference Board.

This amount represents merely the general administrative cost of the N. R. A. entailed for industry and the Government. Additional costs not included in the total are the expenses of code formulation, outlays of individuals attending hearings, litigation expenditures in connection with code enforcement, additional cost of manufacture under the codes, and business men's time spent on code problems.

COST OF ACTIVITY ITEMIZED

The total is distributed in the report as follows:

Code Authority expenditures	$71,704,406
National Recovery Administration	18,110,091
Interior Department, administration of petroleum code	2,214,963
Agricultural Adjustment Administration, code administration	565,646
National Labor Relations Board	1,214,489
National Steel Labor Relations Board	25,000
Textile Labor Relations Board	50,000
Total	93,884,595

The report points out that expenditures multiplied as the code system became more extensive. Code authority costs in the last year approximately doubled those of the earlier period.

"In the construction industry annual code administration costs amounted to about $8,400,000, to which the general contractors division alone contributed over $2,700,000," the report said. "The combined annual cost for 18 industries engaged in the production or distribution of construction materials and supplies was over $7,900,000, including $4,900,000 for the administration of the code of the lumber and timber products industry and its 102 divisions and subdivisions.

"The various distributive trades, exclusive of those dealing in construction materials, and including 21 industries together with 11 divisions of the wholesaling trade, showed annual expenditures of $9,900,000.

"The 1934 budget of the motor-vehicle retailing trade alone amounted to over $2,000,000. A total of 24 industries producing various finished articles of clothing indicated a combined annual cost of $4,900,000.

"Exceptionally small budgets were those of the haircloth industry, the animal soft hair industry, and the cylinder-mold and dandy-roll industry, in each of which annual costs below $1,000 were indicated.

GOVERNMENT AGENCIES' EXPENSE

"Three governmental agencies which incurred expenditures in connection with the administration of codes—the National Recovery Administration, the Department of the Interior, and the Department of Agriculture—cost for the 2-year period ending June 30, 1935, approximately $20,900,000.

"The National Recovery Administration expended in the 1934 fiscal year $6,632,491. Estimated expenditures for the 1935 fiscal year showed an increase of $11,477,600.

"Expenditures in connection with the administration of the code of the petroleum industry by the Department of the Interior included the following reported items: Oil regulations, emergency expenditures, actual, 1934, $533,255; estimated, 1935, $81,700; Petroleum Administrative Board, actual, 1934, $117,608; estimated, 1935, $82,400; Petroleum Administration, none in 1934; estimated, 1935, $1,400,000. The combined total for the 2-year period ending June 30, 1935, indicated a cost of $2,214,963.

"The Agricultural Adjustment Administration of the Department of Agriculture had joint supervision with the Recovery Administration over a few codes, the latter agency dealing primarily with the labor provisions. The reported expenditures of the A. A. A. in connection with the administration of the codes amounted to $21,646 in 1934 and were estimated at $544,000 for 1935.

"The National Labor Relations Board involved an actual cost of $199,489 in 1934 and an estimated cost of $1,015,000 for 1935, or a total of $1,214,489 for the 2-year period. The estimated expenditures of the National Steel Labor Relations Board and of the Textile Labor Relations Board for the year ending June 30, 1935, were $25,000 and $50,000, respectively."

ESCAPING ELECTRICAL BONDAGE—ARTICLE BY ERNEST W. GIBSON, JR.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an article appearing in the Vermonter, entitled "Escaping From Electrical Bondage" by Ernest W. Gibson, Jr.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Vermonter, May 1935]

ESCAPING FROM ELECTRICAL BONDAGE

By Ernest W. Gibson, Jr.

Brattleboro is a town of nearly 10,000 population. It is located on the Connecticut River, which is a great natural-power resource. There are other natural-power resources within a very short distance of Brattleboro. Notwithstanding this fact the town of Brattleboro until the year 1930 was being obliged to pay very high rates for electricity.

In 1906 there existed in Brattleboro two corporations—the Brattleboro Gas Light Co., which served the residents with both gas and electricity, and the Brattleboro Street Railway Co., operating between West Brattleboro and Fort Dummer. The street-railway company was practically entirely locally financed. Originally this stock was all purchased by natives of Brattleboro for $100 a share. In 1906 a representative came to Brattleboro to purchase the local street-railway and the gas-light companies. Bickmore & Co. were serving as the purchasing agent for the Twin State Gas & Electric Co. Bickmore & Co. secured a local citizen to go around to the holders of the stock of the street-railway company and to purchase that stock, if possible, for $25 a share and, if not possible to do that, the purchasing agent was authorized to throw in with that $25, $25 worth of preferred stock in the utility company.

Through this citizen all of the stock and assets of the Brattleboro Street Railway Co. were purchased for $27,000, immediately sold to the Twin State Gas & Electric Co., and placed on its books at a valuation of approximately $250,000.

As far as it is possible to determine, Bickmore & Co. purchased the Brattleboro Gas Light Co. at relatively the same time for approximately $200,000 and immediately transferred the property to the utility company, which immediately placed the Brattleboro Gas Light Co. on its books at a valuation of about $500,000.

By these two transactions the Twin State Gas & Electric Co. wrote up the purchase price of the Brattleboro Street Railway Co. and the Brattleboro Gas Light Co. from about $230,000 to $750,000. Since that time this write-up has been kept in the fixed capital of the utility company, a basis upon which it attempts to base its rates. In the following years proper depreciation was not charged on either the gas-light or Brattleboro street railway properties. In 1923 the Twin State Gas & Electric Co. entirely abandoned the Brattleboro street-railway system, but retains its valuation of $220,000 today in the fixed capital of the Twin State Gas & Electric Co.

The records of the Twin State Gas & Electric Co. for the years between 1906 and 1913 have been entirely lost or destroyed. The company's history indicates the reason for this. In 1913 the Twin State Gas & Electric Co. was forced to break down into component parts its valuation of its Brattleboro properties, to wit, $920,019.45.

A significant thing happened as a result. The utility company, probably not daring to put too large a fixed capital upon its electrical division in Brattleboro, placed its electrical railroad in the valuation covering its gas plant, and that is where the $220,000 worth of abandoned street railroad is today.

In 1929 some of the younger people of Brattleboro, feeling that the Twin State company was entirely too arbitrary in its dealings with customers and that it was charging exorbitant rates to consumers, determined that they would investigate the company and see if a rate reduction could not be brought about and a better attitude secured toward its customers.

After a preliminary study was made a complaint was filed early in March 1929 to the Public Service Commission of Vermont, alleging that the Twin State was charging too high rates for electricity, was producing gas of a low quality, and that its rate schedule in general for electricity was inequitable. This was done because it had come to our group's attention that the Legislature of the State of Vermont in 1929 had appropriated $5,000 for the use of the public service commission to conduct a State-wide investigation of existing rates. Our group desired some of that spent in investigating the Brattleboro situation. The public service commission would not grant us any money for this purpose.

Before I go further I might state that the Twin State Gas & Electric Co. was in 1930 completely controlled by the Mid-West Utilities group, which in turn was completely controlled by Samuel Insull.

Regardless of the denial by the commission of our request for funds, we continued to make a study and we again asked for a hearing. Early in 1930 the Insull representatives were considering separating the properties of the Twin State Gas & Electric Co. in New Hampshire from their properties in Vermont and it was necessary for them to have a hearing on this. All this time we were urging a reduction by public statements and by letters to the public service commission.

On April 4, 1930, some of us were asked to meet Mr. Buttrick, president of the Twin State, and Chairman Shaw of the public service commission, at the Hotel Windham in Bellows Falls. This we did. On April 28, 1930, we were advised by letter from Chairman Shaw that the company had informed him that it was considering modifying electrical rates in Brattleboro. At that time our rates were as follows:

First 25 kilowatt-hours per month at 10 cents per kilowatt-hour.
Next 25 kilowatt-hours per month at 9 cents per kilowatt-hour.
Next 50 kilowatt-hours per month at 8 cents per kilowatt-hour.
Next 1,400 kilowatt-hours per month at 6 cents per kilowatt-hour.
All over 1,500 kilowatt-hours per month at 5 cents per kilowatt-hour.
Minimum charge, $1 per month.

Under that rate 100 kilowatt-hours cost $3.75; 60 kilowatt-hours cost $5.55.

This modification was to go into effect if we would desist in our efforts. So for the time being we desisted.

On June 2, 1930, new rates were issued.

Under these new rates, which were a complete change, for an 8-room house 100 kilowatt-hours cost $6.70; 60 kilowatt-hours cost $5.10.

Still our group felt that these were not satisfactory. We so notified the Twin State and we let it be publicly known that we were considering urging the town to go into a municipal ownership of an electric plant. Shortly thereafter on December 5, 1930, the Twin State Co. issued another alleged rate reduction.

Under that rate schedule for an 8-room house 100 kilowatt-hours cost $6.40 and 60 kilowatt-hours cost $4.80.

There the matter rested until the Federal Trade Commission published its report, which showed how the Brattleboro Street Railroad, which had been abandoned a long time, was still a part of the fixed capital of the Twin State. Thereupon in the fall of 1932 our group asked the selectmen of the town of Brattleboro to request an investigation by the public service commission into electric rates existing in Brattleboro.

The matter of this hearing was continued along from time to time through no fault of the public service commission, but because we who were interested were unable to get financial assistance that we might have an unbiased appraisal of the electrical division of the Twin State. This dragged along for about a year, and then in desperation our group determined to bring the matter to a head. We asked the town meeting in 1934 to approve an investigation of the feasibility of establishing a municipal electric plant and to make an appropriation for this investigation. That this move would be made became known to the electric company in the latter part of 1933. Shortly thereafter, on February 7, 1934, the company issued another rate reduction.

According to that rate an eight-room house would get 100 kilowatt-hours for $5.75 and 60 kilowatt-hours for $4.15.

Regardless of this rate reduction, the article was placed in the town-meeting warrant to have a committee appointed to consider the advisability of the town's establishing a municipal electric plant and an appropriation of $750 was asked. This move was bitterly opposed by the Twin State Co. in the Brattleboro Reformer and by friends of the company at the town meeting. Nevertheless, by a vote of 1,403 to 601, this article was adopted and a committee of five was appointed thereafter by the selectmen. None of the committee appointed were active supporters of the municipal-plant movement, yet the committee reported favoring the principle of municipal ownership, but recommending further study before definite steps were taken.

Fearful that the town would advocate a municipal plant, the Twin State Co. before the town meeting of 1935 issued another rate reduction February 1, 1935, which was as follows:

First 20 kilowatt-hours per month at 8 cents per kilowatt-hour.
Next 20 kilowatt-hours per month at 5 cents per kilowatt-hour.
Next 40 kilowatt-hours per month at 3 cents per kilowatt-hour.
All used in excess of 80 kilowatt-hours per month at 2 cents.

Under the new rate anyone could purchase 100 kilowatt-hours for $4.20 and 60 kilowatt-hours for $3.20.

Compare the rate schedule in effect for several years when we started to investigate this matter with the rate schedule now put in effect by the Twin State Co., voluntarily, through its fear of municipal competition:

For 100 kilowatt-hours, January 1, 1930, $8.75.
For 100 kilowatt-hours, March 1, 1935, $4.20.
For 60 kilowatt-hours, January 1, 1930, $5.50.
For 60 kilowatt-hours, March 1, 1935, $3.20.

The residential users are not the only ones who have been benefited by our present investigation. Commercial and power users have been benefited by reductions. The Twin State itself says that it has caused a saving to consumers of electricity in Brattleboro of $50,000 annually in the reductions made from June 1930 until February 1935. Fifty thousand dollars a year saved to the inhabitants of any small community speaks for itself.

Our group feels that a proper rate has not yet been given to Brattleboro by the Twin State Co. It is our belief from the study we have made that the rate in Brattleboro should start at 5 cents and should go progressively downward from that top. We feel that a municipal plant can make money on such a rate. The town of Hudson, Massachusetts, which is a town similar to Brattleboro, has such a rate. That plant is a municipal plant.

The latest move of the opponents of municipal ownership and of the opponents of reasonable electric-light rates is to insist that no town can go into the business of distribution of electricity and finance the same without a vote of two-thirds of those present and attending the meeting called for that purpose. In that way the power companies and those interested in their behalf are seeking to take away from the consumer the most effective club he has had with which to enforce a reduction of light rates, the great force of public opinion.

We do not require our vote in town meeting whereby we determine our tax rate to be carried by a two-thirds vote nor do we elect our officers by requiring a two-thirds vote. But the argument now is, before we can issue bonds to pay for the installation of a municipal electric system, two-thirds of those present and voting must approve of this. That certainly is far removed from the principles of democracy. It is the practice and first step toward the creation of an oligarchy.

Once more, before I conclude, I ask each and every one of you that reads this article to take your pad and pencil and compare what you actually pay for lights with what you would pay if you lived in Brattleboro today. Remember that the present Brattleboro rates were only obtained through an aroused public opinion and a fear on the part of the utility company of that aroused public opinion.

Vermont is a natural site for power. Cheap power should be abundant to residents of this State because they are fortunate to live in such surroundings, but cheap power is not available to residents of Vermont. The reason? You know as well as I. We have given away our natural resources.

PUBLIC UTILITIES' PROFITS IN NEW YORK

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in the New York Times of June 12 appeared an article showing $27,000,000 profit by utilities on an investment of $29,300,000, as revealed before a committee of the New York Legislature making investigation of utilities of that State. I ask unanimous consent that the entire article may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, June 12, 1935]

$27,000,000 PROFIT BY UTILITY BARED—10-YEAR NET BY CONSOLIDATED ON A $29,300,000 INVESTMENT IN WESTCHESTER COMPANY—$23,000,000 "WATER" SEEN—OFFICER SOUGHT AS WITNESS "RESIGNED OR DISAPPEARED", MACK HEARING IS TOLD

The Consolidated Gas system has invested $29,300,000 in cash in the Westchester Lighting Co. since 1925 and has received more than $27,000,000 in dividends from the subsidiary over the same period, according to testimony yesterday before the legislative committee investigating public utilities.

The Consolidated system has owned the Westchester company since 1904. It acquired the entire stock then without paying any cash, nor did it invest any new money in the company until 1925, the testimony showed.

The rapid return to the Consolidated on its Westchester investment was the high light in a day of testimony that revealed tactics by utility companies that were characterized either by witnesses or by John E. Mack, the committee's counsel, as "the use of burglar tools", "corporate acrobatics", and "plain watering of stock."

$23,000,000 INFLATION SEEN

It was shown that from 1900 to 1904, with the United Gas Improvement Co., of Philadelphia, running the Westchester company, a $3,000,000 company became a $30,000,000 company, the testimony indicating that $23,000,000 of the increase was water.

Charges were made at the hearing that abandoned gas-tank sites, garages, and land on which wrecked and dismantled gas plants were the principal structures, were included in the Westchester company rate base as "used and useful property."

One witness declared that when the chairman of the board of directors of the Westchester company was wanted for an explanation of how he sold a piece of property, owned by a company of his, to the lighting company at an apparently inflated value, "he either resigned or disappeared", and has not been found to date.

FEARON ATTACKS COMMISSION

These and other charges about items in rate bases led State Senator George R. Fearon, member of the committee, to demand to know "what the public service commission has been doing about it all these years." He said that the people of Westchester "have been giving the legislature hell for these conditions, and its about time they were told where the responsibility lies."

His attempt to persuade Mr. Mack to investigate the public service commission at this time failed, the committee counsel reiterating that he did not intend to look into the commission until he had finished investigating the rates and could report whether rate regulation by the commission had failed.

The final flare-up of the day came when Mr. Mack accused E. L. Phillips & Co., of which Ellis L. Phillips is the head, of violating the law prohibiting the practice of law by a corporation. The Phillips Co., according to the testimony, maintained a legal department to serve itself and its affiliates, and charged the cost of the legal department, plus 20 percent overhead, plus a 5-percent fee. The practice was ended in 1932 and any prosecution is outlawed by the statute of limitations, Mr. Mack explained after adjournment.

The hearing was the first held since Governor Lehman signed the $300,000 appropriation measure for the continuance of the committee's work.

THE COMPANY'S GENESIS TOLD

The hearing opened with William T. Harris, assistant counsel to the committee, as the witness. Mr. Harris testified that in 1900, 14 small companies, with capital stock worth $3,403,550 on the market, were merged to form the Westchester Lighting Co. The Westchester Co. assumed the obligations of the smaller companies, and issued securities of its own at a face value of $14,177,600 in exchange for the stock of the smaller companies.

No surplus existed to justify the $10,000,000 increase in securities, nor was any plant added, the witness testified. The U. G. I. Co., which controlled the Westchester Co., put another $1,300,000 "water" in by accepting that amount for canceling one service contract it had with the subsidiary, and then writing out a new one a few months later, the witness brought out.

In 1904 U. G. I. sold the property to the Consolidated Gas by what was termed "a curious bit of corporate acrobatics." The following transaction took place all in one day, the testimony showed:

A "24-hour corporation" known as the "New York & Westchester Lighting Co." was formed, and all the physical properties of the Westchester company, but not the franchises, were transferred to it. It issued $12,500,000 bonds to the U. G. I. to pay for the property. Then the U. G. I. transferred all the stock of the Westchester Lighting Co. to the Consolidated Gas Co., the sole consideration being the guaranteeing by the Consolidated of all the obligations of the Westchester company. The "dummy" company then was merged back into the Westchester company and the $12,500,000 bonds became the liability of the Westchester Lighting Co., and guaranteed by the Consolidated.

Thus the fixed capital grew from $19,000,000 to $31,500,000 without any physical addition to the plant, according to the testimony.

The witness testified under questioning that the natural tendency of the companies is to try to keep their rate base equal to the securities outstanding, or in excess of them, and he therefore contended that the transaction, despite company disclaimers, did affect the rate base.

No additional money was put into the company from then on, except sums used for construction purposes, for which bonds were issued, the testimony continued.

The following table shows the actual cash investment made by the Consolidated after 1925, the net earnings after all charges, and the dividends declared:

Year	Total cash investments	Net income	Dividends
1925	$12,970,000	$2,017,118	$907,900
1926	12,970,000	2,226,180	907,900
1927	22,500,000	2,949,827	1,583,049
1928	22,500,000	3,750,919	2,100,000
1929	22,500,000	4,488,622	2,100,000
1930	22,500,000	4,328,315	4,200,000
1931	29,300,000	4,220,752	4,517,333
1932	29,300,000	4,031,579	4,180,000
1933	29,300,000	3,473,748	3,803,800
1934	29,000,000	2,310,324	2,926,100

OLD PLANT IN RATE BASE

The committee then turned to testimony concerning the old Yonkers Gas Works at Ashburton Avenue, Yonkers. The plant was abandoned in 1924 and dismantled in 1927, and it has been on the market, for sale or lease, several times since then. The witness, Mr. Harris, showed that the land, and some of the delapidated buildings, still figure in the rate base at a value of $971,000.

"Was there a fire here?" Judge Mack asked, after looking at a picture of the property taken by a member of his staff.

"A fire wouldn't have hurt any," Mr. Harris responded.

A company statement, issued during the hearing, declared that the testimony was immaterial, since the gas companies no longer determine their charges on a rate base, but by competition, since they earn only about 2 percent on their investment. About $685,000 of the amount should have been retired, however, Randall J. Le Boeuf, Jr., company counsel, said.

After going at length into the fact that the property was used barely at all, even for storage purposes, Mr. Mack took up the acquisition by the Westchester Lighting Co. of a piece of property in Ossining.

The Ossining parcel was owned, and used as a car barn, by the Hudson River & Eastern Traction Co. Its president, and owner of half the stock, was F. A. Stratton, who also was president of the Westchester Lighting Co. until 1927, when he became chairman of the board.

The trolley company ceased operation in May 1926, and by 1928 all its assets had been liquidated except the car barn, which the lighting company was renting for a garage at $100 a month. In 1928 it bought the property, 0.6 of an acre, with the old building, for $25,000, or at the rate of $40,000 an acre. It bought a half acre of adjoining property soon afterward for $2,000, or $4,000 an acre, according to the testimony.

To show that the car barn was of no value, testimony was introduced that the company had to spend $36,000 to repair it.

"RESIGNED OR DISAPPEARED"

When Mr. Stratton was first sought for questioning, the committee was informed he was in Florida. Later, according to the testimony, he was reached by telephone at his home, was asked to let himself be questioned, and since has not been located.

"Is he still chairman of the board?" Mr. Mack asked.

"Well, he either resigned or disappeared", the witness answered.

Later the witness sought to prove by figures on assessed valuations and the company's own insurance system that the Westchester Lighting Co. property was carried at a book value 90 percent higher than its present actual value.

This led to the attack on the public service commission. Senator Fearon asked what procedure the public service commission followed in establishing valuations. Mr. Mack told him that the United States Supreme Court and the appellate division in this State had ruled that a number of factors not considered by the public service commission must be taken into account as factors in a rate base.

At this point, former Speaker Joseph A. McGinnies said:

"Judge Mack, my recollection is—I may be mistaken—that the public service commission, in one of their reports, either in 1932 or 1933, referring to a rate case which had been brought to bring about a reduction of rates in the Westchester Lighting Co., said no evidence had been submitted to them which would warrant a reduction in the rates. I wish you would have your people look up and see as to that. It was right after all that agitation came up in Westchester County and they were before the legislature and had hearings."

"No evidence was submitted by whom?" Melvin L. Krulevitch, associate counsel, asked.

"In behalf of the people or consumers which would warrant a reduction in rates", Mr. Mack replied.

"Yes, they were asking for a reduction in rates", Speaker McGinnies reiterated. "My recollection is that in their reports they stated that no evidence had been submitted to them that would warrant the reduction of rates."

INVESTIGATION DEMANDED

Senator Fearon then put in his demand for an investigation of the public service commission, saying:

"Judge, the people over in Westchester County have been giving the legislature hell and charging the legislature with responsibility for the high rates. I think the committee is entitled to a report by counsel as to whether or not there was a rate case, whether or not there was more than one rate case, whether or not the public service commission allowed what this witness says were improper valuations in fixing that rate base.

"Let's find out who is responsible, if there is any responsibility, if there are any rate bases and whether it is the legislature or whether it is the public service commission. I think we ought to have an investigation as to that angle of this thing in order to check up here and tie in with this testimony."

Mr. Mack promised to have the facts about the Westchester rate cases ready when the committee reconvenes at 9 o'clock this morning, but the investigation of the public service commission will be held in abeyance.

"What has the public service commission been doing all these years?" Senator Fearon demanded a bit later.

"I refer you to them," Mr. Mack answered.

"I'm for referring you to them," retorted Senator Fearon. "That's in the resolution creating this committee."

The investigation of the legal department of the Phillips Co., which controlled the Long Island Lighting Co. system until recently, had been under way only a few minutes when Arthur J. Baldwin, the company attorney, tried to interrupt and correct some figures from the floor.

He was immediately put on the stand, where he spent half an hour in an effort to explain that the Phillips Co. had not really been engaged in the practice of law. He admitted that he would not have advised the practice. He was not the company attorney at the time.

The committee, which consists mostly of lawyers, pounced eagerly on the Phillips' legal department, and the members amused themselves trying various ways of phrasing questions to make Mr. Baldwin admit that the company had engaged in the practice of law as a side line.

The harassed Mr. Baldwin directed his explanations first in the direction of Mr. Mack, then toward the committee members, and finally toward the jury box in which the newspaper men were seated.

ADDRESS BY MRS. GEORGE B. SIMMONS BEFORE "GRASS ROOTS" CONVENTION

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a speech delivered by Mrs. George B. Simmons, of Marshall, Mo., at the Springfield, Ill., Republican "grass roots" convention.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., June 10 (Special).—Following is in part the address of Mrs. George B. Simmons, of Marshall, Mo., the farm wife, before the grass roots convention:

"With the eyes of a whole world on us, we are met today in deep devotion to our beloved Nation. Our Constitution and our representative form of government are being attacked. Personal liberty and property rights face definite dangers. We have come because we realize the blessings we have had, and we want to keep them for ourselves and our children.

"I, a Missouri farm woman, can speak to you because we have freedom of speech. You, who are representatives of our great newspapers, can publish what we do and say here because we have freedom of the press. You, who make this vast audience, could come because we have the right of the people peaceably to assemble. These are only three of the safeguards to our liberty given to us by our precious Constitution. We are all here because we believe with Lincoln that 'right makes might.'

"We love this, our own country, and we are ready, as he once counseled when our Nation was imperiled, to 'dare to do our duty as we understand it.' And so, with minds and hearts and souls determined upon our common purpose of patriotic service, we can ask ourselves: 'What does our America require of us?'"

LOVE OF COUNTRY FIRST

Here Mrs. Simmons refers to two articles she wrote for the Saturday Evening Post telling the reactions of a farm woman to the planned economy a la Wallace and Tugwell. She continued as follows:

"One reason I am here today is that I have been assured that the Republican Party desires now above all considerations of partisanship to offer to people of patriotism and common sense a medium for such mobilization. Here we are to put love of country first.

"We who have come from generations of conservative southern Democrats are in a position both peculiar and pathetic. We see that either this administration is not Democratic or we have been mistaken all of our lives, but either way, we have no party. As a kinsman of mine recently said, 'I didn't leave the Democratic Party. It left me.' Those whom we helped to elect and, indeed, whom some of you helped to elect, have betrayed us. I have it upon good Republican authority that no administration ever went into power upon a better platform. The trouble has been that as soon as the election was certain the platform was forsaken.

"Not only has the platform been repudiated but we have had thrust upon us as rulers persons for whom we have never had any chance to vote. These have been appointed by those whom we did elect. They have assumed powers that tend daily to curtail our freedom and make positive a slavery hateful to us who have tried to be intelligent citizens. They waste our money until we are appalled, and our imaginations stagger at the sizes of the figures with which they juggle so carelessly.

STRAIGHT THINKING NEEDED

"I believe it is only fair to draw a very clear line between the Democratic Party as some of us have known and loved it, before this iniquitous era of 'brain rust' began to corrode our national honor, and this communistic, un-American regime we now so sadly suffer. I believe that the Republican Party will do wisely to conduct its campaigns upon principles and upon plans that will come from straight thinking.

"For our America requires of us, first of all, that we think, and then that we have courage to act as our thinking has pointed the way. It is hard work to think, but this is no time for indifference, or for carelessness. Sir Joshua Reynolds once said, 'There is no expedient to which a man will not resort to avoid the real labor of thinking'; and Oliver Wendell Holmes wrote that 'liberty involves that necessity for perpetual choice which is the kind of labor men have always dreaded.' And I say to you that we must not allow ourselves to be caught up in a dust storm of catch phrases, or to be sunk in a mire of senseless generalities.

"We must get the facts, and we can, if we are persistent enough. Today, as a farm woman, I believe that the biggest reason so many farmers signed the various contracts thrust at them by the bureaucrats of the Agricultural Department has been because they did not get all the facts.

ONE-SIDED CONTRACTS

"I asked a good many farmers if they read the contracts, and I never found one who realized about clause 9 of the 1934 corn-hog contract, yet it plainly demanded that the signer agree to comply with such rulings as the Secretary of Agriculture had made heretofore and might make hereinafter.

"My husband said he would not sign any contract that bound him and did not as much bind the other party to it, and that it was just another tax scheme, which we all know it was, and is. But it is far worse than anything we have ever known, because it collects the farmers' liberty along with the processing taxes.

"The desire to rule us, to dominate American farmers, runs rampant and vicious through all these 'triple A' schemes. I feel an awful sense of personal disillusionment when I view how news they at Washington can take as favorable to the 'triple A' is exaggerated, and how those of us who dare to oppose these fantastic mistakes are discredited.

RIDICULES FARM PILGRIMS

"Take this recent march of farmers to Washington: The Kansas City Star printed the fact that of the 40 or so who went from my own State of Missouri nearly all were from one cotton-producing county in the southeastern part of the State. Yet see how immediately announcements came out of Washington that the Congress was so impressed that now these proposed amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act would be passed without much trouble. I read it, and I just thought, 'I reckon if somebody would turn one swallow loose in our Nation's Capitol in January most of our Congressmen would get out their straw hats and think it was summer.'

"I didn't feel any happier after President Roosevelt stood up before that hand-picked bunch that so wrongly claimed to represent all farmers and called me a 'high and mighty liar', for I am one who does not believe that some soft-handed fathead down in Washington can run my husband's farm better than he can!

"Now Mr. Chester Davis of the 'triple A' tells us that the Department of Agriculture has received a 'mandate' from the wheat growers to continue wheat control until 1939, yet the best figures available show that 15 percent of the wheat growers of the Nation voted in this recent so-called referendum in which the voting was secret. In a country where representative government is supposed to be right, how can 15 percent issue a mandate? A young farmer sat in my study out on our farm the day when the voting was being done and said there was no use to vote because with the vote secret it would be in favor whether it was or not! He was correct, of course."

Mrs. Simmons related her father's recent experience with the cattle-buying bureaucrats and then continued:

"And so when I hear and read how those over us are going to regulate all business, and how electric power plants are to be built to compete, as they must, with the very private businesses whose tax money must go to support the Government-owned plants, when I consider the sanctimonious indictments of business and industry, the mealy mouthed bids for the favor of the man in the street, the promises that neither a King Midas nor an Angel Gabriel could ever fulfill, I remember these contracts sent out for farmers to sign, and the high-powered salesmanship used to get the farmers' names on the desired line, and I am sickened with a horrible nausea at the thought of how much worse political trickery can be than even the most flagrant business mismanagement!

"There is a ridiculousness strangely lacking in wit or humor about an administration undertaking to convert and compel all business to heavenly ways, when at the very same time that administration is itself setting the example of breaking contracts and of seizing more than two-fifths of the gold out of its citizens' dollars, and of subsidizing one class with money it has taxed out of another class.

THANKFUL TO HIGH COURT

"I am so thankful for the recent Supreme Court decision. It gives us hope that we can save our Constitution. And I know a definite amusement and a sense of personal vindication in the specific occasion for the decision. When we moved to our farm 22 years ago, with less than $35, and with 30 red hens, our entire investment in livestock, some of our neighbors in the well-to-do cattle- and hog-raising community where we live did not bother to laugh behind their hands at what they called our "chicken business." They laughed right to our faces. But we kept on, and I am neither sorry nor apologetic because we have devoted half a lifetime to poultry raising and to helping others with their poultry problems. Among all our industries the poultry industry stands near the top in size and in importance, and I think it can take a bow when we see how two chickens have tolled the bell for the Blue Eagle.

"But I have not told you this in a facetious sense alone. I wish we could all realize how the smallest tasks can sometimes come to real importance, so that we might know better than to despise the day of small things, and might thus be led to a diviner self-respect. Former President Theodore Roosevelt once said: 'Do the best you can with what you have, where you are,' and if every person hearing my voice today would take his words for a creed by which to live our America and our Constitution and our future would be safe!

WOULD CONQUER DEFEATISM

"We must cast off the defeatist feeling that has been shackling our minds and our hands. We must remember that, as Tennyson wrote, 'Mockery is the fume of little hearts', and we must not allow the ridicule and scorn of those who now seek autocratic power over us to drive us away from the individualism, whose rugged strength contributed so much to the character that pioneered to make our Nation.

"A feature writer from a big city newspaper came to me for an interview. In the midst of it he exclaimed: 'But surely you do not believe in rugged individualism, Mrs. Simmons!'

"So I asked him: 'Did you ever stop to think that there is one gift only that the Creator has given to you that he has never given to any other human being, and that it is the gift of your own separate personality, your individuality? Do you suppose there can be a more unpardonable sin than to throw that gift back into his face?'

A JOB AND AN OBLIGATION

"The Republican Party faces a tremendous obligation and an enormous job. You who now seek plans for its future serviceability will do well to remember that envy must forever be ignorant and imitation childish, and that you will accomplish nothing but downfall and disgrace if you give up to imitation of the political expediency that now besmirches the face of our Republic, and if you allow yourselves to succumb to a lazy apeing of the so-called 'new deal.'

"The values of truth and of principle and of right must be recognized, and if following them means stumbling uphill with a cross to the crucifixion, then all loyal citizens of our Nation must be willing to shoulder their crosses."

DENIES BEING HARD-HEARTED

Mrs. Simmons here warned against hero worship and the political effect of spending of four or five billion dollars now in prospect, and continued:

"I am not a hard-hearted, unfeeling person. I never turned a tramp from our farm home door without feeding him, and while I do not publish my gifts, I do not forget to give them. But I believe that Archbishop Sumner was right when he said, 'The only true secret of assisting the poor is to make them agents in bettering their own condition.' Is this present administration doing this when it teaches them that the world owes them a living, and the Government is going to pay it to them, and when farmers cannot get helpers for the farm work, because those on Government relief get more from that relief than the farmer can afford to pay?

"Sometimes I hear the question, 'Well, what would the farmers have done without their benefit payments last year after the drought? Didn't they need the money?'

"And my answer is that certainly, after the worst drought ever known, many farmers needed help, but our Nation and its people have always helped those made unfortunate by droughts and floods and pestilences and accidents, but never before did a government demand that the unfortunate sign away their rights before they could receive the help they needed. It has remained for the new deal to drive that hard and tragic bargain.

SAYS ALL PRICES RISE

"Somebody else exclaims, 'Well, aren't prices better? Look at what food costs us!' And I answer, 'Yes; prices of farm products are higher, but so are prices of what the farmer must buy, and he has so little to sell, not only because of the drought but because of the Government's policy of wasteful destruction, that of what avail are higher prices to the farmer who has nothing to sell and everything to buy?'

"And then there is the inevitable last question, 'What would you do, if you don't like what the new deal is doing?'

"So I bring my same recipe for farm progress—lower taxes, lower interest rates, and to be let alone, unhindered, to do the best we can. Every business and industry in our Nation would benefit if agriculture could have these three, and likewise every business and industry would further benefit if they could also have lower taxes, lower interest, and freedom from bureaucratic meddling!

FOR ECONOMY, TAX CUTS

"All taxes can be lowered if expenses of government can be reduced and if political graft can be cleaned out of government. Our tax system is a mess, and about the only changes ever made in it are additional taxes, so that we go from very bad to much worse, year after year.

"If the Republican Party wishes to render real service to our Nation, it will renew respect for thrift, and for saving. It will remember the ways of Calvin Coolidge, and take the long look ahead that good management demands, and guide our country again into the only financial plan that ever can save us—working hard, and living within our means, and paying what we already owe!

"We could have lower interest rates on farm lands, if the people who have money to lend had faith in the Government; but if you had $10,000 to lend on a farm, money you perhaps had saved by means of the self-sacrifice of a lifetime, would you lend it, realizing that very likely the farmer who would borrow it would be prohibited by law from raising all he could, and that when pay day would come the Government might rule that he owed you only half of it? There never can be any sense or righteousness before our Creator in man-muddled scarcity. The new deal can never succeed until God gives to its proponents absolute control over the weather and over human nature. And He never will. There never was and there can never be any better policy than honesty.

WOULD BE LET ALONE

"When I say that we need to be let alone, unhindered, there are always those—and most unfortunately for our Nation—who at once imagine I mean that farmers and business men should be allowed to become cruel tyrants who consider none but themselves. Such is the state of mind that has come because we have too many false and careless labels, too many misplaced price tags, too much befogging of real facts and real issues by the people who want to live off of somebody else's labor, and by the politicians who want to get their votes by encouraging them in their deadbeat ways.

"If you let a man alone, you stop hindering him; but now these excessive taxes with their deceiving duplications hinder us; these too high interest charges hinder us; the loss of our foreign markets that the policies of President Roosevelt and Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace have precipitated hinder us; industrial unrest hinders; and lack of faith in man and in institutions, brought on by loss of confidence in those who have been elected to do a certain thing and have gone straightway to do something different; uncertainty about what bureaucratic rulings will come with the morning—all these and more now hinder us farmers from going ahead in any orderly way.

"I tell you, you do not know, unless you are a farmer who tries to think and to study and to make an honest living, the awful tension that we suffer now. I should like to be relieved of it, if only long enough to get one good night's sleep.

CALLS NEW DEAL TRICKY

"The greatest detriments to any honest business today, whether it be farming, or running a store, or managing a bank, or a power plant, or a manufacturing center, or anything else you may mention, are the meddling of this administration, and the examples of trickery and of political opportunism and of broken promises that it has set. And the pity is that so many have not yet realized how they are being deceived, or how surely things are not what they may seem.

"Belief in the integrity of government is almost as basic as belief in God. Indeed, it is difficult to maintain belief in God when we have lost faith in government and in our fellow men who have promised to uphold our liberties.

"Give me positive and complete assurance that the Republican Party means business when it makes its promises, and that when it builds its platform it intended to stay on it, that those whom it elects will remember and try their best to fulfill their promises, and to use common sense and actual honesty, and I am ready to stand by the Republican Party.

CHALLENGE FOR PARTY

"This is the challenge that must be met. Not in a lot of flowery speeches; not in 'sound and fury, signifying nothing'; not in promises of some utopian fairyland that can never be found or made in a practical world; not in grandiose schemes for reforms impossible to human nature this side of the grave; not in profligate wasting of money our children's children will have to slave to pay; not in stooping to the use of personal wiles founded craftily upon a conceited belief in a personal charm that has been exploited so sickeningly, to try to cajole and flatter the public into imagining that all that glitters is gold; not in vast propaganda machinery whose experts take turns at singing a hallelujah chorus for this administration's head and his bureaucratic henchmen, and at filling themselves at the tax trough—not in any of these is there any insurance for our future.

Instead, we need to undertake the simple tasks that, rightly done, can bring economy and order and usefulness and progress for our country. We need to lay out a plan of action that is humanly possible to carry out, and then get to work, without fear or favor, to accomplish it. Our America needs statesmanship in those whom we shall elect, and true and intelligent citizenship in the hearts of all of us, more than ever before in our Nation's history. These qualities, with the service they can bring, are not impossible.

ASKS FOR COMMON SENSE

We stand today, as did the Prophet Isaiah, between what Dr. Henry Van Dyke aptly called "the fierce radicals on the one hand and the sullen conservatives on the other", and the words of Isaiah then are just as apropos for us now:

"In quietness and confidence shall be your strength
In rest and in returning ye shall be saved."

Today the Republican Party must have the quietness of purpose and of determination whose strength must forever be finer and more lasting than any ballyhoo of those who boast when they put their harness on, and have nothing of which to boast, when somebody snatches it from their useless hands.

The Republican Party must have such confidence in the integrity of its own plans and its own patience and persistence in working these plans that there can be given to it, as there will be, the confidence of a Nation of people who are done with betrayal, and who must have and be thankful for a party in which they can believe. The Republican Party must give us a rest from foolish and costly experiments, and return to courage and thrift and sanity.

SOCIAL SECURITY

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 7260) to provide for the general welfare by establishing a system of Federal old-age benefits, and by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for aged persons, dependent and crippled children, maternal and child welfare, public health, and the administration of their unemployment compensation laws; to establish a Social Security Board; to raise revenue; and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment, committee amendments to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, as briefly as possible I shall explain the provisions and purposes of the pending measure, the so-called "social security" bill. I shall try to make the explanation as brief as possible, and I trust Senators will permit me to finish my analysis before I shall be asked to yield for any questions. At the conclusion of my statement I shall be glad to answer any questions with respect to the bill that I can or make any further explanation that may be desired.

In general, the purpose of this legislation is to initiate a permanent program of assistance to our American citizens in meeting some of the major economic hazards of life. It is, of course, impossible for all social problems to be met with this measure, nor does it attempt to do so. Many problems remain untouched by its provisions; some because not within the purview of Federal legislation, and some because it was decided proper that this legislation should be directed only against those major causes of insecurity for which experience has developed an efficient remedy.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. HARRISON. I had hoped that I might be permitted to finish my explanation before interruption came, but I yield.

Mr. LONG. I do not want to ask about the bill. I want to find out what course the Senator proposes to take with reference to the bill. Are we first to consider committee amendments?

Mr. HARRISON. Unanimous consent has been granted that committee amendments shall be first considered.

Mr. LONG. Then it will be some time before we come to the point of the introduction and consideration of any individual amendments which Senators may wish to offer?

Mr. HARRISON. I hope we may expedite the matter as much as possible, but I doubt whether we will reach that point for several hours.

Nor is the bill intended as emergency legislation, to cope with an emergency situation, but rather it is designed as a well-rounded program of attack on principal causes of insecurity which existed prior to the depression and which we may expect to continue in the years to come. The depression did not create but merely accentuated and forcefully brought to our attention, human suffering resulting from these principal hazards of life.

This measure includes several related subjects. It attacks major problems presented by recurrent unemployment, by destitution of the aged and blind, and of physically handicapped or orphaned children, and seeks to accomplish these purposes largely through encouragement given the States to meet these problems by State action.

Before mentioning any details I wish first to call attention to the general outline of this measure. Neglecting for the moment its provisions dealing with public health and vocational education, this legislation may be classified into three general kinds of provisions, designed to meet three major problems: (1) Pensions for the aged and blind, (2) provisions for child welfare, and (3) unemployment-insurance provisions.

I might here mention the Federal appropriations required for the purposes of this legislation. The measure authorizes about three and one-half million dollars for Federal supervisory and administrative expenses in carrying out the provisions encouraging State pension and child-welfare services; and for allotments to States authorizes $49,750,000 for State old-age pensions, $24,750,000 for dependent children, generally called "mothers' pensions", and $11,991,000 for other items, including child health and welfare services, pensions to the blind, and vocational education. Eight million dollars is authorized for augmenting the public-health service of the States. This makes a total for the fiscal year 1936 of a little less than $98,000,000. The measure authorizes increased appropriations with respect to pensions and vocational education in succeeding years.

In addition to the above, there is an authorization of $4,000,000 as a grant in aid to assist States in administering unemployment insurance for 1936, and $49,000,000 annually thereafter, which amounts will be more than offset by a tax imposed by the measure on employers of four or more persons. Likewise, it is thought that the other taxes the bill imposes on employers and on employees will offset the fiscal requirements of Federal annuity provisions of the measure.

As I have stated, besides augmenting existing public health and vocational rehabilitation services, the measure has three general types of provisions: First, those dealing with pensions for the aged and blind; second, those pertaining to child welfare; and, third, unemployment insurance legislation. At this point I wish to discuss briefly each of these classes in the order named.

In taking up the problem of security for the aged, I should first like to mention a few facts pertinent to this question. Some seven and one-half millions in this country are over 65, and best estimates indicate that about a million of these are dependent on the public for relief. A huge number are on the Federal Emergency Relief, which was not designed and is not suited to meet this permanent problem.

As the trend of our civilization leads away from the farm and into the cities, a growing percentage of our people have come to depend for subsistence on a weekly pay check, and, when cut off from employment because of age, have become dependent on the helping hand of public charity. We are all familiar with the poorhouses to which many of these aged must now turn, and those with experience in the local administration of poorhouses will recognize the wastefulness and inefficiency of this method of taking care of the needy aged.

Many States have sought a better method for meeting this problem. Thirty-three of our States and the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii have State pension laws for the care of destitute aged, and the number of beneficiaries increases rapidly despite the financial difficulties confronting State and local governments. Because of this financial stringency, as might be expected, pensions in many cases are necessarily quite inadequate.

Further, the States face an increasing burden of pension costs in the years to come. The percentage of people over 65 to the total population is rapidly increasing, and a study of age groups as shown by the census, indicates that the number of these old will be about doubled by 1970. So, obviously, the burden of taking care of these increasingly large groups of needy aged should be met in some manner other than merely the present methods.

The provisions of the social-security bill dealing with this problem may be grouped according to the two purposes sought to be accomplished; first, that of alleviating, and second, that of largely eliminating the said prevalence of poverty in old age.

Eliminating, so far as possible, the necessity of providing a charitable pension for aged people is a primary object of this legislation. In 1931, while Governor of New York, President Roosevelt felt this need, and in a message to the legislature with respect to the gratuitous old-age pension of the State, said:

> I have many times stated that I am not satisfied with the provisions of this law. Its present form, although objectionable as providing for a gratuity, may be justified only as a means intended to replace to a large extent the existing methods of poorhouse and poor-farm relief. Any great enlargement of the theory of this law would, however, smack of the practices of a dole. Our American aged do not want charity, but rather old-age comforts to which they are rightfully entitled by their own thrift and foresight in the form of insurance. It is, therefore, my judgment that the next step to be taken should be based on the theory of insurance by a system of contributions commencing at an early age.

It has been found actuarially possible, and the bill provides a method, for those in industry to contribute from year to year a tax, covered into the Treasury of the United States, sufficient to bear the costs of an old-age annuity for those in industry.

These are provisions for what we may term, for convenience in distinguishing them from other pension provisions, annuities.

Beginning in 1937, all employees in the United States, save casual and agricultural labor, private domestic servants, employees of the Federal or State Governments, and of nonprofit religious, charitable, scientific, literary or educational employers, will pay a Federal tax of 1 percent of their wages, up to $3,000 per year salary, which tax will be increased one-half per cent each 3 years, until it reaches a maximum of 3 percent for 1949 and thereafter. Employers of these employees also pay a similar tax at the same rates, based on the taxable pay of each employee, and also are required to deduct the employee's tax from his wages, and report and pay both taxes to the Bureau of Internal Revenue. Penalties with respect to this tax are those of the revenue act, and as collection devices the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe the purchase of stamps or other tokens. This tax is calculated as sufficient to provide funds, covering the cost of the annuities in the years to come, which will be paid, with only one or two small exceptions, to those workers in industry who paid the tax.

These employees of industry are eligible for annuities on reaching 65, if they have paid tax on total wages of $2,000 or more earned during 5 or more years after 1936 and before reaching the age of 65.

The Finance Committee added an amendment which provides that a man will receive this annuity only if he has retired from regular employment. This was based on the belief that no person holding a regular job should retain this job after 65, receiving an annuity along with his pay check. Rather, he should retire and make it possible for others to obtain work.

These annuities are based roughly on the salary which has been earned after 1936. The measure provides a pension, however, of larger amounts where small salaries or a short period under the system would otherwise result in a very small pension. The annuity is $15 per month for the first $3,000 in salary before the employee reaches 65, plus about 83 cents per month for each additional thousand, up to $45,000, plus about 42 cents per month for each thousand over $45,000, with the further provision that no pension may exceed $85 per month.

For example, take the case of a person whose average salary is $100 per month, retiring at the age of 65. His monthly pension would be:

$17.50 where he earned wages 5 years.
$22.50 where he earned wages 10 years.
$32.50 where he earned wages 20 years.
$42.50 where he earned wages 30 years.
$51.25 where he earned wages 40 years.

A lump-sum benefit of 3½ percent of all wages is provided for the estate of any person dying before 65, and a like amount is paid any person retiring at 65 and not eligible for benefits. For example, suppose such wages after 1936 amounted to $10,000, this benefit would be $350.

This plan is expected to take care of a majority of our people in the future, but there are some groups, not employed by industry, necessarily omitted under this system. It was thought proper, and the Finance Committee amendment to the measure accordingly provides, that these groups, such as farmers and professional men, be given an opportunity, as similar as possible to those in industry, to build an annuity. Persons who desire may, in very small installments, or by lump-sum payment, purchase annuities from the Treasury which will pay them up to $100 per month after they reach 65. These annuities are, of course, on an actuarial basis, and accordingly require no tax measure or appropriation, and none is provided in the bill.

There is yet a third group to consider, those who now or in the future face a dependent old age and have not been able to secure either of the annuities which I have just mentioned. For a complete old-age program this group must also be considered. This is the second part of the old-age security plan—providing for those whose old-age dependency cannot be eliminated by these annuities.

The social-security bill authorizes the appropriation of $49,750,000 for 1936, and such sum as may be needed annually thereafter, to be allotted the States with approved plans, to be used in making payments under their old-age pension laws. The average pension now paid by the 33 States and 2 Territories which have already enacted these laws is about $15 per person per month. Accordingly, up to $15 a month per beneficiary the Federal Government will match whatever the States appropriate. This Federal aid will be available immediately to each State with a satisfactory plan for State old-age pensions and will result in the Federal Government bearing half the costs of paying pensions up to $30 per month per beneficiary. If the State wishes to add to its costs and pay a more liberal pension, of course it is at liberty to do so.

The administration of these pension laws is left to the States themselves, with an absolute minimum of Federal participation, other than the granting of the money to match State funds. It is right and proper for the States, where old-age pension laws began, to go on administering these laws in their own way, for their own people.

The measure provides, however, for obvious reasons, a limitation on requirements States might set up, and which might leave large groups ineligible for a pension in any State. It may have a residence requirement of not exceeding 5 of the 9 years preceding application for a pension, and a continuous residence requirement of 1 year immediately preceding application. Further, United States citizens, who have met the residence requirement, may not be excluded on a citizenship requirement.

To sum up, for old-age security, the measure provides for Federal industrial annuities, for voluntary annuities, and, in addition, provides assistance to the States in paying pensions to those so unfortunate as to face old age without these annuities, or other income of their own.

The necessity of the bill making this twofold attack upon destitution in old age can be readily appreciated when one realizes the terrific cost of trying to meet the problem by merely grants in aid to the States to pay gratuitous pensions. As I have stated, the number of needy old people is steadily increasing. The average length of life is getting longer; industrial civilization has made it harder for the young to care for their parents. For these reasons, if the measure merely granted aid to the States for old-age pensions, the cost would grow enormously. The actuaries say that if this was the only plan providing for the aged, by 1960 the total annual cost of pensions, to the State, Federal, and local governments, would be as much as $2,000,000,000. In drafting the social-security bill, therefore, it was thought necessary to look around for additional means of meeting this problem; and the thing that has been proposed and sponsored by the President is the national system of old-age annuities which I have just described, which will be paid for in large part by the very people who will get the benefits.

By inaugurating this threefold system—and this is very important—we will thus be vastly reducing the Federal and State burden of paying the gratuitous pension, for this annuity system should eliminate the necessity of a gratuitous pension in at least half the cases. I have said that the actuaries figured that in the absence of any all-embracing Federal system the total cost by 1960 for State old-age pensions might be $2,000,000,000. With the self-supporting Federal system in existence, however, the annual cost by 1960 for the State old-age pensions would almost certainly be less than $1,000,000,000. This system, therefore, would mean a saving of over a billion dollars a year.

It is well worth while to remember this tremendous saving to the Federal and State Governments, in considering placing on industry the graduated pay-roll tax it will assume under this uniform national system. This tax on employers, and the tax on employees, begins in 1937 with equal contributions of 1 percent, and is 2 percent in 1943. Even when it reaches its maximum of 3 percent in 1949, it will amount, on the average, to only something like 1 percent of the regular selling price of the average employers' product. This is a relatively small amount to pay for a system which will provide annuities in lieu of gratuitous pensions costing over a billion dollars a year, and will bring assurance of a small but regular income to more than half of our aged people.

Besides the saving to the Nation as a whole, the annuity system will give to the worker the satisfaction of knowing that he himself is providing for his old age.

This system of meeting the problem of the needy aged is the nearest approach to ideal that could be reached after months of patient study. It is believed to be within the financial ability of our Government, and achieves in the largest measure found possible, the ideal of the President and those of us who believe as he does, of banishing the gaunt specter of need in old age.

Besides the grant in aid to States for assistance in paying pension for the needy aged—and this does not refer to one who has reached the age of 65 only, but he must be in need—the bill authorizes $3,000,000 for 1936, and such sums as may be necessary thereafter to match State funds for pensions to those totally blind. Approximately the same conditions attach to these grants in aid as attach to grants for State old-age pensions.

I do not know when any committee was ever moved more than was the Finance Committee when several old gentlemen, who were totally blind, were led into the committee room by their dogs and presented their case for aid to the needy blind in this country. I may say, with reference to the blind, that the provision was not in the bill as it passed the House, but is a Senate committee amendment.

As indicative of the need of this provision I might mention two or three pertinent facts. About half of the States already have such pension laws, but State financial stringency has resulted in very inadequate provision.

There are more than 65,000 listed as totally blind by the 1930 census, which recognizes this as an understatement, and of these nearly 45 percent are persons over 65, as much blindness comes from causes developing late in life. Due to this fact, and the difficulty of finding suitable occupations, it is not surprising that less than 15 percent of the blind are gainfully employed. Encouragement to the blind to become self-supporting is, of course, desirable, but the fact that only a few even of the 15 percent gainfully employed are self-supporting shows the necessity of encouraging and financially assisting these State pensions for the blind.

The Federal agency passing on State plans providing pensions for the blind and aged, and State unemployment insurance plans, and which administers the contributory annuity system, is the Social Security Board. Before passing on to the next phase of the bill, that dealing with child-welfare, I will mention the main provisions as to the Social Security Board.

This is a three-member board, and the Finance Committee amended the bill to provide that during membership a person could engage in no other employment; that no more than two members shall belong to the same political party, and established the Board in the Department of Labor.

Board members serve 6-year staggered terms and are, with the advice and consent of the Senate, appointed by the President, who also designates which shall be chairman.

This Board is, as I have mentioned, in general the Federal administrative agency for Federal annuities, and passes on State plans and other matters with respect to assistance for the blind and aged and for unemployment insurance.

It appoints and fixes compensation for needed officers and employers, of which attorneys and experts are not subject to civil service. Its report is, of course, made through the Department of Labor.

Your committee's amendment locating the Board in the Department of Labor was largely because by this arrangement savings might be effected, and its work could be better integrated with other agencies that are now in the Department of Labor.

I now direct your attention to the second phase of the measure, that of child welfare. At the outset I desire to pay tribute to the great work the States have done in this field, and to mention that all the provisions of the bill affecting children are designed to assist the States.

The large problems relating to child welfare are the problems of the child in the broken home without adequate income, the neglected child, and the crippled child. In addition, the matter of child and maternal health is of vital importance.

The pending bill has provisions designed to alleviate each of these hazards.

With respect to the first child-welfare problem, that of the child in the broken home, where there is no adequate income, I desire to call your attention to facts developed by the relief survey. This survey indicates that there are some 350,000 families of this type, with 700,000 children, which have been supported by the relief. With relief no longer available the necessity will naturally arise of throwing these children in institutions, as the mother cannot usually care for them and at the same time go out and work.

The problem of keeping such broken families together has caused 45 States to enact laws, generally termed "mothers' pensions", and with the termination of the Federal emergency relief measures it would seem almost imperative that the States be assisted in bearing the financial burden of providing these pensions.

The measure meets this situation by authorizing an appropriation of $24,750,000 for 1936, and such amounts as may be needed annually thereafter, for grants in aid, to be apportioned among the States for use in paying pensions to dependent children. Where the State has an approved plan, the Federal Government thus will bear one-third the cost of the total pension, except in no case shall the Federal share exceed $6 per month where there is one dependent child, and $4 for each additional child where there is more than one dependent child. These limits are roughly in accordance with the limitations in the allowances to the widows and families of World War veterans, as the contemplated total pension would amount to $18 for the first child and $12 each for any additional children in the family.

A State will not have to aid every child which it finds to be in need. Obviously, for many States, that would be too large a burden. It may limit aid to children living with their widowed mother, or it can include children without parents living with near relatives. The provisions are not for general relief of poor children but are designed to hold broken families together.

The Ways and Means Committee report, in mentioning the next problem of child welfare, the alarmingly large number of neglected children, said that they "are in many respects the most unfortunate of all children, as their lives have already been impaired." To assist the States in strengthening public-welfare agencies, especially in rural areas, and thus helping to care for homeless and neglected children, the measure authorizes an appropriation of $1,500,000 for 1936 and for each year thereafter. This grant to the States is to be apportioned by first giving $10,000 to each State, and dividing the remainder among the States on the basis of their respective rural populations, as compared with the total rural population of the United States.

The importance of the provisions for crippled children, the third problem attacked, is evidenced by the fact that there are between 300,000 and 500,000 of these, many of whom can be effectively dealt with by early treatment. This will not only save them from lifelong physical impairment but also from being public charges.

The measure authorizes $2,850,000 annually to assist the States in meeting this problem, especially in rural areas and those in economic distress. The appropriation is on a 50-50 matching basis, apportioned first $20,000 to each State, the remainder to the several States based on the number of crippled children and the cost of locating and hospitalizing them.

The fourth and last problem attacked is that of maternal and infant care. From 1922 to 1929 the Federal Government participated in this program, and all but three States cooperated. Due to financial stress this work has been curtailed, and several States have felt unable to continue it.

The American maternity and infancy death rate, particularly in rural areas, is much higher than that of most civilized countries, and experience has taught that an intelligent program is very effective in remedying this condition. The measure accordingly has authorization for $3,800,000 annually to be used in aiding the States. This is to be allotted, first $20,000 to each State, then $1,800,000 is apportioned according to the live births of each State, compared to total live births throughout the country. This is on a 50-50 matching basis. In addition, $980,000 is for allotment without the necessity of the State matching, based on the financial needs of the State in carrying out its plan, and taking into consideration the live births in the State.

Approval of State plans for children is vested in the Children's Bureau, which has done notable work for many years. The measure authorizes $625,000 annually for its expenses in administration, and for further study and investigation.

Save this sum, it will be noted, all the appropriations for child welfare are granted to and administered by the States under State law. The apportionment of these funds is largely administrative, as I have indicated in dealing with each provision. This is also true with respect to passing on State plans for child welfare, the principal duties of the Bureau being to make suggestions and to determine whether State plans meet the requirements set out in the bill. I shall briefly mention these principal requirements, which are believed proper to insure the greatest benefits from the grants in aid for child welfare which have been just reviewed.

State plans for crippled children, for maternal and child health, and for dependent children must each be State-wide in operation, with the State contributing financially to its support, and with a State agency charged with final administrative responsibility, and making reports to the Secretary of Labor. The Chief of the Children's Bureau passes on whether these requirements are met, and, in the case of mothers' pensions, on whether the methods of administration are efficient. In no case, however, does this include jurisdiction to pass on tenure of office, selection, or compensation of State personnel. In the case of mothers' pensions any person whose claim is denied must be given a right of appeal to the State agency, and the plan cannot have a residence restriction excluding any child who lived within the State a year before aid is requested or, in case the child is born within the year, if the child's mother has lived in the State a year. In carrying out child-welfare services the measure provides for the State and Children's Bureau to jointly work out a plan.

To sum up, the provisions of the social-security bill affecting children are for grants in aid to the States, assisting them in making provision for dependent children in broken homes, which are usually termed "mothers' pensions"; also for child-welfare services, for medical assistance to crippled children, and for mother and infant health. In addition, the appropriation authorized for continuing and augmenting existing vocational education and public-health services will be of benefit to children as well as adults.

We have discussed two of the three main phases of this legislation—provisions for the aged and blind, and those for child welfare. I have omitted any discussion of the parts of the bill dealing with public health and vocational education. This omission is not because I deem these provisions of small importance, but because they are along traditional lines, merely augmenting and extending these services, and meeting universal approval. The necessity of the provisions was demonstrated at the hearings by a host of witnesses.

The third and last great phase of this measure is the attack upon unemployment. In discussing the provisions with respect to unemployment insurance, I wish to again emphasize that it is not the purpose of unemployment insurance to meet the extraordinary situation with which we are now faced.

This situation is being met by the public-works program, and if in the future a similar emergency again must be met, it will probably call for some similar effort. The field of unemployment insurance is essentially that of meeting the normal condition of temporary lack of employment, and to mitigate the immediate effects of large-scale unemployment.

For in normal times, and in fact even in boom years, there is always considerable unemployment. Some 3,000,000 people who wanted work did not obtain it in the comparatively prosperous year of 1928. When machinery is replaced by more efficient machinery, when overproduction arises from any of many causes, when an industry is dying because its product is being supplanted, men are thrown out of work.

Further, with little thought directed toward stabilization, many industries operate with considerable irregularity of employment. There are peak periods and there are low periods, and a plant that employs thousands of men in March and April carries on with merely a skeleton force in the autumn months. The thousands who are thus dropped face a resulting period of unemployment, exhausting, in many instances, their meager savings, and sometimes becoming a charge on charity before an opportunity for regular wages is again afforded them.

It has always been natural for the cost of this unemployment to fall upon the local community. Those who are out of work first look to their neighbors for help; and, when that source is no longer sufficient, to their local and State governments. Unemployment may, in extraordinary depressions, necessitate the Federal Government assisting the States to meet the problem, but otherwise the problem of so-called "normal" unemployment is one that primarily is of local concern.

This has long been recognized by the States, and the problem of meeting this "normal" unemployment has been the subject of earnest study by commissions established by them. Especially has this been true since 1929, when increasing ranks of the unemployed brought the necessity of some action more keenly to public attention.

It is significant that almost every State commission investigating the subject urged some form of unemployment insurance, and, while differing as to details, uniformly recognized that part or all of the cost should be borne by employers in industry and that reserves should be built up in good times to help in providing for the welfare of those unfortunates cut off from regular work by seasonal unemployment, or that resulting from the many other causes found even in normal times.

Looking backward, it is easy to see how unfortunate it was that no more steps were taken toward actually inaugurating State unemployment insurance systems. For instance, if the State of Ohio had started unemployment insurance back in 1923, paying their workers who were honestly unemployed half their wages for periods of not longer than 6 months, the fund would have stayed wholly solvent for 2½ years after the depression began. Probably the rigors of the depression would have been largely mitigated with such a system in force throughout the several States. Certainly the regular income still received by each man who lost his job would not only have kept up his courage in the face of adversity but would also have given him a purchasing power enabling him to consume products of industry, which were left unsold on the shelves of the clothing store and the grocery.

One large factor deterring States from acting on the recommendations of commissions for the establishment of unemployment insurance has been the belief that it would put the local industry of the State at a competitive disadvantage with industries of States which did not have such systems. "If", the argument runs, "this burden, small though it may seem, is placed on the employers of this State, and is not likewise placed on the employers of our neighboring States, we shall in effect be driving industry out of our State and into the neighboring States, if we pass this bill."

The argument was made that if, for example, an unemployment-insurance plan were put into effect in Ohio, and no unemployment-insurance plan were put into effect in Kentucky, the industries of Ohio would be affected disadvantageously.

While, despite this obstacle, Wisconsin enacted an unemployment compensation law in 1932, and during the past winter Washington, Utah, New York, and New Hampshire also enacted such laws, other States have been deterred because of the fear of interstate competition, and it has been considered a most desirable step for the Federal Government to eliminate this barrier to State legislation.

This object is accomplished by the provisions of title 9 of the bill, which I now call to your attention. An excise tax is levied on employers of four or more persons, effective for 1936, and payable first in January 1937. This tax is for the first year 1 percent of the employer's pay roll, and increases to 2 percent for the second, and 3 percent for the third and subsequent years. Against this tax, up to 90 percent thereof, the employer may credit any amount he pays the State for State unemployment compensation. This places employers of all States on the same footing, and allows and encourages the inauguration of State compensation laws by eliminating the fear of driving business out of the State by the imposition of the burden of supporting a State unemployment-insurance system.

The credit of State contributions against this Federal tax is allowed whenever the Social Security Board, established by the measure, finds that the State law is a genuine unemployment-insurance measure fulfilling a few minimum standards set up in the bill. These standards are not designed to limit the States from using wide discretion in the types of unemployment insurance established by them, but only to insure the satisfactory working of any unemployment-compensation system.

There are six of these requirements. First, so as to provide a close check-up on malingers, benefits are to be paid through public employment offices, where the State has such offices. Second, to insure satisfactory reserves, benefits are not to begin until after the State has required contributions to be collected for 2 years. Third, the funds must be used only to pay unemployment compensation. The fourth provision is for the protection of the worker, who is ordinarily cut off from benefits where he refuses proffered employment. It provides that such proffered employment need not be accepted where the hours or other conditions of the job offered are substantially less attractive than those of similar jobs in the locality, and that the employment is not such as to necessarily interfere with his union affiliations. The fifth requirement is that the State law does not create a system which cannot be amended when experience indicates the need for such amendment.

The sixth and last requirement is that the State unemployment funds be deposited with the Secretary of the Treasury. This requirement is coupled with the provision that interest be paid on the State balances, and is for the purpose of safeguarding their investment. It is thought that no matter how soundly invested by the States, there would come times of unemployment when the investment would have to be liquidated in large quantities, with a depressing effect on the securities and a resulting loss.

In completing my statement on unemployment insurance I wish to call your attention to two amendments the Finance Committee thought wise to add, which provide for wider choice of types of unemployment-insurance systems and also for a stabilization incentive to employers. As I said before, the State of Wisconsin was the first State to pass an unemployment-compensation law. The statute was based upon a very definite philosophy that if employers are given a real cash incentive to stabilize and regulate their employment they will be able to make progress in eliminating so-called "normal" unemployment. The Wisconsin law provides that every employer shall set up reserves against the unemployment of his own employees, and when his reserve fund reaches a certain amount he will thereafter have contributions reduced so as to pay only such sums as are necessary to keep the reserves up to this amount. It is therefore to his advantage to prevent unemployment and so escape the necessity of large contributions to these reserves. It is easily seen that the heart of this system is the lessening of contributions because of good employment experience, and that for it to be effective such credit should be allowed against Federal as well as State tax. The bill was passed by the house allowing only pool-type systems such as will be set up under the New York law and not providing for this stabilizing credit. The senate amendments allow either type of system and also the credit against Federal tax.

If the provision adopted by the House had been carried through in the Senate bill, then the Wisconsin system would have had to be completely changed. The Senate Finance Committee thought that the State itself should decide between these systems and adopt the one they thought most beneficial.

The final provisions of unemployment insurance are for grants in aid to States with approved systems, for their use in paying the costs of administering the system. As I have stated, there is a Federal tax and an allowance of 90 percent of credit against this tax because of contributions to State unemployment systems. The remaining 10 percent, which remains in the Federal Treasury, is thought sufficient to offset an appropriation authorized by the measure, to be allotted to States for these administrative costs.

Mr. President, I desire to congratulate the House of Representatives on the great improvement they made in the bill which was originally presented. They have made a marked improvement and I believe the Senate Committee on Finance has further improved the proposed legislation.

Mr. President, in concluding this statement, may I add that the development of our industrial civilization has presented these pressing problems which this legislation seeks partly to meet. The President has pointed the way, and the measure before you is the result of careful study by the Committee on Finance. The committee received the assistance of the best experts on this question throughout the country. It coordinates the efforts to lessen the major hazards of our civilization. It deals with matters which other countries have already dealt with, and from whose experience we can be guided. It will not commence with unwise speed, but rather will be a gradual development, proceeding carefully and surely for the goal which is now far distant.

Further study, beyond that already given would avail us little, and the need for delay in this legislation does not exist, as the provisions of the measure itself provide for no hasty action which might have a retarding effect upon recovery. I trust, therefore, with such reasonable discussion as may be found necessary, we may proceed without delay to the consideration of this bill, with every hope of its appeal to an expeditious passage.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I do not know whether or not the Senator covered the point I am about to make, as I did not hear the very first part of his discussion; but I wish to give an illustration and see whether the Senator can explain how this situation is to be met:

For instance, if a man 50 years of age going into this plan on January 1, 1937, is earning $100 a month and pays in until he is 65 and lives out his expectancy of 12 years, he will be entitled under this plan to $17.50 a month, or $210 a year. In 12 years that will amount to something like $2,500. There will have been paid in by him and for him during that time $24 for the first, second, and third years, and $36 for the next 2 years, making $144. If that $144 were invested in an annuity, as is the plan here, it would earn him only $1.17 a month, something like $14 a year, or a total of $168 during the 12 years as against twenty-five hundred and some odd dollars he would get under the plan proposed by the bill. It costs for that particular individual something over $2,300.

In view of the fact that this plan contemplates that the taxes collected shall pay all the expenses, I ask the Senator to explain—and I am not asking this question for any other purpose than to have the explanation from the chairman of the committee—I should like to have the chairman of the committee explain to the Senate how this difference of $2,300 in that particular class is made up.

Mr. HARRISON. I may say here to the Senator from Delaware that, without question, under the plan favored treatment is accorded to those who are now of advanced years.

Mr. HASTINGS. Let me give the Senator another illustration, in order to show that, from the point of view of some persons, there must be discriminations existing in this bill. That is one of the objections I have to it. If we take a young man who enters employment in 1949, when the full tax of 6 percent is payable and he pays in for a period of 45 years he will have earned during that time $54,000, and under the plan will be entitled to $53.75 a month, or $645 a year. If he should live out his expectancy, he would have paid to him under the plan $7,740; while if the same young man had paid in the same amount under some regular annuity plan, from which he got all the benefits, he would be entitled under the ordinary plan which the insurance companies adopt—and this is figured out carefully—to $68.50 a month, or $822 a year, which over a 12-year period would make a payment to him of $9,864. As under the plan proposed by the bill, he will get only $7,740; he will, therefore, lose $2,124. Of course, I am not asking the Senator to do anything more than assume that my figures are correct. I have gone over them with some care.

Mr. HARRISON. Are the figures based on the 3 percent the employer pays?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes; on the 3 percent the employer pays and the 3 percent the employee pays. If that fund were paid in, as is done in the case of many of the corporations of the country—unfortunately by not enough of them—and an insurance policy taken out for that man, and he should start to work at 20 and should work for 45 years and should make his full pay every month, he would be entitled at the end of the 45-year period, when he reached 65, to have paid to him $68.50 a month; and, if he lived out his expectancy, $9,864, while under this plan he would lose $2,124.

I cite those two extreme illustrations—the first one I gave, and the second—in order that the Senate may know that the way the difference in favor of the elder man is made up is by punishing the youth of the Nation. In this connection I might call attention to the fact that the same thing is true with respect to the provision for death benefits.

If a man enters the plan at the age of 60 years and earns $1,200 a year for 5 years, at the end of the period he will have earned a total of $6,000. If he should die just as he reached the age of 65, his estate would be entitled to have paid to it a lump sum of $210. The amount this particular man has paid in, plus the accumulated interest at 3 percent, will amount to $76.92, making an overpayment to the estate of $133.08. This is one end of the problem. I have worked out the other end of it also.

But if we take the illustration of a man who begins to pay in the year 1949 and pays for a period of 45 years, we find that his estate is entitled to $1,890, although the amount the employee has contributed to the fund, with its accumulated compound interest, would amount to $3,383.52, showing a loss to his estate of $1,493.52.

I invite attention to the fact that this same youth is penalized if he should pay in for 45 years and then die at the age of 65 in that his estate would receive only $1,890, whereas the amount he has paid in, with accumulated interest, would be $3,383.53, a difference of $1,493.52; so if he lives to be 77 and draws his pension he has a loss of $2,124, while if he dies at 65 before beginning to draw his pension, his estate is out $1,493.52.

Mr. President, in my own time I propose to discuss the discrimination at some length, and if I have time and the chairman of the committee does not hurry me too much, I desire to point out several other discriminations. I wish the Senator from Mississippi to understand—and I know he does understand—that I shall do so for no other purpose than to present to the Senate and to the country the facts with respect to the matter.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask the Senator from Delaware if he has separated the amount paid in by the insured from the accumulated interest? He mentioned the two together. I think it is important to separate the accumulated interest from the total amount paid in.

Mr. HASTINGS. I have based all the figures I am using upon the figures which it is contemplated the Government uses under the plan. The theory of the Government under this plan is that the amounts paid in plus 3-percent interest will take care of the whole plan. The point I make is that in order for that to be true—and I expect to show that it is not true in fact—we must discriminate between the young man of today and the old man of today and give the older man a great advantage. My theory is that in the later years the young man who participates in this plan, when he, too, grows to be old, will call upon the Congress to make up to him in 1980 that which has been taken from him in order to take care of some older man who lived in the year 1940.

I merely desired to call this point to the attention of the Senator, so that before he concludes, if he so desires, he may discuss it.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, the Senator from Delaware need not suggest to me that I have any doubt about the sincerity of his opinion. In the first place, I never question the motives of the sincerity of any Member of this body. I do not know of any member of the committee who attended more regularly and more diligently performed his duties in connection with the consideration of this measure than did the Senator from Delaware.

It is natural that there should be a difference of opinion and different interpretations of the bill. There is no difference as to this particular matter between the Senator from Delaware and myself when it comes to the fundamental facts. It is quite true that when the bill shall go into effect as a law, those persons of advanced age will be favored. However, as suggested by the Senator from Illinois, this is not an investment plan. It is a plan which is worked out for security in the years to come. We are trying to be of help to people in their old age. I cannot believe that those of the younger generation, who are to realize in later years under the plan, will begrudge the possible advantage to those men who now have reached 55 or 60 years of age.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURRAY in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should like to inquire whether or not the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Delaware have discussed the constitutionality of the pending measure? [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I do not want to have any bill passed that cannot be upheld by the Supreme Court. I say nothing against the Supreme Court. We have done everything we could to eliminate questionable matters of constitutionality. We had before us a representative of the Department of Justice with instructions that he should study the bill from every angle. There was assigned to this work in the Department of Justice one of the assistants to the Attorney General, who is a most highly respected man and a really great lawyer. The views of the Department through this man and others whose views we have received are that the bill will be upheld by the Court on all constitutional questions.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, before the constitutional question gets much farther away from the suggestion of the Senator from Delaware I should like to make a suggestion or two.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let met say that the query I put to the Senator from Mississippi was more rhetorical or intended to be more facetious than otherwise, because long ago in my experience, the first I had in government, I learned that whenever there is any progress to be made, whenever we touch the human equation, whenever we seek to aid those who are in distress and those who require sympathetic treatment on the part of the Government, always there arises the bogey man of unconstitutionality.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think the Senator has completely answered the suggestion of the Senator from Delaware, but I did want to add one or two suggestions if he will permit.

In the first place, the shedding of tears about the burdens placed upon the youth under this plan would be viewed with less sympathy if we should stop to think that without this plan and, except for this extraordinary emergency, the youth of the Nation would be, as usually they now are, called upon to meet, without any assistance, the burden of the aged dependent.

In the second place, the Senator from Delaware lumps in the contributions made by the employer in arriving at this apparent differentiation between the treatment of the younger group and those who are in the older groups at the time the system shall go into operation. I see no reason in the world, if the plan is to be agreed to at all, why we should not require the employer to help take care of the aged in his employ for whom he has made in the past no provision whatsoever.

In that connection I desire to point out that, as a matter of fact, if we separate the contributions of the employee and the employer, we find in every instance, whether they be aged or in the younger group, that when they become eligible for annuities under the proposed plan they will receive more than they themselves will have contributed.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. In the Senator's very able presentation of the bill he stated somewhere in his remarks that those over 76 years of age constitute 7,500,000 of our population. I think the Senator must have meant 65 years of age.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I meant over 65 years of age. If I said 76, I was in error.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question, if I may.

I have had some inquiries from men working for corporations that have pension plans of some kind. They wished to know if an exemption could be made whereby their company would give them a larger pension under the plan they are now working under, and under which they have been paying for a number of years, than would be given under the plan offered here.

I should like to know whether that matter has been considered by the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. I may say to the Senator from North Dakota that the issue which was more sharply contested before the committee than any other was that of permitting private pension plans to continue and be excepted from the plan outlined in the bill. The thought of some of the best lawyers was submitted on it; and they thought we would be taking a very doubtful position if we permitted some companies to carry on their private plans and be exempt from the tax and at the same time imposed this tax on others. We were informed that there is no pension plan in operation by any private institution at the present time which is more favorable than the one we are here offering.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I desire to say that there is nothing in the proposed legislation which would prevent an employer, if he desired to do so, from supplementing the amount of pension paid under this system by having a pension system of his own to add to that provided under the proposed legislation.

Mr. FRAZIER. I assumed, of course, that was the situation.

REGULATION OF PUBLIC-UTILITY HOLDING COMPANIES

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I should like to call attention to some clippings showing what has happened with reference to utility stocks since the passage of the so-called "Wheeler-Rayburn bill."

I read from the New York Times of June 12 the following headlines:

Utility to float $35,000,000 issue.
Southern California Edison files plan with S. E. C. for additional refunding.
New 3¾'s to replace 5's.

An article in the Washington Evening Star of June 12 is headed:

Stocks tend up after hesitancy.
Power shares cancel part of loss.

The article says, among other things:

Obviously apprehensive that a wild wave of selling in utilities was in prospect following Senate passage of the Wheeler-Rayburn bill with its "death-penalty" clause for some holding companies, the market was nervous at the opening, but quickly regained its composure when there was no disposition to follow up initial declines.

An article in the New York Herald Tribune of June 12 is headed "Stocks climb to '35 high; whole list up. Utilities lead advance as Senate vote comes after market is closed; coast prices off later."

Again, Mr. President, I call attention to this heading in the New York Times of June 12: "$27,000,000 profit by utility bared. Ten-year net by Consolidated on a $29,300,000 investment in Westchester Co.; $23,000,000 'water' seen."

In other words, according to this statement, they made a profit of $27,000,000 in 10 years on an investment of $29,300,000.

I desire also to correct a statement which was made by me in debate the other day. In a running debate—I am not sure whether or not it was with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON]—I made, among other things, the following statement:

In my judgment no one can come before the Congress and justify the necessity for holding companies. As has been pointed out by the President of the United States and has been pointed out by the former president of the United States Chamber of Commence when he testified before the House committee, and as was pointed out by Mr. Owen D. Young when he testified before the Banking and Currency Committee, there is not any excuse for the tremendous loss involved in the holding company system; there is not any business for them to do; there is not any excuse for their existence. No one has come before the committee seeking to justify the set-up of all these holding companies.

That statement was made by me in a running debate; but I had on my desk at the time a statement which had been made by Mr. Young before the Banking and Currency Committee in answer to questions by former Senator Brookhart.

Mr. Owen D. Young, chairman of the board of the General Electric Co., has written me a letter in which he corrects the statement I made, and calls my attention to the fact that my statement did not correctly state his point of view. I did not correct my remarks that evening after the debate was over; otherwise, I should have changed them to conform to Mr. Young's testimony. I am very glad at this time to ask permission to place in the RECORD the letter of Mr. Owen D. Young to me of June 7, calling my attention to the correction. Of course I had no intention of misquoting him, and there was no excuse for it, because I had his testimony before me. It is just one of those things that occur in running debate.

I ask that Mr. Young's letter and also the clippings from which I have read the headlines be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

GENERAL ELECTRIC CO.,
New York, June 7, 1935.

Hon. BURTON K. WHEELER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WHEELER: I am told that you made the following statement on the floor of the Senate:

"In my judgment, no one can come before the Congress and justify the necessity for holding companies. As has been pointed out by the President of the United States and has been pointed out by the former president of the United States Chamber of Commerce when he testified before the House committee, and as was pointed out by Mr. Owen D. Young when he testified before the Banking and Currency Committee, there is not any excuse for the tremendous loss involved in the holding-company system; there is not any business for them to do; there is not any excuse for their existence. No one has come before the committee seeking to justify the set-up of all these holding companies."

The only time that I recall testifying before the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate on the question of holding companies was at a hearing on February 15, 1933, when a subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency was investigating the Insull situation. In that hearing, after urging the simplification of holding-company structures, I was asked by Mr. Pecora, "How would you provide for that, if you care to give the committee your views and suggestions about it?"

For your convenience, I now quote from the record on pages 1517 and 1518, as follows:

"Mr. YOUNG. I should like to see us work toward the end of having not more than one holding company superimposed on the operating companies in the public-utility field.

"Senator BROOKHART. Why have any?

"Mr. YOUNG. I think there is a very real reason, Senator, for having a holding company. A public-utility company, in the first place, has to be organized in the State of its operation, and should be. It does, as Mr. Insull, Jr., said this morning, a purely local business. There is a great advantage, not only from the standpoint of connecting different units with transmission, but there is a great advantage on the technical side in unifying those different operating companies; and there is also on the financial side justification for it through diversifying the risk. If you take one operating utility in an industrial community, and another operating utility in an agricultural section which produces cotton, and another operating utility in an agricultural section which produces wheat, and another operating utility perhaps in the fruit district of California, I think you will find that the securities of that holding company, in which all those utilities are grouped——

"Senator BROOKHART (interposing. Why do you need to group them?

"Mr. YOUNG. Excuse me. Is a safer investment than an investment in any one of those operating companies. For instance, if the cotton crop fails your utility earnings there may go down; if the fruit crop fails they may go down there; if the industry of a particular town is paralyzed they may go down there, but the general average, if you can create a situation where, through holding company, the earnings of these utilities have something like the same diversity that the country itself has, then you get in the security of the holding company a better security through diversification, especially in the common shares, than you would in any one operating company.

"Senator BROOKHART. Your idea is that if cotton would be a loss you would charge that to wheat and fruit, and if wheat and fruit would prove a loss it would be charged to cotton?

"Mr. YOUNG. No; not at all, Senator. If the earnings of an individual operating company in the Cotton Belt should go down, it may well be that the earnings in the fruit belt may have gone up, and therefore the fruit belt company may be able to continue its dividends even if the Cotton Belt company may have had to suspend them.

"The CHAIRMAN. But, as a matter of fact, that has never happened in the history of the United States covering any long period.

"Mr. YOUNG. Oh, it is constantly happening that there is a substantial variation in the earnings of these operating units.

"The CHAIRMAN. That may be for a year, but I said for a long time. Can you point to any utility where that has been true?

"Mr. YOUNG. That is the point. That in each year through these unifications you get something of the same kind of diversity, something of the same kind of safety, that you could not get through a long period with each individual company.

"Mr. PECORA. Might not the desirable things that you have referred to be effected through an operating company with branches in the various sections or States?

"Mr. YOUNG. You see, in the case of the General Electric Co., which is not a public-utility company, we own plants in Fort Wayne, Ind., in Erie, Pa., in Schenectady, N. Y., in Pittsfield, Mass., in Bridgeport, Conn., in Lynn, Mass., in Philadelphia, Pa., and so we are able to get diversity, because one corporation may own plants located in different communities. But in the case of public utilities, where each unit has to be incorporated within the State of its operation, and subject to the commission of that State, it is impossible to get the same diversity without the use of a holding company. You can only get the same diversity in the public-utility field through a holding company, whereas in the manufacturing business you are able to get it by one straight operating company.

"Mr. PECORA. You think, though, one holding company would suffice for a number of units of operating companies?

"Mr. YOUNG. I should like to see us work toward—and I say work toward because it is important in these sensitive times not to disturb more than we are obliged to the existing structures—but I should like to see us work toward the final objective of not having more than one holding company superimposed on operating units in the public-utility field."

It does not seem to me that your statement which I first quoted fairly reflects my position on the usefulness of a holding company, and I would be very glad if you would clarify the record either by the insertion in it of this letter, or by adequate quotations from my testimony.

I am convinced that the holding company is a very useful instrument through which to group utility operating companies which, by their nature, must be local, into an efficient economic unit. In this way the cost of power can be reduced, service can be given to communities which could not otherwise obtain it, and the safety of the investment can be increased through the diversity factor over what it would be in any one of the individual operating companies. I see no more reason for abolishing the holding company merely because abuses have crept into its operation than I do for abolishing the automobile because of the disasters which come from reckless drivers. The important thing is to restrain and correct the abuses and not to abolish a useful instrument.

Believe me to be,
Very respectfully yours,

OWEN D. YOUNG.

[From the New York Times of June 12, 1935]

UTILITY TO FLOAT $35,000,000 ISSUE—SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA EDISON FILES PLAN WITH S. E. C. FOR ADDITIONAL REFUNDING—NEW 3¾'S TO REPLACE 5'S—PROPOSED FINANCING FOLLOWS RECENT CONVERSION OF $68,360,000 BONDS

The Southern California Edison Co. yesterday filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission's office in San Francisco a registration statement covering the proposed issuance of $35,000,000 of additional 3¾ percent refunding mortgage bonds. About 3 months ago the company sold $73,000,000 of refunding 3¾'s.

It is understood that the banking group that will underwrite the new issue will be headed by the First Boston Corporation and will be composed of virtually the same houses that underwrote the previous issue of bonds in April. These houses were E. H. Rollins & Sons, Inc., Blyth & Co., Inc., Brown, Harriman & Co., Inc., Lazard Freres & Co., Inc., Edward B. Smith & Co., Dean Witter & Co., Field, Glore & Co., William R. Staats Co., Kidder, Peabody & Co., White, Weld & Co., Coffin & Burr, Inc., Pacific Co. of California, and Stone & Webster & Blodget, Inc.

The proceeds of the $73,000,000 issue were used to retire $55,000,000 of 5 percent bonds due in 1951 and $13,360,000 of 5's due in 1939. The new issue will be used to retire on September 1 next, $32,000,000 of refunding 5's due in 1952.

With the additional 5's retired, the company will have refunded all of its higher rate bonds except $29,300,000 of 5's due in 1954 and $4,648,000 of Pacific Light & Power 5's of 1942. There is in addition a $3,600,000 issue of Edison 4½'s due in 1955.

Total conversion of bonds following the issuance of the additional series of refunding bonds will aggregate $100,360,000 of 5 percent bonds replaced by 3¾ percent bonds, thus effecting a substantial saving in annual interest requirements of the company.

[From the Washington Evening Star of June 12, 1935]

STOCKS TEND UP AFTER HESITANCY—POWER SHARES CANCEL PART OF LOSS—RAILROAD SHARES CLIMB

By Victor Eubank, Associated Press financial writer

NEW YORK, June 12.—The stock market withstood a flurry of selling in utilities today and then got back into its forward stride without difficulty.

Obviously apprehensive that a wild wave of selling in utilities was in prospect following Senate passage of the Wheeler-Rayburn bill with its "death penalty" clause for some holding companies, the market was nervous at the opening, but quickly regained its composure when there was no disposition to follow up initial declines.

Leading commodities leaned backward, but corporate bonds were held fairly well in line by railroad issues which entered their sixth consecutive day of rising prices. Foreign exchanges moved narrowly, with both sterling and francs a trifle easy.

Among shares working fractions to a point or more higher were American Can, Westinghouse, International Harvester, Du Pont, Chrysler, General Motors, United States Steel, Bethlehem, General Electric, Allied Chemical, Houdaille, Hershey, Santa Fe, Pennsylvania, Northern Pacific, Great Northern, and Union Pacific. Prominent utilities regaining much of their early losses included American Telephone, Pacific Gas, American Water Works, United Corporation, and Consolidated Gas. Western Union overcame its loss completely and showed a fractional gain.

Indications of a sharp division of opinion among members of the House committee that will write the next chapter in the utility holding company legislation following the narrow margin by which the Dieterich amendment was defeated in the Senate yesterday lent considerable encouragement to followers of power and light shares who still think it is too early to give up hope for passage of purely regulatory legislation in place of that desired by the administration.

The fact that only one or two large blocks of these shares were offered at the opening indicated to market analysts that present owners had decided to stick to their guns, at least until a more definite trend had developed in the House committee's attitude toward the legislation.

Much of the activity in railroad shares again centered in western roads whose prospects for improved traffic load are considered bright because of the larger farm output indicated in most sections. In addition, settlement of the lumber strike in the Pacific Northwest has released to these lines large shipments of lumber which ordinarily would have been moved by boat, but has been converted in order to speed delivery to dealers whose stocks were at the near vanishing point. Freight carloadings of carriers thus far reporting for last week have shown uniform increases over both the previous week and last year.

[From the Washington Evening Star of June 11, 1935]

CURB IS STEADIER AS UTILITIES RISE—MODEST RALLY IN POWER SHARES RECORDED, BUT MOST OILS EASE

NEW YORK, June 11.—A modest rally in utility shares gave the curb market a steadier tone today.

Most all of the standard trading favorites, which were hesitant and generally lower yesterday coincident with lengthy debate in the Senate over the Wheeler-Rayburn utility holding bill, advanced as much as one-half point under a fairly broad demand.

Prominent on the upturn were such shares as American Gas, Cities Service, Electric Bond & Share, and Niagara Hudson. Other stocks selling higher included Bunker Hill & Sullivan, Greyhound, Lake Shore Mines, Pioneer Gold, Sunshine, and Technicolor.

[From the New York Herald Tribune of June 12, 1935]

STOCKS CLIMB TO 1935 HIGH; WHOLE LIST UP—UTILITIES LEAD ADVANCE AS SENATE VOTE COMES AFTER MARKET IS CLOSED; COAST PRICES OFF LATER—RAILS, STEELS, OILS GATHER STRENGTH—CRYSTAL SUGAR IS STAR PERFORMER ON NEW PLAN; AVERAGE GAINS 0.63 PERCENT

By C. Norman Stabler, financial editor

Stocks continued their advance yesterday, a gain of 0.63 point on the average being sufficient to carry the list to a new 1935 high, but the major news of the day came after the close when the Senate passed the public-utility holding bill by a wide margin. As so often happens on those rare days when a piece of important news comes after 3 o'clock, the interest of the financial community shifted to the Pacific coast, where the difference in time makes it possible to trade after New York's tickers have been stilled.

In San Francisco public-utility shares broke sharply. Offerings were not large, but the western traders displayed some nervousness, even though the power and light shares listed on the coast markets are dealt in intrastate business, and so would be exempt from the provisions of the Washington legislation.

Before the close here the public utilities displayed a good tone. There was a vote on the Dieterich amendment, which would have transformed the Wheeler-Rayburn bill into a simple regulatory measure; but it was beaten by the vote of the Vice President when the Senators recorded a 44-to-44 tie. Defeat of the measure was in accordance with the desires of the President. It is possible that the close vote on this proposal, which came right at the close, encouraged some of the Street to think that the Senate might frown on the entire bill, but such was far from the case, for it went through with a margin that indicated great solidarity.

UTILITIES CLIMB EARLY

Before the final action, however, utilities shares bounded along, with Southern California Edison displacing American Telephone in leadership. It closed up 2⅛ points at a new high, special attention being paid because of the completion of plans for underwriting its new issue of $35,000,000 in 3¾-percent refunding mortgage bonds. Consolidated Gas also was active and advanced fractionally, as did Commonwealth and Southern. Telephone advanced a half point to another new high for the year.

Rails, steels, and oils were next in favor, and there were individual star performers in the manufacturing group. The common and preferred of American Crystal Sugar advanced 1¾ and 3 points, respectively, each scoring a new high when shareholders ratified a recapitalization plan. Under it the accrued dividends on the preferred will be eliminated and a new 6-percent senior stock issue will be offered to the present holders of a 7-percent stock on a basis of 1.6 shares for 1. Other sugar stocks also behaved well.

LATE BUYING AIDS RAILS

Gains of one or more points were registered by a representative group of speculative leaders, including Allied Chemical, American Can, Case, Chrysler, Du Pont, Harvester, and Loews, while among the rails Atchison, Great Northern preferred, Northern Pacific, and Union Pacific received good support. Rail stocks got their best buying late in the day, while throughout the day rail bonds were the feature of the senior market.

The mining division moved along with the upward trend, but the silvers produced no sensation, gains being restricted in most cases. The spot price of the metal was marked down one-eighth cent here to 73 cents, but computations from the latest Treasury statement show that the Treasury is still more than $2,000,000,000 short of the ratio which it is ordered to maintain. Gold assets, listed in the Treasury statement, are $8,926,874,014, so that under the Silver Purchase Act the Government should have $2,975,624,671 in silver.

Commodity markets generally were sluggish and the bullish Government forecast on winter wheat exerted little or no market influence. Most price fluctuations were narrow and wheat closed off one-eighth to one-fourth cent, while corn was down one-eighth to one-half. Cotton likewise closed slightly lower, losses being limited to 3 to 5 points.

[From the New York Times of June 12, 1935]

$27,000,000 PROFIT BY UTILITY BARED—10-YEAR NET BY CONSOLIDATED ON A $29,300,000 INVESTMENT IN WESTCHESTER COMPANY—$23,000,000 "WATER" SEEN—OFFICER SOUGHT AS WITNESS "RESIGNED OR DISAPPEARED", MACK HEARING IS TOLD

The Consolidated Gas system has invested $29,300,000 in cash in the Westchester Lighting Co. since 1925 and has received more than $27,000,000 in dividends from the subsidiary over the same period, according to testimony yesterday before the legislative committee investigating public utilities.

The Consolidated system has owned the Westchester company since 1904. It acquired the entire stock then without paying any cash, nor did it invest any new money in the company until 1925, the testimony showed.

The rapid return to the Consolidated on its Westchester investment was the highlight in a day of testimony that revealed tactics by utility companies that were characterized either by witnesses or by John E. Mack, the committee's counsel, as "the use of burglar tools, corporate acrobatics, and plain watering of stock."

$23,000,000 INFLATION SEEN

It was shown that from 1900 to 1904, with the United Gas Improvement Co. of Philadelphia running the Westchester company, a $3,000,000 company became a $30,000,000 company, the testimony indicating that $23,000,000 of the increase was water.

Charges were made at the hearing that abandoned gas-tank sites, garages, and land on which wrecked and dismantled gas plants were the principal structures, were included in the Westchester company rate base as "used and useful property."

One witness declared that when the chairman of the board of directors of the Westchester company was wanted for an explanation of how he sold a piece of property owned by a company of his, to the lighting company at an apparently inflated value, "he either resigned or disappeared" and has not been found to date.

FEARON ATTACKS COMMISSION

These and other charges about items in rate bases led State Senator George R. Fearon, member of the committee, to demand to know "what the public service commission has been doing about it all these years." He said that the people of Westchester "have been giving the legislature hell for these conditions, and it's about time they were told where the responsibility lies."

His attempt to persuade Mr. Mack to investigate the public service commission at this time failed, the committee counsel reiterating that he did not intend to look into the commission until he had finished investigating the rates and could report whether rate regulation by the commission had failed.

The final flare-up of the day came when Mr. Mack accused E. L. Phillips & Co., of which Ellis L. Phillips is the head, of violating the law prohibiting the practice of law by a corporation. The Phillips company, according to the testimony, maintained a legal department to serve itself and its affiliates, and charged the cost of the legal department, plus 20 percent overhead, plus a 5-percent fee. The practice was ended in 1932, and any prosecution is outlawed by the statute of limitations, Mr. Mack explained after adjournment.

The hearing was the first held since Governor Lehman signed the $300,000 appropriation measure for the continuance of the committee's work.

COMPANY'S GENESIS TOLD

The hearing opened with William T. Harris, assistant counsel to the committee, as the witness. Mr. Harris testified that in 1900 14 small companies, with capital stock worth $3,403,550 on the market, were merged to form the Westchester Lighting Co. The Westchester company assumed the obligations of the smaller companies and issued securities of its own at a face value of $14,177,600 in exchange for the stock of the smaller companies.

No surplus existed to justify the $10,000,000 increase in securities, nor was any plant added, the witness testified. The U. G. I. Co., which controlled the Westchester company, put another $1,300,000 "water" in by accepting that amount for canceling one service contract it had with the subsidiary and then writing out a new one a few months later, the witness brought out.

In 1904 U. G. I. sold the property to the Consolidated Gas by what was termed "a curious bit of corporate acrobatics." The following transaction took place all in one day, the testimony showed:

A "24-hour corporation", known as the "New York & Westchester Lighting Co.", was formed, and all the physical properties of the Westchester company but not the franchises were transferred to it. It issued $12,500,000 bonds to the U. G. I. to pay for the property. Then the U. G. I. transferred all the stock of the Westchester Lighting Co. to the Consolidated Gas Co., the sole consideration being the guaranteeing by the Consolidated of all the obligations of the Westchester company. The "dummy" company then was merged back into the Westchester company, and the $12,500,000 bonds became the liability of the Westchester Lighting Co. and guaranteed by the Consolidated.

Thus the fixed capital grew from $19,000,000 to $31,500,000 without any physical addition to the plant, according to the testimony.

The witness testified, under questioning, that the natural tendency of the companies is to try to keep their rate base equal to the securities outstanding, or in excess of them, and he therefore contended that the transaction, despite company disclaimers, did affect the rate base.

No additional money was put into the company from then on, except sums used for construction purposes, for which bonds were issued, the testimony continued.

The following table shows the actual cash investment made by the Consolidated after 1925, the net earnings after all charges, and the dividends declared:

Year	Total cash investments	Net income	Dividends
1925	$12,970,000	$2,017,118	$907,900
1926	12,970,000	2,226,180	907,900
1927	22,500,000	2,949,827	1,583,049
1928	22,500,000	3,750,919	2,100,000
1929	22,500,000	4,488,622	2,100,000
1930	22,500,000	4,328,315	4,200,000
1931	29,300,000	4,220,752	4,517,333
1932	29,300,000	4,031,579	4,180,000
1933	29,300,000	3,473,748	3,803,800
1934	29,000,000	2,310,324	2,926,100

OLD PLANT IN RATE BASE

The committee then turned to testimony concerning the old Yonkers Gas Works, at Ashburton Avenue, Yonkers. The plant was abandoned in 1924 and dismantled in 1927, and it has been on the market, for sale or lease, several times since then. The witness, Mr. Harris, showed that the land and some of the dilapidated buildings still figure in the rate base at a value of $971,000.

"Was there a fire here?" Judge Mack asked after looking at a picture of the property taken by a member of his staff.

"A fire wouldn't have hurt any," Mr. Harris responded.

A company statement, issued during the hearing, declared that the testimony was immaterial, since the gas companies no longer determine their charges on a rate base, but by competition, since they earn only about 2 percent on their investment. About $685,000 of the amount should have been retired, however, Randall J. Le Boeuf, Jr., company counsel, said.

After going at length into the fact that the property was used barely at all, even for storage purposes, Mr. Mack took up the acquisition by the Westchester Lighting Co. of a piece of property in Ossining.

The Ossining parcel was owned and used as a car barn by the Hudson River & Eastern Traction Co. Its president, and owner of half the stock, was F. A. Stratton, who also was president of the Westchester Lighting Co. until 1927, when he became chairman of the board.

The trolley company ceased operation in May 1926 and by 1928 all its assets had been liquidated except the car barn, which the lighting company was renting for a garage at $100 a month. In 1928 it bought the property, 0.6 of an acre, with the old building, for $25,000, or at the rate of $40,000 an acre. It bought a half acre of adjoining property soon afterward for $2,000, or $4,000 an acre, according to the testimony.

To show that the car barn was of no value, testimony was introduced that the company had to spend $36,000 to repair it.

"RESIGNED OR DISAPPEARED"

When Mr. Stratton was first sought for questioning the committee was informed he was in Florida. Later, according to the testimony, he was reached by telephone at his home, was asked to let himself be questioned, and since has not been located.

"Is he still chairman of the board?" Mr. Mack asked.

"Well, he either resigned or disappeared", the witness answered.

Later the witness sought to prove by figures on assessed valuations and the company's own insurance system that the Westchester Lighting Co. property was carried at a book value 90 percent higher than its present actual value.

This led to the attack on the public service commission. Senator Fearon asked what procedure the public service commission followed in establishing valuations. Mr. Mack told him that the United States Supreme Court and the appellate division in this State had ruled that a number of factors not considered by the public service commission must be taken into account as factors in a rate base.

At this point former Speaker Joseph A. McGinnies said:

"Judge Mack, my recollection is—I may be mistaken—that the public service commission, in one of their reports, either in 1932 or 1933, referring to a rate case which had been brought to bring about a reduction of rates in the Westchester Lighting Co., said no evidence had been submitted to them which would warrant a reduction in the rates. I wish you would have your people look up and see as to that. It was right after all that agitation came up in Westchester County and they were before the legislature and had hearings."

"No evidence was submitted by whom?" Melvin L. Krulevitch, associate counsel, asked.

"In behalf of the people or consumers which would warrant a reduction in rates", Mr. Mack replied.

"Yes, they were asking for a reduction in rates", Speaker McGinnies reiterated. "My recollection is that in their reports they stated that no evidence had been submitted to them that would warrant the reduction of rates."

INVESTIGATION DEMANDED

Senator Fearon then put in his demand for an investigation of the public service commission, saying:

"Judge, the people over in Westchester County have been giving the legislature hell and charging the legislature with responsibility for the high rates. I think the committee is entitled to a report by counsel as to whether or not there was a rate case, whether or not there was more than one rate case, whether or not the public service commission allowed what this witness says were improper valuations in fixing that rate base.

"Let's find out who is responsible, if there is any responsibility, if there are any rate bases and whether it is the legislature or whether it is the public service commission. I think we ought to have an investigation as to that angle of this thing in order to check up here and tie in with this testimony."

Mr. Mack promised to have the facts about the Westchester rate cases ready when the committee reconvenes at 9 o'clock this morning, but the investigation of the public service commission will be held in abeyance.

"What has the public service commission been doing all these years?" Senator Fearon demanded a bit later.

"I refer you to them", Mr. Mack answered.

"I'm for referring you to them", retorted Senator Fearon. "That's in the resolution creating this committee."

The investigation of the legal department of the Phillips Co., which controlled the Long Island Lighting Co. system until recently, had been under way only a few minutes when Arthur J. Baldwin, the company attorney, tried to interrupt and correct some figures from the floor.

He was immediately put on the stand, where he spent half an hour in an effort to explain that the Phillips Co. had not really been engaged in the practice of law. He admitted that he would not have advised the practice. He was not the company attorney at the time.

The committee, which consists mostly of lawyers, pounced eagerly on the Phillips legal department, and the members amused themselves trying various ways of phrasing questions to make Mr. Baldwin admit that the company had engaged in the practice of law as a side line.

The harassed Mr. Baldwin directed his explanations first in the direction of Mr. Mack, then toward the committee members, and finally toward the jury box in which the newspaper men were seated.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 113) to extend until April 1, 1936, certain provisions of title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 2756. An act authorizing the Tlingit and Haida Indians of Alaska to bring suit in the United States Court of Claims, and conferring jurisdiction upon said court to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment upon any and all claims which said Indians may have, or claim to have, against the United States, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 6836. An act to provide for the printing and distribution of Government publications to The National Archives.

SOCIALISTIC TRENDS OF DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, since the Democratic Party came into power in 1933 a good deal has been said about the socialistic tendencies of that party.

I have before me the Socialist Party platform adopted by the national convention in Milwaukee, Wis., on May 25, 1932; and I shall read that platform to the Senate. It begins:

We are facing a break-down of the capitalist system. This situation the Socialist Party has long predicted. In the last campaign, it warned the people of the increasing insecurity in American life and urged a program of action which, if adopted, would have saved millions from their present tragic plight.

Today, in every city in the United States, jobless men and women by the thousands are fighting the grim battle against want and starvation, while factories stand idle and food rots on the ground. Millions of wage-earners and salaried workers are hunting in vain for jobs, while other millions are only partly employed.

Unemployment and poverty are inevitable products of the present system. Under capitalism the few own the industries. The many do the work. The wage earners and farmers are compelled to give a large part of the product of their labor to the few. The many in the factories, mines, shops, offices, and on the farms obtain but a scanty income and are able to buy only a part of the goods that can be produced in such abundance by our mass industries.

Goods pile up. Factories close. Men and women are discharged. The Nation is thrown into a panic. In a country with natural resources, machinery and trained labor sufficient to provide security and plenty for all, masses of people are destitute.

Capitalism spells not only wide-spread economic disaster but class strife. It likewise carries with it an ever-present threat of international war. The struggle of the capitalist class to find world markets and investment areas for their surplus goods and capital was a prime cause of the World War. It is today fostering those policies of militarism and imperialism which will, if unchecked, lead to another world conflict.

From the poverty, insecurity, unemployment, the economic collapse, the wastes, and the wars of our present capitalistic order only the united efforts of workers and farmers, organized in unions and cooperatives and above all, in a political party of their own, can save the Nation.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND LABOR LEGISLATION

1. A Federal appropriation of $5,000,000,000 for immediate relief for those in need, to supplement State and local appropriations.

2. A Federal appropriation of $5,000,000,000 for public works and roads, reforestation, slum clearance, and decent homes for the workers by Federal Government, States, and cities.

3. Legislation providing for the acquisition of land, buildings and equipment necessary to put the unemployed to work producing food, fuel, and clothing, and for the erection of houses for their own use.

4. The 6-hour day and the 5-day week without a reduction of wages.

5. A comprehensive and efficient system of free public employment agencies.

6. A compulsory system of unemployment compensation with adequate benefits, based on contributions by the Government and by employers.

7. Old-age pensions for men and women 60 years of age and over.

8. Health and maternity insurance.

9. Improved systems of workmen's compensation and accident insurance.

10. The abolition of child labor.

11. Government aid to farmers and small home-owners to protect them against mortgage foreclosure, and a moratorium on sales for nonpayment of taxes by destitute farmers and unemployed workers.

12. Adequate minimum wage laws.

SOCIAL OWNERSHIP

1. Public ownership and democratic control of mines, forests, oil, and power resources, public utilities dealing with light and power, transportation, and communication, and of all other basic industries.

2. The operation of these publicly owned industries by boards of administration on which the wage workers, the consumers, and the technicians are adequately represented; the recognition in each industry of the principles of collective bargaining and civil service.

BANKING

Socialization of our credit and currency system and the establishment of a unified banking system, beginning with the complete governmental acquisition of the Federal Reserve banks and the extension of the services of the Postal Savings banks to cover all departments of the banking business and the transference of this department of the Post Office to a Government-owned banking corporation.

TAXATION

1. Steeply increased inheritance taxes and income taxes on the higher incomes and estates of both corporations and individuals.

2. A constitutional amendment authorizing the taxation of all Government securities.

AGRICULTURE

Many of the foregoing measures for socializing the power, banking, and other industries, for raising living standards among the city workers, etc., would greatly benefit the farming population.

As special measures for agricultural upbuilding, we propose:

1. The reduction of tax burdens, by a shift from taxes on farm property to taxes on incomes, inheritances, excess profits, and other similar forms of taxation.

The Republican and Democratic Parties, both controlled by the great industrialists and financiers, have no plan or program to rescue us from the present collapse. In this crisis, their chief purpose and desire have been to help the railroads, banks, insurance companies, and other capitalist interests.

The Socialist Party is today the one democratic party of the workers whose program would remove the causes of class struggles, class antagonisms, and social evils inherent in the capitalist system.

It proposes to transfer the principal industries of the country from private ownership and autocratic, cruelly inefficient management to social ownership and democratic control. Only by those means will it be possible to organize our industrial life on a basis of planned and steady operation without periodic breakdowns and disastrous crises.

It proposes the following measures:

Mr. President, I have before me a pamphlet issued by the League for Constitutional Government, 18 East Forty-eighth Street, New York City, setting forth the 45 measures referred to in the socialist platform, and giving in parallel columns the new-deal answer to each one of those measures. I ask unanimous consent that in printing what I am about to read the parallel system be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HALE. I read first from the Socialist Party platform, and then the new-deal answer:

UNEMPLOYMENT AND LABOR LEGISLATION

1. The F. E. R. A. Act of 1933, approved May 12, 1933, stated as its purpose, "to provide for cooperation by the Federal Government with the several States in relieving the hardship and suffering by unemployment." $950,000,000 for this act appropriated in 1934 and $3,300,000,000 for National Industrial Recovery appropriated in 1934.

2. The President received a blank check for $4,880,000,000 in 1935 for this purpose.

3. Covered by the F. S. H. C., Federal Subsistance Homesteads Corporation, and E. C. W., Emergency Conservation Works (which directs the Civilian Conservation Corps).

4. Covered in N. R. A. codes, and the socialistic Wagner labor bill, which has the support of the "brain trust."

6. Covered by the social-security bill.

7. Covered by the social-security bill.

8. Covered by the social-security bill.

9. Covered by the social-security bill.

10. Covered by N. R. A. codes, and "brain trust" desires to have the Child Labor Amendment to the Constitution ratified which will regiment the youth of America under Federal control.

11. Covered by the H. O. L. C., F. C. A., etc.

12. Wagner bill again. Result: Federal dictatorship of wages.

SOCIAL OWNERSHIP

1. Reforestation, P. A., Petroleum Administration, T. V. A., Tennessee Valley Authority, etc.

2. Covered by the socialistic N. R. A.

BANKING

Covered by the new Eccles banking law passed by the House, now before the Senate.

TAXATION

1. We are to hear about this later.

AGRICULTURE

1. Covered by processing taxes, etc.

AGRICULTURE—continued

2. Increased Federal and State subsidies to road building and educational and social services for rural communities.
3. The creation of a Federal marketing agency for the purchase and marketing of agricultural products.
4. The acquisition by bona fide cooperative societies and by governmental agencies of grain elevators, stockyards, packing houses, and warehouses, and conduct of these services on a nonprofit basis. The encouragement of farmers' cooperative societies and consumers' cooperatives in the cities, with a view of eliminating the middleman.
5. The socialization of Federal land banks and the extension by these banks of long-term credit to farmers at low rates of interest.
6. Social insurance against losses due to adverse weather conditions.

7. The creation of national, regional, and State land utilization boards for the purpose of discovering the best uses of the farming land of the country, in view of the joint needs of agriculture, industry, recreation, water supply, reforestation, etc., and to prepare the way for agricultural planning on a national and, ultimately, on a world scale.

CONSTITUTIONAL CHANGES

1. Proportional representation.
2. Direct election of the President and Vice President.
3. The initiative and referendum.
4. An amendment to the Constitution to make constitutional amendments less cumbersome.
5. Abolition of the power of the Supreme Court to pass upon the constitutionality of legislation enacted by Congress.

6. The passage of the Socialist Party's proposed workers' rights amendment to the Constitution empowering Congress to establish national system of unemployment, health, and accident insurance and old-age pensions, to abolish child labor, establish and take over enterprises in manufacture, commerce, transportation, banking, public utilities, and other business and industries to be owned and operated by the Government, and, generally, for the social and economic welfare of the workers of the United States.
7. Repeal the eighteenth amendment and take over the liquor industry under Government ownership and control, with the right of local option for each State to maintain prohibition within its borders.

CIVIL LIBERTIES

1. Federal legislation to enforce the first amendment to the Constitution so as to guarantee freedom of speech, press, and assembly, and to penalize officials who interfere with the civil rights of citizens.
2. The abolition of injunctions in labor disputes, the outlawing of "yellow dog" contracts, and the passing of laws enforcing the rights of workers to organize into unions.
3. The immediate repeal of the espionage law and other repressive legislation, and the restoration of civil and political rights to those unjustly convicted under war-time laws.
4. Legislation protecting aliens from being excluded from this country or from citizenship or from being deported on account of their political, social, or economic beliefs, or on account of activities engaged in by them which are not illegal for citizens.
5. Modification of the immigration laws to permit the reuniting of families and to offer a refuge to those fleeing from political or religious persecution.

THE NEGRO

The enforcement of constitutional guaranties of economic, political, and legal equality for the Negro.
The enactment and enforcement of drastic antilynching laws.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

While the Socialist Party is opposed to all war, it believes that there can be no permanent peace until socialism is established internationally. In the meantime, we will promote all measures that promise to promote good will and friendship among the nation of the world, including:
1. Reduction of armaments, leading to the goal of total disarmament by international agreement, if possible; but if that is not possible, by setting an example ourselves. Soldiers, sailors, and workers unemployed by reason of disarmament to be absorbed, where desired, in a program of public works to be financed in part by the savings due to disarmament. The abolition of conscription, of military training camps, and the R. O. T. C.
2. The recognition of the Soviet Union and the encouragement of trade and industrial relations with that country.
3. The cancelation of war debts due from the Allied Governments as part of a program for wiping out war debts and reparations, provided that such cancelation does not release money for armaments but promotes disarmament.
4. The entrance of the United States into the World Court.
5. The entrance of the United States into the League of Nations under conditions which will make it an effective instrument for world peace and renewed cooperation with the working-class parties abroad, to the end that the League may be transformed from a league of imperialist powers to a democratic assemblage representative of the aspirations of the common people of the world.

AGRICULTURE—continued

2. F. E. R. A. schools, etc.

3. Covered by F. S. R. C., Federal Surplus Relief Corporation.

4. Many legislative proposals would extend varied forms of credit to cooperatives and farmers, also Senate bill 2367 seeks to turn farm tenancy into ownership and House of Representatives bill 2066 to alleviate farm indebtedness.

5. Covered by new Eccles Banking Law.

6. Does the Government desire to regulate weather conditions? Farm legislation already used to cover losses to farmers from abnormal weather conditions.
7. Covered by A. A. A. and Government new tariff laws.

CONSTITUTIONAL CHANGES

4. Already proposed by one Cabinet member.

5. Will the "brain trust" and advisors be able to get away with this? House of Representatives bill 7997 proposes drastic restriction of the Supreme Court's power.
6. Wagner labor bill again.

7. F. A. C. A., Federal Alcohol Control Administration.

CIVIL LIBERTIES

1. This un-American program illustrates why only 2½ percent of the popular vote in 1932 was cast in favor of the un-American Socialist Party platform.

2.
3.
4. The Secretary of Labor is doing her part to carry out this program.
5.

THE NEGRO

This new-deal legislation was defeated after a great effort.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

The Socialist Party is a world party, not an American party.

2. The new-deal "brain trust" put this over.

3. Is the new deal making any effort to collect war debts?

4. This new-deal legislation was defeated.
5. A "brain trust" hope; will be proposed later.

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS—continued

6. The creation of international economic organizations on which labor is adequately represented to deal with problems of raw material, investments, money, credit, tariff, and living standards from the viewpoint of the welfare of the masses throughout the world.

7. The abandonment of every degree of military intervention by the United States in the affairs of other countries. The immediate withdrawal of military forces from Haiti and Nicaragua.

8. The withdrawal of United States military and naval forces from China and the relinquishment of American extraterritorial privileges.

9. The complete independence of the Philippines and the negotiation of treaties with other nations safeguarding the sovereignty of these islands.

10. Prohibition of the sales of munitions to foreign powers.

Mr. President, from what I have read it would appear that nearly all the recommendations of the Socialist Party have either been approved or acted on at the suggestion of the administration. One glaring exception is with reference to the question of national defense. In that the administration has not in any way followed the recommendations of the Socialist Party.

The people of the county, since the President took office in 1933 and came out for the new deal, have been led to believe that most of the radical and drastic legislation which was proposed and put up to the Congress was temporary in its form and was devised by the President and his advisers after careful consideration to take care of an existing emergency. From what I have read here today it appears that this is not the case. It appears that almost everything the new deal has done has already been recommended to the country in the Socialist platform of 1932.

The country has had a chance to act on this Socialist program. In the election in 1932 Norman Thomas, the candidate of the Socialist Party, ran on the platform I have just read. Mr. Thomas has an attractive personality and is an able man; and yet, Mr. President, in that election he received only between 800,000 and 900,000 votes. At that same election President Roosevelt, running on a particularly sane and constitutional platform, received nearly 23,000,000 votes. The Republican candidate, Mr. Hoover, received about 16,000,000 votes. Therefore, the Socialist candidate, running on the platform I have read and which, as I have said, has been largely followed out by the present administration, received only about 2½ percent of the vote cast in the country.

What possible reason the Democratic Party can give for following out this program I cannot see. If Mr. Thomas had been elected, with a Socialist majority in the House of Representatives and a Socialist majority in the Senate they could not have done more for the benefit of their program than the Democratic Party, under President Roosevelt, has done since the Democrats came into power.

Mr. President, if Mr. Thomas had been elected President and had sought to frame legislation to carry out the terms of the Socialist platform, he could not have done a better job in selecting the framers from the point of view of those who favor socialism than the present administration has done; and the same thing may be said of the appointing of officials to carry out the provisions of the legislation passed by the Congress.

I cannot understand what has happened to the Democratic Party to cause it to abandon its fine traditions and the principles for which it has always stood.

Mr. President, I have here a pamphlet also issued by the League for Constitutional Government, which will, I think, throw certain light on the questions I have been discussing. I do not vouch for the accuracy of everything said in the pamphlet, and in certain cases I have eliminated allusions to the President which I do not care to put in the RECORD.

I shall read this pamphlet to the Senate, and I think Senators will find it of interest. The title of the pamphlet is "The System of Stealing Party Nominations", and the pamphlet reads as follows:

While but few persons deny that the theory back of the so-called "new deal" is socialism, the whole Nation is asking:

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

6.
7.
8.
9.

More new-deal un-American philosophy.

"What has happened to the sound and stable old Democratic Party that it should be sponsoring legislation designed to provide a soviet form of government in the United States?"

The answer is this: The Democratic Party has been deliberately "captured"—some use the word "stolen"—by the advocates of socialism and elements that do not adhere to American principles. And it has been captured through the use of the socialistic political invention called the "primary."

True, many of the old-time leaders have not been "captured" or "stolen", and they never will be, because they always have been, and still are, loyal American citizens, devoted to the doctrine of individualism so ably defended by Jefferson and Cleveland, who was the CARTER GLASS of his day. But the machinery of the party, nationally, has been captured by those who contend that pure socialism in this country is the short cut to universal happiness and prosperity. Evidence to sustain this statement is abundant, and, as it is available to those who wish to make the investigation, let us trace the steps taken.

The Socialist Party, the open and above-board organization, has been functioning in the United States for more than 30 years. It has appeared on the ballot of a number of States and has several times presented a Presidential candidate. However, the showing made was not enough at any time to cause any disturbance in political circles. It became manifest, therefore, some years ago, that political control—and, mind you, the first thing they seek is political control, because only through that control can their legislative and economic program be made effective—could not be attained in the United States through a third party because of the strength of the two great political organizations. And what made the two major parties strong was the convention system of nominating candidates.

Certain radical groups disgruntled because, under that system, they could neither name radical candidates for office nor secure platforms bristling with socialistic planks, began to agitate for the primary system which originated in Socialist headquarters. The contention was that this system would avoid corruption and prevent boss control of the parties. It was labeled as a "progressive" idea, and the word "progressive" at that time had great weight with the unthinking, just as the term "social reform" has great weight with that element at this time. Under the primary system, candidates who announce themselves for office have their names placed on the primary ticket of the party with which they pretend to affiliate and their nomination depends upon their support at the primary polls. Naturally such a system absolutely destroys party responsibility.

The plan was popularized by propaganda and agitation; but, as it was presented as a most advanced step in our political life, it was finally adopted in most of the States because there was no organized or intelligent opposition to it. Experience has demonstrated that only a small fraction of the eligible voters go to the primary polls. This has enabled any well-organized minority to move its forces en masse into the primary of either party, name its candidates, and thus gain control of that party.

The first concrete evidence that this system was to be employed to steal one of the old parties came from North Dakota. The Socialists there had not been successful in arousing the farmers to socialistic theories. The grievances of the agricultural sections had been played up and magnified; but yet, when it came to voting, the citizens walked into the polls and cast their ballots for the regular Republican ticket.

As early as 1916 a few Socialist organizers in that State agreed that success could not be attained through any third party, and that to gain political control they must steal the Republican Party which was the dominant political organization in that State. In an affidavit made by Judge L. J. Palda and used in a suit for libel brought by Ray McKaig against Gov. Frank E. Gooding, of Idaho, appears this language:

"He (one of the leading Socialists) did many years ago state to me in a conversation, I then being chairman of the Republican central committee of this county, that he had a plan whereby they would finally get control; that he had come to the conclusion that he would not get the people to use force; that what they were going to do was to organize and steal the prevailing parties in the various States, and steal the organization in the various States, and in that way gain control."

In 1916 the Socialist Party of North Dakota went underground and changed its name to the Nonpartisan League. This was done through the instrumentality of A. C. Townley, who had been a Socialist organizer. Townley is quoted as saying that if they would sugar-coat socialism with another name he would not only make the farmers swallow the pill but would make them pay for so doing.

H. E. Gaston, who is now assistant to, and is said to be in charge of publicity for, Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, Jr., became a publicity representative for the Nonpartisan League. In 1920 he wrote a book upon the subject. In it several times he refers to "capturing" the Republican Party. "An incident of the summer", he wrote in one place, "was the capture of the Republican State committee at Bismarck by league representatives", and a few pages further on he called attention to the fact that the Republican State convention was "league controlled."

The plan to steal parties worked. Forming a strong organization among the farmers, most of whom in politics were Republicans, Townley and his followers walked into the Republican primaries, captured practically all nominations and the party machinery, electing their ticket. The State immediately engaged in certain "experiments" such as going into the banking business, the building-and-loan business, the flour-mill business, the grain-elevator business, the hail-insurance business, and others. The harm done and the expense attached to the failure of all these experiments is so well known it need not here be cited.

Believing they had found the route to ultimate complete political and economic control in this Nation through the system of capturing the primaries of the old parties, the advocates of pure socialism organized in a number of Western States. In some they entered the Democratic, in others the Republican, primaries, and with marked success. But as the scorching sun of publicity was turned upon their experimental proposals, in most instances the nonpartisan candidates were defeated at the polls.

There remained within the movement, however, two factions, one still holding to the third-party idea, the other to the steal-the-party plan. Many of the old-time, stand-pat Socialists did not believe in boring into the primaries of the conservative parties. Others, especially the intellectuals, followers of what is known as "Fabian Socialists" (Fabian socialism was a name given in 1884 to a group of Socialists in England who recognized that the blunt language of Marx did not appeal to average intelligence. Therefore they revised the language of the then existing Socialist Party in such a manner as to conceal the real purpose. They further took the position that if socialism was ever to amount to anything, they must take it off the street and make it popular in the drawing rooms. Fabian socialism is pure socialism wearing frock coats and high hats), believe the short cut to Federal control rested in stealing the party method.

About the time the Nonpartisan League was functioning in the Northwest a little band of professional dissenters, meeting in the city of New York, formed a third-party movement called the "Committee of Forty-eight." A convention was held in St. Louis in 1920. As practically each delegate had a scheme of his own, no action was taken. Most of the delegates adjourned to take part in a convention to be held at Chicago known as the "Farmer-Labor Party." There Parley P. Christensen, an I. W. W. attorney, was named for President. He attracted an inconspicuous number of supporters at the polls, and from then on the third-party faction began to wane and the group urging the system of capturing the primaries of the old parties developed considerable strength.

In 1921 the Socialist Party, as such, seeing its membership dwindling to a mere handful, concluded that it might get farther if it joined in a movement with the other discordant groups, and so adopted a resolution providing for the calling of a conference of all such groups, which conference was held in 1922 at Cleveland to develop a plan of united political action.

Among those who, at that time, apparently believed in the capturing scheme was William Johnston, president of the International Machinist Association, and chairman of the convention that nominated Robert M. La Follette on the Progressive ticket in 1924. He was quoted by the Cleveland Plain Dealer, when the original conference was being held, as stating that "the main purpose of the meeting is to set up active participation of Progressive voters in the primaries." "With the success of the movement of Progressive political action in the recent election", he is quoted as saying, "we feel that more can be accomplished by working through present political parties than in the formation of an independent organization."

The conference developed two factions, one taking the position outlined by Mr. Johnston and the other, strict adherence to the third-party plan. For the time being the former prevailed. The New York Call, then the outstanding Socialist newspaper, editorially commenting on the conference in its issue of December 14, 1922, said that "the division came over the question of whether to organize a new party or organize outside of parties and attempt to capture the various primaries."

"To those who uphold the latter point of view," the editorial continues, "the party means nothing—the primaries everything. * * * To them a party is neither good nor bad, just as a public office is neither good nor bad; if a worker or a supporter of the workers captures the nomination, the party is good. If they do not, the party is bad.

It will be recalled that following this idea of capturing party nominations through the primaries, there appeared in both Senate and House a small group, some elected as Republicans and some as Democrats, who formed a bloc of their own and began agitation for socialist proposals such as government ownership and control of certain industries, notably utilities. This was one of the first signs of the appearance of this group in our Federal Government as an organized movement. The advocates of the capture system now began to believe they had proven their methods correct.

Then came the election year of 1924. The Republicans nominated Calvin Coolidge; the Democrats, John W. Davis. Following the convention of the two major parties, the Conference for Progressive Political Action (Socialist) met in Cleveland. The third-party element had control of the convention. Senator Robert M. La Follette was named as candidate for President. While nominally a Republican, he advocated very few Republican principles. Senator BURTON K. WHEELER, of Montana, was named for Vice President. While nominally a Democrat, he had departed afar from Democratic doctrine. Both were members of the so-called "radical bloc" in Congress at that time. The name Progressive Party was adopted and, hoping to gain much support from those who some 14 years before had followed the political program of the late Theodore Roosevelt, went to the polls and supported La Follette.

The results of the election showed that the advocates of the third-party system had again failed and it was then the devotees of the capture system came into control of the discordant elements. This other element determined to test its theories of governmental control of industries and even the private affairs of the people through Federal legislation. This is the element which is still very much in the saddle.

Turn again to the Cleveland convention of 1924 which nominated the late Senator Robert M. La Follette, and note some of those prominent in that convention and later others who were La Follette supporters during the campaign, men and women who today are holding key positions in a so-called "Democratic administration" and directing the course of certain experimental legislation of the nature described by a Socialist writer as designed deliberately to bring about pure socialism in the United States.

Foremost among these is found Basil M. Manly, now a member of the Federal Power Commission but then the directing genius of the People's Legislative Service, which name the bloc of Senators and Representatives previously mentioned operated under—some of them nominally Democrats and some of them nominally Republicans. Mr. Manly was a member of the executive committee of the National Conference for Progressive Political Action sponsoring the convention that nominated the late Robert M. La Follette, and a member of the campaign committee of the Progressive Party of 1924. A book called "Where La Follette Stands on Fifty Living Issues" states that it was "compiled by Basil M. Manly" and published by the "La Follette for President Committee."

In this book appeared extracts from the utterances of the late Senator, and among them this one: "I expect to stand here and make a fight alone for Government ownership and control of the railroads. I am for Government ownership of railroads and every other public utility—every one * * *." It is to be assumed that this, likewise, is still the doctrine of Mr. Manly.

Among the other members of the campaign committee were J. A. Franklin, Sidney Hillman, and Rose Schneiderman, all of whom were made members of the Labor Advisory Board of the National Recovery Act. Frederic C. Howe, a special appointee in the Department of Labor to help along the so-called "Agricultural Adjustment Act", was likewise a member of the La Follette campaign committee. Indeed, a large number of the members of the La Follette campaign committee who aided in the defeat of the regular Democratic candidate, Hon. John W. Davis, are now holding key positions under a Democratic administration.

Leo Wolman, another member of the Labor Advisory Board, above mentioned, was also a La Follette supporter. In 1922 Miss Schneiderman, above mentioned, was a candidate of the Farmer-Labor Party for Senator from New York. In 1924 she was a La Follette elector for that State. Frank P. Walsh, also prominent in the present administration but who nominally is still a Democrat, was another elector for La Follette in New York.

Donald Richberg, now credited with being assistant President, was chairman of the resolutions committee. The resolutions adopted declared for the "public ownership of water power and the creation of a public superpower system"; for the "public ownership of railroads"; favored "submitting a constitutional amendment providing that Congress may by enacting a statute make it effective over a judicial veto." That means the overriding of a decision of the Supreme Court. Since Mr. Richberg had much to do with the drafting of this platform, it is to be presumed he is thoroughly in harmony with the proposals therein expressed. Mr. Richberg was also a member of the advisory council of the committee on coal and giant power established by the League of Industrial Democracy, a Socialist subsidiary, and composed of those who adhere to the legislative-action system to gain their ends in the United States.

After the convention had adjourned, A. A. Berle, Jr., a member of the original "brain trust", with a number of others sent a telegram of congragulations to Senator La Follette. In that telegram appeared this language, "We believe that the time has come for a new deal. * * *." Frederic C. Howe, above mentioned, attached his name to this message.

Prof. Rexford Tugwell was one of a number of college professors who joined in the movement to elect the late Senator La Follette President.

There are others, now part of the Democratic administration, who, in 1924, following the fortunes of La Follette, had a part in the defeat of the Honorable John W. Davis, the regular Democratic nominee. Among the appointees of the present administration are several who call themselves "Republicans" but who, in the past, have allied themselves with just such movements as the one that nominated the late Senator La Follette. They often take part in Republican primaries but fail to vote the ticket on election day.

With the defeat of La Follette, the steal-the-party element in the Socialist movement gained control. They began to lay their plans. They awaited the psychological time to act. It came with the depression in the middle of the Hoover administration. They were not so foolish as to steal the Republican Party because it was not in good repute with the voting public. Instead, attention naturally was turned to the Democratic Party. It had been out of power for more than a decade, and its leaders, anxious to gain lost ground, naturally would ardently support whoever was named by the Chicago convention.

The intelligentsia in the Socialist movement—that is to say the "brain trusters"—long had their eye on Franklin D. Roosevelt. He was induced to believe that, as President of the United States, he could rebuild the whole structure of society.

This group, at least a year before the convention, began to popularize the name of Franklin D. Roosevelt. He was pictured to the farmers as the one and only man who could save them. The wage earners were told he was their friend. The disgruntled elements of society in general were rallied to his support. Indeed, there was a well-organized and cleverly managed campaign to secure his nomination before the names of any of the other contenders on the 1932 Democratic convention were scarcely more than just mentioned. There is plenty of evidence to sustain the declaration that in practically every State, save possibly a few south of the Mason and Dixon's line, the elements that had been fostering different third-party movements, and who backed La Follette in 1924, together with many who had even supported the open Socialist Party, had been joined to go en masse into the Democratic primaries and aid in electing delegates favorable to Mr. Roosevelt.

And so the steal-the-party element captured delegation after delegation. Even though lacking the necessary number to nominate at the start, they were able to make, as so often has been done in the past, a few trades. Mr. Roosevelt became the Democratic nominee for President; that is to say, he ran under that name, but, in truth, was the nominee of the Socialist groups.

The campaign was made on the issue of restoring prosperity. The socialistic element remained in the background, permitting the old-time Democrats to take the active lead and to gain the support of the conservative element. Nothing was said by Mr. Roosevelt nor by any Democratic campaigner that gave even a clue to the nature of the socialistic program which their group planned on putting into effect, and which now clutters the Federal statute books. The direct pledge was made by the Democratic candidate that the cost of conducting Federal Government would be reduced 25 percent. That had a conservative appeal. The direct pledge was made that a system of sound money would be maintained, by which the people believed he meant the retention of the gold standard. That had a conservative appeal. The direct pledge was made that bureaucracy would be destroyed in Washington, and that had a conservative appeal. Mr. Roosevelt was then elected. It was hailed as a Democratic victory. But was it?

Considering the nature of the legislation that has been enacted, none of which was discussed publicly during the campaign and practically all of which is not in harmony with the platform pledges, and certainly not in harmony with the principles of the Democratic Party of the past, was it not, in truth, a Socialist triumph?

There are, indeed, but few old-time Democrats who have not awakened to the fact that their party has been stolen from them. They hope in time to recover it.

Orderly government depends upon the maintenance of two strong political parties, one a check upon the other, but both must be soundly American. Republicans who are getting much satisfaction out of the situation, however, should not laugh too soon. There is much evidence to cause the belief that their party, also, is to be stolen in 1936. The bright lads in the Socialist movement recognize the fact that their legislative program has not worked the way the public expected. It has not ended the depression but has worked the way the "brain trusters" expected. It has done a great deal not only to weaken constitutional government but to cripple the entire financial, industrial, agricultural, and labor structure of the United States. The tax burden has become unbearable. Faultfinding, directed against the administration, is common throughout the Nation. The almost unanimous decisions of the Federal courts declaring certain important features of new-deal legislation unconstitutional has caused the saner element in the Democratic Party to question the political wisdom of the President. There is a decided revolt on the part of able Democratic Senators.

But regardless of what happens between now and the convention of 1936, the renomination of Mr. Roosevelt seems most likely. Should the Republicans name some strong, sound, conscientious person in whom the people have confidence, Roosevelt's chances of reelection would be slim. But these powerful socialistic groups do not intend to permit a conservative Republican to be nominated. Roosevelt's defeat and the election of that character of a Republican would put a decided crimp in the socialistic program. Those who have so far cleverly directed it from positions of authority in Washington do not propose to be disturbed. The socialistic bureaus have already been established by law. Most of them will remain even though there may be changes in the nature of the legislation creating them.

No matter how useless or how expensive a bureau may be, once established by Congress, it has always remained undisturbed. These bureaus created by new-deal legislation are in the hands of socialistically inclined persons. They are planning to remain there.

Since the renomination of Mr. Roosevelt seems certain there will be no need for the socialistic element going into Democratic primaries next year. They plan, therefore, to move en masse into the Republican primaries, gain enough delegates to the Republican National Convention to name their candidate for President, and that candidate is to be one whose views are in harmony with those entertained by the members of the "brain trust." It will, then, make little difference to them which party succeeds at the polls. They remain in power.

That this scheme is in the offing is obvious. During the past year much has been heard in Republican circles about liberalizing the party. Meetings have already been held in many States for that purpose, but those directing the scheme have not as yet satisfactorily explained what they mean by liberalizing the party, but it sounds interesting, and has attracted a considerable number of persons. It appears certain that those advocating liberalizing simply mean that the sound American philosophy which has been the meat and bone of the party since it was founded is to be scrapped and some of the socialistic theories now afloat are to be substituted.

This liberalizing element insists that the party must pass into the hands of a younger element. This does not of necessity mean younger in years. Indeed, years have nothing whatever to do with it. The younger element are those who, regardless of age, are ready to depart from the fundamental philosophy of the Republican Party and become contaminated with the idealistic theories of socialism. The person 80 years of age who does this becomes a member of the younger element, while the lad casting his first vote who refuses to transfer his allegiance from sound Americanism to unsound theories remains a member of the older element.

Already the friends of at least two well-known liberals, Glenn Frank and William Allen White, both of this younger element, have sent up trial balloons to see which way the wind blows. These liberals have been invited to speak before Republican gatherings. Following the campaign methods of Franklin D. Roosevelt, their statements are those of conservatives. In consequence, they have found some favor in the minds of those who do not know their mental background, just as Mr. Roosevelt found favor in the minds of Democrats who did not know of his mental background. There is every reason to believe that the trial balloons of other so-called "liberals" will soon be floating in the air.

Unless the American people become alive to the situation, in November 1936 they will find themselves between the devil and the deep blue sea when it comes to voting for President. There will be no choice for a sound American, for, regardless of who wins at the polls, it will be neither a Democrat nor a Republican victory, but a Socialist triumph, just as the election of 1932 was a Socialist triumph, although the Democrats thought they had been restored to power.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

On May 29, 1935:

S. 82. An act to authorize the disposal of surplus personal property, including buildings, of the emergency conservation work.

On June 3, 1935:

S. 1384. An act to amend the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, to amend the Federal Farm Loan Act, to amend the Agricultural Marketing Act, and to amend the Farm Credit Act of 1933, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 88. Joint resolution to abolish the Puerto Rican Hurricane Relief Commission and transfer its functions to the Secretary of the Interior.

On June 4, 1935:

S. 1023. An act to provide for the payment of a military instructor for the high-school cadets of Washington, D. C.

On June 6, 1935:

S. 1212. An act to amend section 1383 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

S. 2899. An act to provide for increasing the limit of cost for the construction and equipment of an annex to the Library of Congress.

On June 7, 1935:

S. 1469. An act to transfer certain lands from the Veterans' Administration to the Department of the Interior for the benefit of Yavapai Indians, Arizona;

S. 1522. An act to provide funds for cooperation with public-school districts in Glacier County, Mont., in the improvement and extension of school buildings to be available to both Indian and white children;

S. 1523. An act to provide funds for cooperation with the public-school board at Wolf Point, Mont., in the construction or improvement of a public-school building to be available to Indian children of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont.;

S. 1524. An act to provide funds for cooperation with school district no. 23, Polson, Mont., in the improvement and extension of school buildings to be available to both Indian and white children;

S. 1525. An act to provide funds for cooperation with joint school district no. 28, Lake and Missoula Counties, Mont., for extension of public-school buildings to be available to Indian children of the Flathead Indian Reservation;

S. 1526. An act to provide funds for cooperation with the school board at Brockton, Mont., in the extension of the public-school building at that place to be available to Indian children of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation;

S. 1528. An act for expenditure of funds for cooperation with the public-school board at Poplar, Mont., in the construction or improvement of public-school building to be available to Indian children of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont.;

S. 1530. An act to authorize appropriations for the completion of the public high school at Frazer, Mont.;

S. 1533. An act to provide funds for cooperation with Marysville School District No. 325, Snohomish County, Wash., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children;

S. 1534. An act to provide funds for cooperation with the school board at Queets, Wash., in the construction of a public-school building to be available to Indian children of the village of Queets, Jefferson County, Wash.;

S. 1535. An act to provide funds for cooperation with White Swan School District No. 88, Yakima County, Wash., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children of the Yakima Reservation;

S. 1536. An act to provide funds for cooperation with the public-school board at Covelo, Calif., in the construction of public-school buildings to be available to Indian children of the Round Valley Reservation, Calif.;

S. 1537. An act to provide funds for cooperation with the School Board of Shannon County, S. Dak., in the construction of a consolidated high-school building to be available to both white and Indian children;

S. 1539. An act relating to undelivered parcels of the first class;

S. 2105. An act to provide for an additional number of cadets at the United States Military Academy, and for other purposes; and

S. 1609. An act for the relief of the present leaders of the United States Navy Band and the band of the United States Marine Corps.

On June 10, 1935:

S. 742. An act for the relief of Charles A. Lewis;

S. 1027. An act for the relief of Dr. R. N. Harwood; and

S. J. Res. 92. Joint resolution making final disposition of records, files, and other property of the Federal Aviation Commission.

On June 11, 1935:

S. 448. An act to authorize a preliminary examination of Coquille River and its tributaries in the State of Oregon with a view to the control of its floods;

S. 449. An act to authorize a preliminary examination of Umpqua River and its tributaries in the State of Oregon, with a view to the control of its floods;

S. 905. An act for the relief of Edith N. Lindquist;

S. 1038. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of Elda Geer;

S. 1317. An act authorizing a preliminary examination of the Nehalem, Miami, Kilchis, Wilson, Trask, and Tillamook Rivers, in Tillamook County, Oreg., with a view to the controlling of floods; and

S. 2505. An act authorizing a preliminary examination of Sebewaing River, in Huron County, Mich., with a view to the controlling of floods.

On June 13, 1935:

S. 41. An act for the relief of the Germania Catering Co., Inc.;

S. 42. An act for the relief of Emmett C. Noxon;

S. 285. An act to reimburse the estate of Mary Agnes Roden;

S. 416. An act for the relief of Las Vegas Hospital Association, Las Vegas, Nev.;

S. 462. An act to authorize an extension of exchange authority and addition of public lands to the Willamette National Forest in the State of Oregon;

S. 535. An act for the relief of William Cornwell and others;

S. 558. An act for the relief of certain disbursing officers of the Army of the United States and for the settlement of an individual claim approved by the War Department;

S. 581. An act for the relief of Harold E. Seavey;

S. 1305. An act to further extend relief to water users on United States reclamation projects and on Indian irrigation projects;

S. 1474. An act for the relief of Paul H. Creswell;

S. 1487. An act for the relief of Mick C. Cooper;

S. 1513. An act to add certain lands to the Siskiyou National Forest in the State of Oregon;

S. 1712. An act to amend section 4878 of the United States Revised Statutes, as amended, relating to burials in national cemeteries;

S. 2287. An act to authorize the crediting of service rendered by personnel (active or retired) subsequently to June 30, 1932, in the computation of their active or retired pay after June 30, 1935;

S. 2467. An act for the retirement of William J. Stannard, leader of the United States Army Band; and

S. 2536. An act providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States.

AMENDMENT OF MIGRATORY BIRD HUNTING STAMP ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following action of the House of Representatives:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
June 13, 1935.

Resolved, That the House agree to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7982) to amend the Migratory Bird Hunting Stamp Act of March 16, 1934, and certain other acts relating to game and other wildlife, administered by the Department of Agriculture, and for other purposes, with the following amendment:

In the first line of page 2 of said amendment strike out "joint resolution" and insert "act."

Mr. NORBECK. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

SOCIAL SECURITY

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7260) to provide for the general welfare by establishing a system of Federal old-age benefits, and by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for aged persons, dependent and crippled children, maternal and child welfare, public health, and the administration of their unemployment compensation laws; to establish a Social Security Board; to raise revenue; and for other purposes.

Mr. WAGNER obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Bulow	Couzens	Guffey
Ashurst	Burke	Davis	Hale
Austin	Byrd	Dickinson	Harrison
Bachman	Byrnes	Donahey	Hastings
Bailey	Capper	Duffy	Hatch
Bankhead	Caraway	Fletcher	Hayden
Barkley	Chavez	Frazier	Johnson
Black	Clark	George	Keyes
Bone	Connally	Gerry	King
Borah	Coolidge	Gibson	La Follette
Brown	Copeland	Glass	Lewis
Bulkley	Costigan	Gore	Lonergan

Long	Murray	Reynolds	Trammell
McAdoo	Neely	Russell	Vandenberg
McCarran	Norbeck	Schall	Van Nuys
McGill	Norris	Schwellenbach	Wagner
McKellar	Nye	Sheppard	Walsh
McNary	O'Mahoney	Shipstead	Wheeler
Maloney	Overton	Smith	White
Minton	Pittman	Steiwer
Moore	Pope	Thomas, Okla.
Murphy	Radcliffe	Townsend

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has given the Senate so comprehensive an explanatory statement regarding the pending bill that I can add little. But as the sponsor of the measure, and as a long-time advocate of social insurance, I ask that the Senate bear with indulgence my remarks upon the subject.

ECONOMIC INSECURITY AS AN INDICTMENT OF AMERICA

Mr. President, social insecurity in its modern aspects has not been an offshoot of the depression. It has been a persistent problem since the dawn of the factory era, intensified by the increasing urbanization of American life and by the virtual disappearance of free farm lands in the West.

To grasp the full ethical and economic implications of this problem, we must indulge in a brief survey of our history since the Civil War. During that time our energy and genius built upon this continent a Nation of unparalleled economic strength. Our mechanical equipment became the most extensive and the most efficient in the world. Our fabulous resources seemed to insure us against the possibility of adversity. Our wealth doubled and redoubled until it exceeded the wildest flights of fancy. No accomplishment seemed too great for us to attain. We became at once the envy and the admiration of the universe, and a shining example for the ages yet to come.

If some prophet of old could have foreseen the material wealth with which we were to be blessed, what else might he have prophesied? He would have envisaged the worker liberated from the nerve-racking struggle for bread alone, secure against the peril of unemployment, enjoying opportunities to work under conditions calling forth creative intelligence, and enjoying ample leisure for the cultivation of family life and the enrichment of spiritual outlook. He would have seen the man who has become too old to work spending his declining days in mellow comfort, tasting neither the humiliation of charity nor the bitterness of unrequited efforts. He would have been sure that little children would be spared the gnawing hunger of poverty, and that society would recognize in full its obligation to care for the fatherless and the maimed.

But if this prophet had awakened during the period between 1922 and 1929, which was regarded as the era of unmatched prosperity, what a rude disillusionment would have been his. Three million unemployed, deprived even during so-called "good times" of the sacred human right to earn their bread, were being fed upon dogma about self-reliance and individual thrift. Fully 20,000,000 families were living in the cold cellars of poverty dug beneath the streets of our most prosperous cities. Countless old people were being buffeted from pillar to post, forced at best to rely upon the help of younger relatives whose own slender resources were scarcely equal to the task. Children without end were being denied the simple joys of carefree childhood, their minds handicapped by improper schooling, their bodies stunted by the relentless pressure of factory work. Misery and destitution were the sordid realities of every Main Street, not in a poverty stricken country, but in a land where the inequitable distribution of tremendous wealth was sharpening the tragic contrast between the House of Have and the House of Want.

Some people there were, it is true, who saw the solemn tragedies lying beneath the gilded surface of our national life. But their protests were ignored and their warnings were derided. As early as 1928 I had the bitter experience of encountering the public apathy which greeted my proposals for a survey of unemployment, for the creation of a Nation-wide job exchange system, and for the inauguration of a long-range public-works program. After the onslaught of depression, I introduced in 1930 and 1931 the first two measures designed to promote Federal encouragement of unemployment insurance laws in the several States. Containing essentially the same idea which has crystallized in the present bill, they were promptly buried in committee. Then I introduced the first resolution calling for a special senatorial investigation of the whole problem of unemployment insurance. Pursuant to it, a committee of three Senators held protracted hearings. The majority members wrote a report deprecating the potentialities of Federal action; and I filed a minority report again urging immediate legislation along the lines of the measure now before the Senate. It is gratifying to note that many Senators who were doubtful of the wisdom of this type of social legislation a few years ago are now its stanch and hearty advocates.

When future historians of the gilded age from which we have emerged seek a moral to adorn their story, they will find that social injustice brought the retribution of sure decline. The income of the masses, shriveled by the blight of wide spread unemployment and uncompensated old age, was not sufficient to buy the goods flowing from the ever expanding factories. The huge profits of the few, which could not be spent in self indulgence, were reinvested again and again in plants and machines. When the market became flooded with unsold surpluses, the depression came with the certainty of nightfall.

From that emergency we have been rescued by a program combining constructive action with enduring faith in the essential fortitude and strength of the American character. We now seek a new era of well being in which the social inequalities of the past will be driven forever from the scene. We seek a more even tempered and widely diffused economic enjoyment that will provide a bulwark against the resurgence of hard times. The social-security bill draws its inspiration from both of these objectives. It is a compound in which are blended elements of economic wisdom and of social justice.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE: LEGISLATIVE PHASE

At the very hub of social security is the right to have a job. Even in the care-free decade of the nineteen twenties, an average of 1,500,000 workers per year were care-worn and tormented by the visitation of unemployment. Between 1922 and 1933, 15 percent of our total man power remained idle and disdained. When 15,000,000 people walked the streets of despair in early 1933, we knew at last that the fall and rise of our national prosperity kept pace with the rise and fall of unemployment; and we knew that until we solved this baffling enigma, our bravest and sincerest efforts would spend themselves in vain.

There is no quick relief for unemployment that has reached its zenith, any more than there is a sure cure during the last stages of a malignant disease. But the common experience of many progressive countries has revealed a relatively humane and economical method of alleviating the sporadic or seasonal unemployment which occurs even during normal times. And in addition to its curative aspects, it is a method which serves as a check upon further unemployment. Needless to say, this remedy is unemployment insurance.

There are many reasons why unemployment insurance in the United States should be developed along State lines. The tremendous expanses of our territory and the infinite variety of our industrial enterprises create totally dissimilar conditions in different parts of the country. Besides, it would be unwise to fit an inflexible strait-jacket upon the entire Nation without testing by comparison in operation the two or three major proposals for unemployment insurance, each of which has elements of merit urged by divergent schools of reputable thought.

At the same time, the disheartening results of 50 years of agitation for unemployment insurance prove conclusively that there will be no substantial action unless the Federal Government plays its part. Less than one-half of 1 percent of the workers in this country are covered by the much-heralded private and voluntary plans for their protection. And so paralyzing has been the fear of unfair competition by backward States that only Wisconsin dared to proceed in splendid isolation by enacting an unemployment-insurance law. The very fact that four other States have taken the same course in the short period of time since the inception of this measure is the best token of the validity of Federal encouragement.

The social-security bill sets up two powerful Federal incentives to State action. In the first place, it appropriates $4,000,000 for the fiscal year beginning this June, and authorizes the appropriation of $49,000,000 for each succeeding year, to be allocated among the States in the form of subsidies for the administration of such unemployment-insurance laws as they may enact. These subsidies will be on the basis of need, taking due account of the population of the respective States, the number of persons covered by their unemployment-insurance laws, and other relevant factors.

As a second incentive to State action, the bill imposes a Federal excise tax upon the total pay roll of each employer engaging four or more workers. This tax is fixed at 1 percent for 1936, 2 percent for 1937, and 3 percent for each succeeding year. Against this imposition any employer may offset, up to 90 percent, whatever sums he contributes to pulsory unemployment-insurance funds created under the State law. Since the States will be anxious to draw this Federal tax back into their own borders, the natural result will be the enactment of unemployment-insurance laws in every State.

Practically no restrictions are placed upon the types of statutes that the States may enact. They may provide for State-wide pooled funds or for individual company reserves. They may exact contributions from employers, or from employees, or from both. They may add their own contributions if they desire to do so. The only important requirement is that the State law shall be genuinely protective, and that its revenues shall be devoted exclusively to the payment of insurance benefits.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE: ECONOMIC POTENTIALITIES

It is obvious that a 3-percent pay-roll tax cannot be a panacea for a burden of unemployment such as we have borne in the past. As contemplated in the present bill, its protective features would extend to only 24,000,000 people out of 48,000,000 gainfully employed. At best it would provide, after a waiting period of 4 weeks, 15 weeks of benefit payments to the unemployed, at a rate equal to about 50 percent of the working wage, but in no case more than $15. If the rate of unemployment between 1936 and 1950 should be the same as it was between 1925 and 1934, the total wage and salary loss in the covered group of workers would be $75,000,000,000, or over six times the sum that would be raised by a 3-percent pay-roll tax.

But such a simple analysis overlooks both the purpose and the indirect effects of unemployment insurance. In the first place, it is designed not to supplant, but rather to supplement the public-works projects which must absorb the bulk of persons who may be disinherited for long periods of time by private industry. It is designed to provide for intermittent, short term unemployment, a remedy that is more dignified, more humane, more certain, and more economical than emergency relief, with its inflated ballyhoo and its deflating effect upon the moral stamina of the recipients.

More important, unemployment insurance will serve a preventive as well as an ameliorative function. The mere focus of business attentiveness upon the problems of the jobless will tend to prolong work, just as the study of life insurance has tended to increase the length of the average life. The drive toward the ultimate goal of a stabilized industry will be quickened by the inauguration of a coordinated Nation-wide campaign against the most demoralizing of all economic evils. A provision in the present bill requires that the Federal tax rebate shall be used to encourage a close connection between State job-insurance laws and unemployment-exchange offices. This provision emphasizes the fact that the relief of existent unemployment is but a subordinate phase of the main task of providing work for all who are strong and willing.

The bill provides an even more specific incentive to business men to diminish the volume of unemployment. If a State law permits an employer to reduce the amount of his State contribution because of his good employment record, he may offset against his Federal tax not only the amount of his actual payment under the State law but also the amount of the reduction that he has won. For otherwise he would not benefit in the slightest by securing such a reduction. This special allowance is designated in the bill as an "additional credit."

At the same time it should be noted that the bill takes great pains to prevent any State from circumventing the law by allowing employers such reductions in their contributions as would enable them to recapture the Federal tax without setting up adequate safeguards against unemployment. Thus it is provided that a taxpayer who is contributing to a State-wide pooled fund shall receive an "additional credit" from the Federal Government only if the State reduction that he has won is based upon his comparatively good record during at least 3 years of actual compensation experience. Let us now suppose that a taxpayer is subject to a State law under which he guarantees to maintain the employment of a designated group of workers and contributes to a segregated guaranteed employment fund to cover breaches in his guaranty. In such case he would be allowed an "additional credit" only if his guaranty had been perfectly fulfilled in the past and if his guaranteed employment account amounts to at least 7½ percent of the pay roll that it protects. Finally, if a taxpayer is participating in a State system whereby each employer maintains an isolated reserve account for his own workers, his enjoyment of "additional credits" from the Federal Government will be hedged in by safeguards similar to those surrounding guaranteed accounts.

Added to its salutary effects upon the overt activities of business men, unemployment insurance will have a stabilizing effect upon industry by providing income in times of stress for those consumers who otherwise would be without purchasing power to patronize the markets. By way of illustration, we may examine the likely effects had the present bill become law in 1922. The 3-percent tax upon pay rolls, even if we assume, contrary to my own firm opinion, that an unemployment-insurance system might not have checked the business decline in the slightest, would have provided $10,000,000,000 for unemployment relief between 1922 and 1933. It would have provided an accumulative reserve of $2,000,000,000 in 1929. There can be little doubt that the prompt release of this reserve flood of purchasing power would have mitigated and abbreviated the downswing of the business cycle.

Contrary to these claims are the arguments advanced from time to time that the taxes involved in unemployment insurance would curtail the purchasing power of the public during prosperous times, and thus provoke the advent of depressions. But it should not be overlooked that business regression is encouraged, not by a general collapse of national purchasing power, but by an insufficient dispersion of purchasing power among masses of wage earners. A pay roll tax upon employers alone would intensify this maldistribution only upon the assumption that the tax would be shifted entirely to wage earners by means of lower wages or higher prices or both. To my mind such an assumption is based upon an overmechanical concept of economic forces. It accepts bodily the wage fund theory of the classical economists that real wages can be neither raised nor lowered by legislation. Its logical corollary is laissez faire. In truth, the various factors, including custom, bargaining power, and standards of living, that help to determine wage rates will not be nullified by the imposition of a pay roll tax. Moreover, the several States may add their contributions to unemployment insurance by means of the general taxing power, and thus may exercise their power to redistribute more justly rather than to concentrate income. Even if we assume that part of the cost of the insurance would be shifted to wage earners, the temporary reduction in their purchasing power would only be a small part of the increased purchasing power that would be returned to them in benefits when most needed.

Nor is there any ground upon which to rest the claim that unemployment insurance, by withdrawing money from circulation, might depress the level of business activity. Unemployment insurance funds are not buried under the ground. The present bill requires that all State funds, in order that contributors to them may qualify for Federal tax rebates, shall be deposited in separate accounts with the Secretary of the Treasury. Centralized management of this reservoir of purchasing power will have a tremendous stabilizing effect upon industrial operations and credit transactions. In addition, it will obviate the necessity of dumping securities upon an overburdened market when hard times call for the liquidation of unemployment reserves. Instead, the United States Government will simply take up the securities which have been issued to the depositing States. Or if the Federal Government has elected to issue non-negotiable obligations, it may pursue the alternative of canceling them as they are paid.

OLD AGE DEPENDENCY IN THE UNITED STATES

Partial insecurity in the prime of life is highly provocative of complete dependency in later years. The needy old are exonerated from the unjust stigma of improvidence by a study of income in the United States. It has been revealed that during the year 1929 about 6,000,000 families living in dire poverty were able to save nothing. Fifty-nine percent of all American families, who were earning less than $2,000 each, could save only 1.4 percent of their annual income. In contrast, a family earning $5,000 saved 17 percent of its income, while a family earning between $50,000 and $100,000 stored up 44 percent. Viewed in the large, 80 percent of the families in the United States owned only 2 percent of the savings, while the remaining 20 percent of the families accounted for 98 percent of the savings.

Even a momentary glimpse at these statistics makes it abundantly clear why about one-half of the total number of people in the United States over 65 years of age are dependent. Moreover, the situation is being constantly aggravated by the lengthening span of the average life, by the general rise in population, and by the technological changes driving the elderly worker from the factory. While only 3,000,000 inhabitants of this country were more than 65 years old in 1900, there are about 7,500,000 in this category today, there will be approximately 13,500,000 by 1960, and 19,000,000 by the end of the century. Thus we may expect within 25 years to be confronted by seven or eight million elderly folk without means of self-support.

The care of the old cannot be left indefinitely to the miserably weak pension laws which exist in only 33 States. Due to the unusual difficulties which localities always encounter when attempting to raise money, and to the general lethargy which surrounds social legislation until it receives some Federal impetus, the average monthly pension under State legislation is only $15.50 per month. At the present time, to the Nation's shame, every person over 65 years of age upon the pension rolls of the States is matched by three people upon the relief rolls.

TEMPORARY RELIEF: OLD AGE PENSIONS

To meet these pressing needs, the social security bill inaugurates a system of Federal subsidies to the States for old age pensions. For this purpose, there is appropriated $49,750,000 for the fiscal year 1936, and for each succeeding year there is authorized to be appropriated whatever amounts may be necessary to round out the plan. While these grants will be on an equal matching basis, they will in no case exceed $15 per month per person. This check upon Federal expenditure will in no wise circumscribe the limits of State activity. Those people who bewail that this bill in practice will limit pensions to $30 per month are shedding crocodile tears, because the average protection afforded today is less than half that sum; and because no evidence can be produced to show that Federal aid will prove an anchor rather than a propeller to progressive State action.

While a great degree of flexibility is permitted to State pension systems qualifying for Federal assistance, certain fundamental requirements must be observed. Relief must extend to every county in the State, nor can it be denied to any needy person who is a citizen of the United States and who has lived in the State for 1 year immediately preceding his application and for any 5 years during the 9 years preceding his application. This fusion of Federal and State responsibilities is along well established lines and has proved uniformly successful in this country.

The claim cannot be sustained that the cost of these pensions will be a greater burden than the country should bear. If we assume an average pension of $20 per month for each dependent person, this plan during the first year of its operation will cost the 48 States only $109,000,000, ranging from $11,000,000 in New York to $107,000 in Vermont. During the next 15 years, assuming the all-important fact that we enact contemporaneously the Federal old age benefit plan, the grand total of Federal and State expenditures for pensions will be only $2,445,000,000, or $163,000,000 per year. The high water mark will be about $1,200,000,000 in 1960, and will decline thereafter to a level of about $1,000,000,000 per year by 1980. Certainly these are not excessive sums for so great a task in a country as wealthy as ours.

In truth, the argument addressed to cost overlooks the simple fact that every civilized community does and must support its old and dependent people in some way. In this country we have been doing it largely by inefficient relief methods, by shabby pension systems, and by imposing burdens upon millions of younger members of families, with consequent impairment of their industrial efficiency, their morale, and their own opportunities for future independence. Our present method of dealing with the old is compounding the rate of old age dependency at terrific speed. More systematic treatment will involve a saving in material expenditures, a restoration of national self-esteem, and a salvaging of precious human values.

Fear has been expressed that the enactment of a comprehensive system of old age assistance would increase the number of persons upon the pension rolls. Long citations to this effect have been drawn from the experience of foreign countries. But granting the truth of this prediction, it is totally irrelevant. We might reduce the number of pensioners to zero by abolishing every pension law in every State. Of course, the enlargement of pension facilities will multiply the number of people receiving aid, just as the extension of workmen's compensation laws has increased the volume of relief against accidents. But pensions are no more the cause for poor people growing old than accident insurance is the cause for people getting hurt. Pensions do not create the evil; they merely recognize it and provide the most effective remedy.

PERMANENT RELIEF: RETIREMENT BENEFITS

However, sole reliance upon a system of old age gratuities might provoke unduly large increases in public expenditures. The cost would rise to $2,500,000,000 per year by 1980. The proportion of the total population dependent upon such assistance would rise from 15 percent in 1936 to 50 percent in 1957 and remain stable thereafter. For this reason it is necessary that the core of old age relief should be not gratuities but a systematic and actuarially sound system of earned old age benefits. Such a system, in addition to placing a governor upon general taxation, will provide an infinitely more humane method of dealing with the problem. Security after a life of work should be a matter of right, not of charity; it should be a certainty, not a mere expectancy.

In the long history of agitation for social insurance in this country, every proposal for consolidated public responsibility has been confronted by the plea that the matter should be left to the initiative of private enterprise. Thus it is now urged that all businesses possessing private pension systems should be exempted entirely from the provisions of Federal law. The best answer is experience. For a hundred years the way has been cleared for the development of private pension systems. But, aside from the railways, only about 2,000,000 people in the United States are within their purview. In many cases, even where a system exists, its protection is unfunded and uncertain. It is amazing to note that only about 4 percent of the workers covered by such plans actually draw any benefits upon retirement. A rapid labor turnover, or a dismissal for one cause or another, cuts short their expectancy before its maturity. Students of this problem tell us that the encouragement of private pension systems promotes the antisocial practice of discharging men in middle age and is closely allied with the company dominated union. Despite claims to the contrary, no private system provides certain benefits to the run of average workers which are superior to those contemplated by the pending bill.

But while the Federal plan of old age benefits proposed under this bill is uniform in its application, there is nothing that would prevent any private system which might be more liberal in its terms from supplementing the public system. The accounting problems involved in such adjustments are well known and relatively simple.

The social security bill therefore provides a Federal system of old age benefits, computed and maintained upon an actuarial basis. Beginning January 1, 1942, any employee will be entitled to retire upon reaching the age of 65 or at any time thereafter, and to receive upon retirement monthly benefit payments from an "old age fund" in the United States Treasury. These benefits will represent a fixed percentage of the worker's earnings between January 1, 1937 and the time he reaches the age of 65. They will thus depend upon his average salary and his period of service subsequent to the inception of the system. Special allowances in the form of higher rates are to be made for the older workers of today, who will retire within a comparatively short period of time. The plan will cover employees of all grades and salaries, but that part of a man's annual income above the first $3,000 will be ignored in calculating benefits.

A few simple figures will convey an idea of the amount of protection afforded by this system. In the typical case of a man who works 40 years after the passage of the proposed law, the monthly benefit payment will be $32.50 if his average salary has been $50, $51.25 if it has been $100, $61.25 if it has been $150, and $71.25 if it has been $200. In the event a person dies before attaining the age of 65, or before receiving in benefits an amount equal to at least 3½ percent of his earnings between the inception of the system and his 65th birthday, his estate will receive an amount sufficient to bring his total receipts up to 3½ percent of such earnings.

The old age fund for the payment of these benefits will be maintained by annual appropriations beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937. These appropriations will be based upon actuarial principles and mortality tables, and will be sufficient to build up an adequate reserve and to pay 3 percent interest thereon.

Only those who know the frightful social cost of old age dependency will envisage in entirety the human values that will be salvaged by the establishment of this system. And it must not be overlooked that industry will receive its full measure of benefit. The incentive to the retirement of superannuated workers will improve efficiency standards, will make new places for the strong and eager, and will increase the productivity of the young by removing from their shoulders the uneven burden of caring for the old. The purchasing power that will result from a flood of benefit payments, beginning with $52,000,000 in 1942 and rising gradually to $3,511,000,000 in 1980 will have an incalculable effect upon the maintenance of industrial stability.

VOLUNTARY ANNUITIES

To provide opportunities for self-protection to persons of modest means who are excluded from the provisions of the Federal benefit plan, and who do not want to rely upon the gratuitous pensions, the bill contemplates the sale of annuity bonds by the Federal Government. These shall have a maturity value not in excess of $100.

PROTECTION OF THE YOUNG, THE MAIMED, AND THE SICK

Certainly the depression that has affected the strong could not have been expected to overlook the weak. Seven million four hundred thousand children under 16 years of age are now members of families upon the relief rolls. Only 109,000 families in the United States are receiving aid in the form of mothers' pensions under State laws, while at least 300,000 families are in need of such assistance. These pensions, where in effect, range as low as $7.29 per month per family, and are paid in only one-half of the counties within the States in which they operate. In addition, there are 300,000 homeless children, 200,000 new delinquents every year, and perhaps 500,000 who are crippled. For all these unfortunate groups, as well as for public health, maternal aid, and the care of the blind, the social security bill makes modest appropriations along the well developed lines of Federal subsidies to the States. These grants will be extended primarily upon a matching basis in order to stimulate the States to action, but they will take full account of the special needs of those localities which are genuinely without capacity to help themselves.

FINANCIAL ASPECTS

The total cost of all of these minor expenditures for the next 15 years will be less than $2,000,000,000. I have referred earlier to the special tax for unemployment insurance. Aside from old age pensions, which will be supported by general revenues, the main outgo will be in connection with the Federal old age benefits. To cover this, two types of taxes are imposed.

First, every employer is to pay an excise tax upon his total pay roll, but no single salary will figure in this computation to an extent greater than $3,000 per year. This tax will begin at 1 percent for the calendar year 1937, and will rise by one-half percent every 3 years until it reaches its maximum of 3 percent for 1949 and subsequent years.

The second tax is to be levied against wages and paid by employees, at the same rate and upon the same terms as the employers' tax. Thus the total burden upon each employer will be exactly the same as that imposed upon all of his employees.

The two revenue measures will yield over $15,000,000,000 by 1950, while the cost of old age benefits until that time will total only $2,445,000,000. Allowing for interest, the reserve fund will reach $14,000,000,000 within 15 years.

CONSTITUTIONAL VALIDITY OF THE MEASURE

In examining the constitutionality of this measure we may pass very quickly over the sections which provide for outright Federal subsidies to the States for old age assistance, for child welfare, for unemployment relief, for public health, and for maternal care. Analogous grants have formed a part of the fabric of our Government for half a century. Since the Maternity Act of 1921 was upheld in the case of Massachusetts against Mellon, found in Two hundred and Sixty-two United States Reports, page 47, I do not believe that a single reputable authority has questioned the plenary power of Congress to extend such assistance.

Let us turn then to the part of the bill which provides for Federal benefit payments to employees retiring at the age of 65. It is clear that no distinction ever has been, or logically can be, drawn between Federal subsidies to the States as organic entities and Federal aid to large classes of stricken individuals. The test in either case is whether the grant is within the authority of Congress to appropriate money.

Our Constitution provides, in part, that the Congress shall have power—

> To lay and collect taxes * * * to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

It is now generally agreed that this general welfare clause is a restriction upon the power to tax rather than an independent grant of legislative authority. But it has been equally clear for at least 75 years that the power to tax is coextensive with the power to spend; and that both, far from being circumscribed by the enumerated powers of Congress, extend to every tender solicitude for the general welfare.

Hundreds of illustrations come readily to mind where unchallenged expenditures of Congress have been far more tenuously linked to the general welfare than those contemplated by the present bill. Congress has appropriated money for the relief of the distressed inhabitants of other lands. Can there be less power to ameliorate the wide spread distress of our own people? Congress has devoted funds to the extinction of the Mediterranean fruit fly. Was that fly a greater scourge than unemployment? Congress has provided generously for the victims of Mississippi River floods. Are these floods more constant or more dreadful than the advent of uncared for old age? Such comparisons invite no speculation.

Having probed the question of appropriations, let us now examine the tax sections of the bill. It is indisputable that the tax imposed upon pay rolls and wages by section 8 is a genuine revenue measure. It is calculated to raise $300,000,000 during the first year of its existence, and $2,000,000,000 annually within a dozen years. And when a genuine revenue measure is in question, the power of Congress to tax is practically unrestrained. In Flint against Stone Tracy Co., reported in Two Hundred and Twenty United States Reports, page 107, the Supreme Court said:

The Constitution contains only two limitations on the right of Congress to levy excise taxes; they must be levied for the public welfare and are required to be uniform throughout the United States.

In Brushaber against Union Pacific Railroad, found on the first page of the Two Hundred and Fortieth volume of United States Reports, the highest tribunal added that the authority of Congress to tax "is exhaustive and embraces every conceivable power of taxation."

The Flint case also brushed aside the argument that an excise tax might be invalid because it singled out specific groups and excluded others. It was there said:

As to the objection that certain organizations, labor, agricultural, and horticultural, fraternal and benevolent societies, loan and building associations, and those for religious, charitable, or educational purposes, are exempted from the operation of the law, we find nothing in that to invalidate the tax As we have had frequent occasion to say, the decisions of this Court from an early date to the present time have emphasized the right of Congress to select the objects of excise taxation, and within this power to tax some and leave others untaxed, must be included the right to make exemptions such as are found in this act.

Viewed in isolation, there can be no doubt that all of the excise taxes embodied in the social-security bill are a valid exercise of congressional power. The only serious question is whether they may be set aside on the ground that their real intent is to stimulate social insurance laws by the several States, or that they form part of a designing Federal scheme to invade the provinces reserved for State action. But no constitutional principle is more firmly embedded in case law than that no concomitant motive will invalidate an otherwise valid exercise of the taxing power. In Veazie Bank against Fenno, reported on page 533 of the eighth volume of Wallace, the Supreme Court upheld an act of Congress levying a 10 percent tax upon bank notes issued by State banks, although the clear intent and the accomplishment was to drive these notes out of existence. In McCray against United States, One Hundred and Ninety-fifth United States Reports, page 27, sustaining tax measures discriminating against the sale of yellow oleomargarine, Mr. Justice White said:

It is self-evident that on their face they levy an excise tax. That being their necessary scope and operation, it follows that the acts are within the grant of Federal power.

The most persuasive opinion, however, is contained in the Two Hundred and Forty-ninth volume of United States Reports, at page 86. In the case of United States against Doremus upholding the constitutionality of the Harrison Narcotic Act, the Court said:

An act may not be declared unconstitutional because its effect may be to accomplish another purpose as well as the raising of revenue. If the legislation is within the taxing authority of Congress—that is sufficient to sustain it.

And further corroboration by Mr. Justice Sutherland, writing for the Court, came in Magmano Co. v. Hamilton (292 v. c. 40), where it was said:

From the beginning of our Government, the courts have sustained taxes although imposed with the collateral intent of effecting ulterior ends which, considered apart, were beyond the constitutional power of the lawmakers to realize by legislation directly addressed to their accomplishment.

The further objection may be raised that the excise tax and the income tax levied by section 8 are invalid because the measure taken as a whole indicates rather strongly that these taxes may be used to defray the costs of the special benefits to workers retiring at the age of 65. While the Supreme Court has not decided this question, the constitutionality of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which went much further by directing that the proceeds of the taxes provided for therein should be devoted to specific purposes elaborated in the same act, was maintained by Judge Brewster of the United States District Court for Massachusetts. In the case of Franklin Process Co. against Hoosac Mills Corporation, located at page 552 of the eighth volume of the Federal Supplement, we read:

The act, taken as a whole, leaves no doubt of the legislative intent to levy the tax for the purposes of defraying the expenses of administering the act and paying the debts incurred for benefit payments. * * * If * * * it should appear on the face of the act that it was calculated to benefit only private interests, it would be the duty of the court, I take it, to declare the tax unlawful. It is not, however, within the province of the court to substitute its judgment for that of Congress upon the effect of a particular measure manifestly designed to promote the general welfare of the people of the United States. It is no objection that individuals will derive profit from the consummation of the legislative policy. Individuals benefit from every bounty, subsidy, or pension provided for by statute, whether Federal or State.

The famous child-labor tax case, embalmed in the Two Hundred and Fifty-ninth volume of United States Reports, beginning on page 20, has been cited in opposition, but it is not applicable. There the Supreme Court said:

In the light of all these features of the act, a court must be blind not to see that the so-called "tax" is imposed to stop the employment of children within the age limits prescribed. Its prohibitory and regulatory effects and purposes are palpable. All others can see and understand this. How can we properly shut our minds to it? * * * So here the so-called "tax" is a penalty to coerce the people of a State to act as Congress wishes them to act in respect of a matter completely the business of the State government under the Federal Constitution.

In marked contrast, the social security bill embraces not a penalty but a series of genuine tax provisions. Nor does it embrace a single regulatory feature extending within the boundaries of the several States, except the regulations incidental to the collection of all taxes.

The tax embraced in section 9 of the bill involves exactly the same considerations. Its only additional feature is the rebate allowed to taxpayers who contribute to unemployment insurance funds created under State laws. But this allowance falls squarely under the protection of Florida against Mellon, as reported in Two Hundred and Seventy-three United States Reports, at page 12. There the Federal estate tax, under the Revenue Act of 1926, allowed an exemption, up to 80 percent, based upon the taxpayers' subjection to similar estate taxes under State law. Florida, having no such law, claimed the act an unconstitutional discrimination designed to coerce the States to pattern their statutes upon the Federal Government's ideal. These objections were overruled, Mr. Justice Sutherland stating in the opinion of the Supreme Court that—

The contention that the Federal tax is not uniform because other States impose inheritance taxes, while Florida does not, is without merit. Congress cannot accommodate its legislation to the conflicting or dissimilar laws of the several States nor control the diverse conditions to be found in the various States which necessarily work unlike results from the enforcement of the same tax. All that the Constitution (art. 1, sec. 8, cl. 1) requires is that the law shall be uniform in the sense that by its provisions the rule of liability shall be the same in all parts of the United States.

There remains to be considered only the extent to which the very recent decision of the Supreme Court in Railroad Retirement Board against the Alton Railroad Co. affects the Federal old-age benefit system. Insofar as that case went upon the ground that there was no direct relationship between the regulation of interstate commerce and the retirement of superannuated workers, it has no bearing here. The present bill is based not upon the commerce power but upon the power to tax and to spend for public purposes. But it may be argued that the decision in the Alton case threatens the present project with extinction under the due-process clause, since it held that the pooled funds arrangement embodied in the railroad retirement law violated the fifth amendment. But the Supreme Court in that case was tremendously influenced by the specific provisions of the particular pooling system under fire, particularly in its application to past periods of service, and it is far from certain that the Court intended to strike down every Congressional attempt to spread the incidence of major industrial risks.

It is doubly hard to believe that the Court desired to sound the death knell of all forms of social insurance, in view of its broad language in Malton Timber Co. v. Washington (243 U. S. 219), upholding a State workmen's compensation act.

The opinion said:

> To the criticism that carefully managed plants are in effect required to make good the losses arising through the negligence of their competitors, it is sufficient to say that the act recognizes that no management, however careful, can afford immunity from personal injuries to employees in hazardous occupations, and prescribes that negligence is not to be the determinative of the question of responsibility of the employer or the industry. Taking the fact that accidental injuries are inevitable, in connection with the impossibility of foreseeing when, or in what particular plant or industry they will occur, we deem that the State acted within its power in declaring that no employer should conduct such an industry, without making fairly apportioned contributions adequate to maintain a public fund for indemnifying injured employees and the dependents of those killed, irrespective of the particular plant in which the accident might happen to occur.

In my opinion, this decision is precisely applicable to old age and unemployment insecurity. But irrespective of the shadows that the Alton case may cast upon the validity of pooled funds, there is the further consideration that the social-security bill makes no provisions for pooling as that term has been understood. The old age benefits are paid, not from a pool, but from an account fed by appropriations from the general funds of the United States. If this procedure constitutes pooling within the prohibition of the Alton case, then it is hard to conceive of a Federal expenditure that would merit the sanction of the Supreme Court.

The decision of the Supreme Court in the case of A. L. A. Schechter Poultry Corporation against United States invalidating certain features of the National Industrial Recovery Act has no application to the pending bill, which contemplates neither delegation of power nor the extension of Federal authority under the commerce clause.

The social-security bill embraces objectives that have driven their appeal to the conscience and intelligence of the entire Nation. We must take the old people who have been disinherited by our economic system and make them free men in fact as well as in name. We must not let misfortune twist the lives of the young. We must tear down the house of misery in which dwell the unemployed. We must remain aware that business stability and prosperity are the foundation of all our efforts. In all these things we are united, and in this unity we shall move forward to an era of greater security and happiness.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New York a question.

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I understand that, under the proposed plan, if a State put up its $15 per person, the United States would contribute its $15, so that the State could pay the person above the specified age $30 a month.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] refers only to the old-age-pension feature of the bill.

Mr. LONG. I understand. The point I wish to make is this. Let us take a State like Mississippi. The taxes of the State of Mississippi are already so high that half the property in that State was advertised for sale at a tax sale a year or so ago. If they should meet the requirements of the $15 to every person within the pensionable age it would require taxes for pensions alone in that State in excess of the total taxes now collected by the State of Mississippi, and that is only a small part of the bill, as the Senator says. I shall propose an amendment to the bill, on Monday, perhaps—I hope to have it looked over by that time by some parties whom I wish to consult—so that these benefits may be paid without taxing any laboring man, without taxing any poor man, without a State having to tax its property. I will propose that the Federal Government shall furnish the States the money with which to pay the old-age pensions, and other things of the kind, by levying a graduated tax only on those, wherever they may live, whose wealth is in excess of 100 times the average family fortune, and graduate it from that figure up.

In other words, under the amendment, which I hope I may have the support of the Senator from New York in having adopted, I think we can actually grant the benefits proposed under the bill without imposing burdens upon the people to whom we are supposed to be giving benefits, by levying a graduated tax to be paid only by those whose fortunes begin at not less than 100 times the average family fortune.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, I am not in a position either to support or refuse to support the proposed amendment until I have a chance to read it.

Mr. LONG. I know that.

Mr. WAGNER. Under the old-age-pension feature of the bill, the money is to be paid in entirety by the taxpayers of the United States and of the States.

Mr. LONG. I understand. I do not expect the Senator to commit himself. I know his heart is already open on this kind of a matter, and I want to ask him to keep his mind open.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana permit me to ask the Senator from New York a question?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. There are some organizations, some incorporations, which are already operating certain pension plans of their own. Are they taken into consideration in the bill? In other words, will the people who have been for years participating in plans which have been in successful operation lose all they have been entitled to?

Mr. WAGNER. So far as past acts are concerned, any potential benefits that have accrued to workers through contribution by employers or employees, or both, are in no way affected by this bill. Any worker retiring at any time in the future may receive in full whatever has been stored up in his behalf. The only question is whether employers, by continuing their contributions to private systems in the future, should be allowed to escape the provisions of this bill. I strongly urge that they should not. These private systems are not extensive in the United States, and a study shows that only about 4 percent of the workers under them actually draw benefits. In many cases men are discharged in middle life and never receive the benefits.

In addition, the private systems increase the immobility of the workers. I think a system that makes a man free to leave his employment and still enjoy a pension in old age is preferable to one that glues him to a particular job. But there is nothing in the bill that prevents an employer from being more generous with his workers than the Federal plan requires. He may easily supplement the Federal plan with one of his own.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the question of the Senator from Florida leads me to ask another question of the Senator from New York, going, I think, a little further along the line of the Senator's question.

Let us take a concrete case. I understand the Pennsylvania Railroad has a pension system. I do not know anything about its details, but I am assuming that it has been very successful, a system in which the employees contribute a portion of the funds from which the employees receive pensions after retirement.

If a man had been an employee of the Pennsylvania Railroad for 25 or 30 years at the time this proposed law went into effect, he would have a very considerable interest in that pension system. What effect would the enactment of this measure have on that man and on that system?

Mr. WAGNER. There is no absolute obligation that the railroad pay the pension. It is a pure gratuity, and the promise may be revoked before fulfillment.

Mr. NORRIS. Then perhaps we ought to take an example a little different from that. As I have said, I am not familiar with this pension matter, but I should like to ask the Senator this question. Under some of the systems where the employer has been contributing, as well as the employee, where the employee has been contributing for a number of years, and old age is about to come upon him, and he has a direct interest in the fund, what is going to happen to him?

Mr. WAGNER. There is nothing to interfere with an employer paying at any time in the future whatever pensions have accrued due to action already undertaken. And as to future undertakings, he has a perfect right to supplement whatever money may come out of the Federal pension funds.

Mr. NORRIS. Let us take a concrete case. The proposed law would provide for levying a tax on both the employer and the employee, running ultimately to 3 percent. Under the old system, we will assume, it was something different.

Mr. WAGNER. The employee has no assurance under the old system.

Mr. NORRIS. I know he has no assurance, but even if he has no assurance, it has been operating for a good many years, a great many people are getting benefits from it, and no one would want to destroy it if it is possible to avoid it. What would happen in that kind of a case?

Mr. WAGNER. In the first place these voluntary associations are not as widespread as the Senator assumes.

Mr. NORRIS. That may be true. I am asking the question, I may say to the Senator, not as a critic; I am as much in favor of the proposed legislation as the Senator is. However, I do not want to do any harm to any other system, which may involve both the employer and employee, since they have invested money in a fund or something of the kind, which would make it unfair, for instance, to levy an additional tax upon those people.

Mr. WAGNER. There is no additional tax, because these taxes operate only in the future. The employer is at liberty not to continue his private contributions in the future. Nothing destroys what he has done in the past, or prevents the employees from reaping the benefits of what he has done. All this bill provides is that, as to the future, the worker will have the absolutely sure protection of a public system.

Mr. NORRIS. I see that.

Mr. WAGNER. Whereas under these private systems the worker depends upon a mere matter of generosity.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that.

Mr. WAGNER. If the firm fails, the employee loses his pension.

Mr. NORRIS. That is true.

Mr. WAGNER. But there is nothing to interfere with an employer who may desire to be more generous than the law.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that.

Mr. WAGNER. That is all that happens.

Mr. NORRIS. That does not answer the question, if the Senator will allow me to say so, in the particular case I cited.

Mr. WAGNER. There is nothing to destroy such a system as the Senator assumes, except that in the future the employer and the employee are taxed to help finance the public system.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope there is nothing to destroy it, but if they are paying under a system which has been in operation for years, and then they are called upon to pay into this system in addition to that, it might mean a burden which would be unfair.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator refers to the employee?

Mr. NORRIS. And the employer.

Mr. WAGNER. There is no double payment, because the employer can wind up the old system. As to what has already been paid under it, the worker has a vested right to whatever contributions he has made. He does not lose that money.

Mr. NORRIS. If he had such a vested right, he would not get it under this bill; he would get it as a matter of law. There may be some systems under which he would not.

Mr. WAGNER. An effort will be made upon this floor to perpetuate private systems in the future; but I think it is a very undesirable thing.

Mr. NORRIS. I think I agree with the Senator. I do not want to do anything to interfere with the operation of this measure, which I think is one of the most forward steps we have taken in a great many years, but, at the same time, I should hate to have the system injure other systems, some of which, in years past, have done a magnificent work.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not see how this plan can possibly injure or interfere with what these private systems have done, or with money already paid in to pay future benefits. These benefits may still be paid. There are bound to be some minor difficulties of adjustment, just as there were in relation to the workmen's compensation laws. At the time they were adopted there were some States where workers were paid greater compensation for injuries under the private plans than were provided by the new laws. But in order to protect all the other workers, it was necessary to pass mandatory legislation.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be inserted in the RECORD at this point a very illuminating article written by Mr. Edwin E. Witte, executive director Committee on Economic Security, on the question of private pension plans.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

SOME REASONS WHY EMPLOYERS MAINTAINING INDUSTRIAL RETIREMENT SYSTEMS SHOULD NOT BE EXEMPTED FROM THE TAX IMPOSED IN TITLE VIII OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

(By Edwin E. Witte, executive director Committee on Economic Security, June 13, 1935)

I. RELATIVELY FEW EXISTING PRIVATE INDUSTRIAL RETIREMENT SYSTEMS GIVE AS ADEQUATE PROTECTION TO THE EMPLOYEES THEY INCLUDE AS THEY WILL RECEIVE UNDER TITLE II OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Up-to-date information regarding industrial pension plans is very scant. The exhaustive study by Murray W. Latimer, Industrial Pensions Systems in the United States and Canada, brings the story down only to the early months of 1932. Since then there has been a considerable increase in the number of group annuity policies issued by insurance companies; and despite some abandondonments, some increases in the total number of industrial pension plans. In May 1932 there were, according to Latimer, 434 industrial pension plans, exclusive of railroad companies. Firms having such plans employed approximately 2,000,000 employees. Mr. Forster testified in the Senate hearings on the Social Security Act that there are now in the neighborhood of 600 industrial pension plans applicable to a total of between two and three million employees. Three hundred of these plans involve insurance through insurance companies, and, according to Mr. Forster, these plans apply to 1,000,000 employees. The information furnished by the Equitable Life Assurance Society, which is included in the Senate hearings on page 725, agrees fairly well with this estimate of Mr. Forster's as to the number of group annuity plans which are insured through insurance companies, reporting that there were 325 such plans in operation in December 1934. The number of employees reported covered, however, was very much smaller than estimated by Mr. Forster, being only 290,000.

The 600, or thereabouts, pension plans now in operation differ greatly as to their provisions. The following general statements, however, are believed to accurately summarize, in general terms, some of the principal features of these plans:

1. Many industrial pension plans have no reserves whatsoever, or only very inadequate reserves. This statement does not apply to the 325 plans which are insured through the insurance companies, and also does not apply to some of the noninsured plans. While the insured plans are one-half of the total number, they have only about one-tenth of the employees covered in industrial pension plans.

2. The benefits payable under a majority of the industrial pension plans are less than those to which employees will become entitled under title II of the Social Security Act. Under title II the annuity rate is one-half of 1 percent per month (6 percent per year) of the first $3,000 of the earnings of the employee during his industrial lifetime; one-twelfth of 1 percent per month (1 percent per year) of the earnings between $3,000 and $45,000; and one twenty-fourth of 1 percent per month (one-half of 1 percent per year) of the earnings in excess of $45,000. In practically all cases this figures out as an annual annuity of at least 1½ percent of the employee's total earnings. Latimer's study of more than 400 industrial pension plans in 1932 revealed that the majority of these plans provide for an annuity (annual) of 1 percent per year, and only 25 percent have an annuity rate of above 1½ percent.

3. Few, if any, of the existing industrial pension plans make any provisions for the transfer of credits when an employee leaves employment to take work elsewhere. The most liberal of the plans provides that this employee shall in such a case get back the money he personally contributed; in no case does the employee get all of the contributions standing to his credit unless he remains with the company until age of retirement.

4. Practically all industrial pension plans provide for payment of annuity benefits only to employees who remain in employment until they reach the retirement age (with the variation that many plans provide for payment of death benefits to the estates of employees who die before reaching the retirement age). Fully one-half of all industrial employees lose their jobs or retire voluntarily before they reach age 65. Under the existing industrial pension plans such employees who quit work or voluntarily retire before they reach the retirement age get no benefits at all, except for the rate, in some cases, of the money they themselves have contributed.

5. Most of the industrial pension plans can be discontinued at the option of the employer. This applies particularly to uninsured plans, which almost invariably are noncontractual. It is well-settled law that employees have no redress when employers discontinue or modify industrial pension plans, even if they have already been retired on a pension.

II. THERE IS NOTHING IN THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT (AS A MATTER OF LAW) WHICH WILL COMPEL ANY EXISTING PLAN TO BE DISCONTINUED OR WHICH WILL IN ANY MANNER AFFECT THE RETIREMENT ALLOWANCES OF EMPLOYEES ALREADY PENSIONED

The question at issue is one of tax exemption, not of the right to continue industrial pension plans. The Social Security Act does not outlaw industrial pension plans or regulate them in any manner. Employers may feel that they cannot pay the taxes imposed in title VIII and also continue their industrial pension plans, but they are not prevented from doing so.

With regard to employees already retired, not only is there nothing in the bill which would require employers to discontinue or modify the pension grants already made, but it would be outrageous for them to use this bill as an excuse for doing so. Under a proper industrial pension plan reserves have been created for the payment of the pensions to people who have been retired. Under most of the existing plans the employers can discontinue the pensions at any time, but if they use the Social Security Act as an excuse for doing so they are exhibiting gross bad faith.

III. WHETHER OR NOT EMPLOYEES ARE EXEMPTED FROM THE TAX IMPOSED IN TITLE VIII, ALL OR NEARLY ALL OF THE EXISTING INDUSTRIAL PENSION PLANS WILL HAVE TO BE FUNDAMENTALLY ALTERED

It is inconceivable that Congress will grant exemptions to industrial pension plans which do not provide for transfer of credits or payment of benefits to employees who leave employment before the retirement age. Few, if any, of the existing plans provide for such transfer of credits. Most of the uninsured plans further provide that the employers may discontinue these plans at their option, and these clauses will certainly have to be eliminated before the Social Security Board can make the finding that these plans give as liberal benefits as those under the Social Security Act. Changes in these provisions will necessitate changes also in the rate of contributions or the benefit scale, or both, since the cost of the industrial pension plans is figured on the assumption that the great majority of all persons hired will never qualify for pensions. In short, all or practically all existing industrial pension plans will have to be fundamentally recast whether the employers are exempted from the tax in title VIII or not.

IV. IT WILL NOT BE APPRECIABLY, IF AT ALL, MORE DIFFICULT TO ALTER THE EXISTING INDUSTRIAL PENSION PLANS TO GIVE BENEFITS SUPPLEMENTAL TO THOSE UNDER TITLE II THAN TO ALTER THESE PLANS TO MEET THE CONDITIONS WHICH MUST BE IMPOSED IF EMPLOYERS ARE TO BE EXEMPTED FROM THE TAX IN TITLE VIII

A considerable number of firms with industrial pension plans have already announced that if the Social Security Act is passed they will alter their present plans to give only supplemental benefits to those which will be received by employees under the provisions of title II. Progressive employers will gain many advantages through such supplemental benefit plans. To set up such supplemental plans will require extensive changes in the present industrial pension plans, but there are no insurmountable obstacles. Mr. Folsom of the Eastman Kodak Co. has stated that in France this company maintains an industrial pension plan supplemental to the governmental plan and has had no difficulty with this plan.

As noted under III above, all or nearly all existing industrial pension plans will have to be very materially modified even if an amendment is adopted to exempt employers who maintain approved plans from the tax imposed in title VIII. These changes will at least, in many cases, have to be quite as extensive as those which are necessary to convert the existing plans into plans giving supplemental benefits to those provided under the Social Security Act.

V. THE EXEMPTION OF EMPLOYERS HAVING INDUSTRIAL PENSION PLANS FROM THE TAX IMPOSED IN TITLE VIII IS UNFAIR TO OTHER EMPLOYERS

In all amendments which have been proposed, employers are not required to elect whether they wish to be exempted for all their employees or to be included within the provisions of the Social Security Act. The amendments proposed contemplate that some of the employees only of the exempted employers are to be outside of the act. This is done on the theory that the employees shall be left free to determine for themselves whether the industrial pension plan is more favorable to them or the Social Security Act.

Actually, most industrial pension plans treat all employees alike, which means all employees either are better or worse off under the industrial pension system than under the Social Security Act. The freedom of an individual employee to choose under which plan he will come is inserted in the proposed amendments, not for the benefit of the employees, but for the benefit of the employers. Under the Social Security Act a higher percentage for computing annuities applies to employees who have relatively small total earnings. This gives an advantage to the employees who make contributions for a relatively short time—that is, to the workers who are now half old. If one of the proposed exemption amendments is adopted and individual employees are allowed to choose which plan they prefer, it is very natural that the older employees will be the ones who are brought under the Social Security Act. These employees will get a disproportionate share of the benefits and the employers who have the industrial pension plans will thereby escape a part of the liability which they ought to help to bear.

VI. EMPLOYERS WILL GAIN NOTHING THROUGH EXEMPTION, EXCEPT INSOFAR AS THEY ARE ABLE TO TRANSFER THE BURDEN OF PROVIDING PENSIONS FOR THEIR OLDER EMPLOYEES TO THE NATIONAL FUND

Under existing plans which are at all adequate the rate of contributions required from employers is at least 3 percent. This is the maximum rate that employers will have to pay under the Social Security Act, and that rate will not apply until 1949.

The only way that employers can gain through exemption is through having only their younger employees in the industrial pension plans while the older workers are within the national system. Through such a method employers can pay higher benefits to their younger workers because they escape the accrued liability for their older employees. As noted previously, however, this is at the expense of other employers who operate without an exemption.

VII. EXEMPTION OF INDUSTRIAL PENSION PLANS LEAVES THE DOOR OPEN TO GRAVE ABUSES OF EMPLOYMENT POLICIES

Where employers have private industrial pension plans they can greatly reduce the cost of such plans through employing as few workers of middle age or older as possible. The labor unions have often claimed that this is a policy of many of the firms which now have industrial pension plans. Whether this claim is correct or not, it is evident that such abuses are possible, and there is nothing in any amendments proposed which in any manner guards against this danger.

In this connection it should be noted that the arguments which can legitimately be made in support of individual employer unemployment reserves do not apply to private industrial pension plans. Individual employer accounts in unemployment compensation are advocated because they are expected to reduce unemployment since the employers must pay for the cost of their own unemployment. In industrial pension plans employers will likewise try to keep down costs, and can do so by employing as few older workers as possible, or by getting these older workers to come under the national system. Old age, however, is a very different risk from unemployment, inasmuch as everybody gets old. While it is socially desirable that unemployment should be reduced to a minimum, it is socially undesirable that the workers past middle age should be barred from employment.

VIII. THE ADOPTION OF AN EXEMPTION AMENDMENT WILL VERY GREATLY INCREASE THE DIFFICULTIES OF ADMINISTERING THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

One great difficulty will be to determine whether an industrial pension plan does or does not provide benefits which are more liberal than those which are provided under title II of the Social Security Act. An industrial pension plan, for instance, may allow annuities at a higher rate than does title II, but may apply (as is common) only to employees who have been with the firm for 6 months, a year, or other specified period of time. Is such a plan more liberal than title II? Similarly, an industrial pension plan may make no provisions for death benefits, although being distinctly more liberal than title II in regard to annuity allowances. Many other similar questions are certain to arise, and the Social Security Board will face an almost impossible task in trying to measure equivalents.

Another factor which will greatly increase the administrative difficulties is the necessity for including in any exemption amendment provisions governing taxes or credits when employees leave the employment of exempted firms. Such provisions are absolutely essential since the purpose of the Social Security Act is to provide old-age security for all industrial workers. If an exemption is allowed, there must either be a provision for the transfer of the accumulated reserve funds or for back payment of the taxes which the exempted employers would have had to pay on account of the employees who have left their employment and have come into the national fund. In either case, the computations will be most difficult. Transfers from plant to plant are very common in American industry, and in the normal case occur many times during the life of an industrial worker.

IX. THE ADOPTION OF AN EXEMPTION AMENDMENT WOULD PROBABLY MAKE TITLE VIII UNCONSTITUTIONAL

The constitutionality of the tax imposed in title VIII depends upon whether this is a genuine tax levy or a subterfuge for an unconstitutional regulation of intrastate commerce. If an exemption is allowed from the tax in title VIII to employers who establish approved industrial pension plans, it is evident on its face that it is not a genuine tax levy.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 112) extending the effective period of the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act, 1933.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 113) to extend until April 1, 1936, certain provisions of title 1 of the National Industrial Recovery Act, and for other purposes, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS AT QUANTICO, VA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1611) to authorize an exchange of lands between the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Co. and the United States at Quantico, Va., which was, on page 2, line 22, to strike out "4" and insert "14."

Mr. TRAMMELL. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

MEMORIAL PARK AT KENNESAW MOUNTAIN, GA.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I call up from the table the conference report on House bill 59, submitted by me on the 10th instant, and ask for the immediate consideration of the report.

There being no objection, the report was considered and agreed to, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 59) to create a national memorial military park at and in the vicinity of Kennesaw Mountain in the State of Georgia, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

MORRIS SHEPPARD,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
ROBERT D. CAREY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN J. MCSWAIN,
LISTER HILL,
HARRY C. RANSLEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

SOCIAL SECURITY

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7260) to provide for the general welfare by establishing a system of Federal old-age benefits, and by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for aged persons, dependent and crippled children, maternal and child welfare, public health, and the administration of their unemployment compensation laws; to establish a Social Security Board; to raise revenue; and for other purposes.

WHO SHALL BE TAXED—THE BEGGAR OR THE MULTIMILLIONAIRE?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I hope I may have the attention of the Senators from New York, Mississippi, and other States who are interested in the bill.

On Monday I shall offer a plan which I believe ought to meet a very hearty response from those who are actually interested in social security. I do not think there is anybody here who believes he is going to do the working man or poor man any good with a pension or unemployment plan if he is levying upon him a tax which will be as heavy as the good he will get out of it. In other words, already the working man in this country is underpaid. He does not receive a subsistence wage. He is not able to lay up anything, because he does not earn as much as it would take to buy the bare necessities of life, and only a very small percentage of our people—less than 4 percent of them—earn as much as their bare subsistence costs within the same period of time.

Those are not my figures alone, Mr. President. Those are the figures which have been gleaned by many disinterested publications, and by the Government itself.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I have said that time and time again.

Mr. LONG. That is all the more reason why my amendment should be sponsored by the Senator from New York, who, I am glad to say, has said it time and time again, and I have heard him say it. When we realize that 96 percent of our people make less than is needed for bare subsistence, we know that those people who not only have none of the luxuries of life, who do not have the conveniences of life, and who, in fact, have far less than the bare essentials of life, certainly those people should not be taxed for the purpose of their own relief. Such is like trying to pull a sick man up out of his sick bed by his bootstraps when he has not even a boot on his foot.

Therefore, I am heartily in favor of all the systems of relief contemplated by the bill.

I think I am the first Member of this body ever to propose an old-age pension and much of this legislation by any resolution or by any bill which has been introduced in the Senate. I think I introduced in the United States Congress the first effort to grant an old-age pension to the people of the United States.

Mr. President, if we admit—as the Senator from New York says, and as I have confirmed, and we are both on solid ground—that 96 percent of the people of the United States earn far less than the bare essentials of life, earn less than will buy luxuries or even conveniences, earn even less than it takes to buy what the United States Government says is necessary to keep together soul and body, hair and hide, then certainly we do not wish to levy on those people a tax for any future benefits when they must live today and are not making a living today.

Only a week or two ago I saw published a table which showed that over 95 percent of the savings of the American people from their earnings are saved by something like 3 percent of the people. The table showed that something like one-half of the people did not earn enough to save anything at all, and that about one-half of the people, I think, earned so little that even by starving themselves their savings were infinitesimal and amounted to almost nothing. That is one reason why I say to the Senate that if we tax the beggar in his youth—and 96 percent of our people, nearly all of them are more or less beggars when they are making a subsistence wage—to provide for the beggar in his old age, we are not helping the beggar very much.

Further than that, I wish to say that there are States in the Union, such as the State of Mississippi, that have no natural resources to tax, except bare land. The State of Mississippi has no oil, it has no gas, it has no sulphur, it has no salt. The State of Mississippi has not even a fishing ground. That State has to get its shrimp, its crabs, and most of the fish used in the State from outside its boundaries. Most of its fish have to be taken out of the Gulf of Mexico in the waters of the State of Louisiana, and the fishermen have to pay a tax to the State of Louisiana before the fish can be carried by boat to the State of Mississippi, where the canning factories undertake to put them into containers for the market.

The State of Mississippi has been very badly off through no fault of its people. Many of my relatives live in the State of Mississippi. I have traveled that State from one end to the other, and from one side of the State to the other.

It is said by authorities of the State of Mississippi that if it were called upon to supply its one-half of the money for pensions alone—not for all the other things that it is proposed to do by way of social relief in this bill—if the State of Mississippi were called upon to supply the $15 a month that is needed for old-age pensions alone, it would take more money than the entire tax revenues of the State of Mississippi. That does not include unemployment insurance nor does it include many other features of this bill. It is a physical impossibility for the money to be raised in that way. It never can be done. It never will be done.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The statement which the Senator makes is rather surprising to me—that the amount necessary to be raised by the State of Mississippi, for instance, in order to match the $15 per month to all those eligible for pensions under this bill, would amount to more than all the taxes for all State purposes. Has the Senator a list or table showing the number of eligibles in the State who would be entitled to this pension, and has he multiplied that number by the $15 a month or $180 a year which would be the minimum, so that he is sure his statement is correct?

Mr. LONG. Yes. I shall be glad to give the Senator the figures tomorrow morning, word by word and letter by letter. There is no material difference. I based my statement upon figures given me from the State of Mississippi. The Governor of the State, Governor Connor, gave me the information I am now giving. I shall be glad to get the figures and give them to the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator contend that that information will apply to all the States?

Mr. LONG. I am coming to that. It will apply to many of the States. As a matter of fact, it will apply to a large number of the States. Unfortunately, those who have the wealth to pay would domicile themselves in States where they would be less affected by taxation.

For example, we put on an income tax in Louisiana. Already there are men who are going to locate themselves in other States to keep from paying the little income tax of from 2 to 6 percent to the State of Louisiana.

I know that these figures are substantially correct, and I know that this bill is even less than a shadow. It takes the principles incorporated in the bills or resolutions I have heretofore offered in the Senate, and it proposes to do what is contained in some of them; but no man would ever receive 5 cents' worth of anything if it should be carried out. It would simply mean that the laboring man receiving less than a wage on which he can live would not only pay for a pension, something he cannot now pay, but the cost of collecting the payment from him would be deducted from the amount received.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Has the State of Louisiana passed any law providing for old-age pensions?

Mr. LONG. We have a local pauper assistance law. The State of Louisiana has done much social-security work, including what are known as the "paupers." We do not call our payments "old-age pensions", and they are not old-age pensions, no more than the people to be paid by this bill. This ought to be called a "pauper's bill", because we do not give an old-age pension when we require a man to take a pauper's oath and prove that he is not able to live without the so-called "pension."

I want to show Senators how this measure will act. In Louisiana we had a free-schoolbook law. All that a child had to do to get free schoolbooks was to take the pauper's oath, or to make out a declaration that the father and mother did not have the means with which to buy schoolbooks. That was a thing that we could not get the children of Louisiana to do. They would rather stay away from school than to make the pauper's declaration that their parents were not able to buy books for them. So what we did in Louisiana on this social-security work—I call it social-security work; education comes within that purview, I believe—was to provide that every child could have free schoolbooks whether he did or did not take the oath of a pauper. The books came to him as an absolute matter of right. Every child used free schoolbooks. None, rich or poor, used any other kind.

We have here what Senators call an "old-age pension" bill. We never have said that we had old-age pensions in Louisiana, but to some extent we have what there is contained in this bill. We call it a "pauper's law", under which in some cases a man is given a pension. As many as 500 persons are beneficiaries of that law in one parish in my State—in other States it would be called a "county"—and I understand the parish St. Landry has at one time had a large number, maybe nearly as many as I have mentioned; at least it did have at one time, if it has not now. Under that State law an annuity of $12 or $15 a month is granted to those in a helpless condition. That is what we call a "pauper's aid", given to the beneficiaries by the county board or the governing authorities, by what we call in Louisiana the "parish police jury." Let me say that resort to that law, of course, has been restricted. Very few people want to take a pauper's oath, and the subdivisions of the State would not be able to pay the annuity if many applied for it.

There is only one kind of old-age pension that is worth anything, and that is a universal pension. If pensions are paid only to those who can satisfy the governing authorities by proof that they are unable to care for themselves and that a pension is necessary for their welfare, immediately the dispensation of the pension fund is subjected to politics of the locality, and it is within the power of the local authorities to say at any time they want to, "John Smith does not need this pension", or "John Smith is not entitled to this pension"; or, if not that, the applicant is at least forced to degrade himself by proving that he is a pauper before he can go on the rolls. The only kind of a pension that is worth anything whatever to the people of the United States is one that is paid without people having to place themselves in the attitude of being paupers or indigents in order to get it. Therefore, if I were writing this bill, I would strike out the proviso which requires that only those coming within its qualifications, who might be said to be paupers, shall be paid pensions; and I would give a pension to every man who had reached 60 years of age and whose income did not exceed a certain amount or the value of whose property did not exceed a certain amount. That is the only basis upon which to put an old-age pension and make it practicable and feasible.

Secondly, if we are going to pay old-age pensions this Government ought to do it. I would not have proposed that in the Senate had I not thought that it ought to have been done as one of the elements of social security. Let us pension a man and not tax a man for the pension. If we are going to tax my son and my daughter and collect out of their weekly pay roll a sufficient amount to pay my pension and are going to take out the cost of administration from that and give me what is left for a pension, I do not know but that I would be better off if I took such surplus as my son and my daughter might be able to give me, without going to the expense of paying the administrative costs in Washington.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. While I think the Senator's statement and the general propositions laid down by him as to compelling the people who are going to be the beneficiaries to pay the taxes have a great deal of weight, nevertheless, if there were nothing in the bill except what the beneficiary when he got old was going to get, it would still, I believe, have many elements of merit.

Mr. LONG. That is insurance.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. And still it could be said, as an objection to such a measure, "If you would let me handle the money, I would have made more out of it." Sometimes that would be true, but we all know, from our own experience that, as a general rule, it has not been so.

Mr. LONG. I admit all that.

Mr. NORRIS. Most men when they were earning, if they had properly invested their money, or if they had not lost it in some plan by which they expected to make a lot of money, would have when they reach old age a pretty good "nest egg", and so it would be a good thing if we did not do anything else—I should like to do more, of course, as I think everyone else would, but if we only went that far, it would accomplish a great deal of good.

Mr. LONG. If they were made to save something?

Mr. NORRIS. If they were made to save something.

Mr. LONG. I admit that; I admit that every man ought to take out a life-insurance policy; if he could, he ought to have some life insurance. I always have had, but it is mighty hard to understand how a man can lay up very much for his old age when during his useful years he is making less than it takes to live in the barest poverty. That is the point I am making. How can a group of men, 96 percent of whom are earning less money than it takes to live in what is even worse than poverty, lay up enough money for the future to be of any real good? It would be better for a man to starve himself a little more during his useful years than he is now starving himself or that at least 96 percent of us are starving ourselves. In other words, if we are eating half enough it would be better to eat two-fifths enough and to save up one-tenth against the time when it will be needed even worse. But we cannot collect very much money for the Federal Treasury if we are levying the tax upon 96 percent of the people who are now earning, according to the Government tables, less than it costs not for luxuries, not for conveniences, but for the bare subsistence necessities of life.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Following the inquiry I made of the Senator a while ago, he was referring specifically to the State of Mississippi. I find in the hearings, on page 321, a table showing the number of eligibles in 1934.

Mr. LONG. What does the Senator mean by "eligibles"?

Mr. BARKLEY. Those above 65 years of age.

Mr. LONG. I propose to pension at the age of 60.

Mr. BARKLEY. In the hearings it is shown that there are 14,218 people in the State of Mississippi——

Mr. LONG. Who are over 65?

Mr. BARKLEY. Who are over 65.

Mr. LONG. I would not have the pension start at 65. That is not a pension.

Mr. BARKLEY. In order to match the $15 per month, which amounts to $180 a year, the State of Mississippi would be required to contribute $2,559,000.

Mr. LONG. What does the Senator mean by eligibles at 65—if they have reached 65 regardless of what they are doing?

Mr. BARKLEY. If they have reached 65 and are eligible for pension.

Mr. LONG. What does the Senator mean by "eligible"?

Mr. BARKLEY. I mean under the terms of this bill. If the Senator is going to apply it to everybody who reaches 60 or 65 or whatever the age may be, regardless of conditions or circumstances, of course the number would be larger, but I am taking the number who would be eligible under this measure. So it would require the State of Mississippi to raise two and one-half million dollars, and it would require my State to raise about $3,000,000. For the ordinary expenses of the State we raise now about $18,000,000, which, of course, includes the road tax and all that. I call the attention of the Senator to that because of his statement a while ago——

Mr. LONG. I will show the Senator I am right.

Mr. BARKLEY. That the contribution of the State of Mississippi, for instance, and I supposed he was taking that as typical of a great number of States——

Mr. LONG. I am right, and what the Senator has there is wrong.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is greater than all the taxes they raise for all purposes. Of course I am not going to get into a controversy with the Senator——

Mr. LONG. We will not have any controversy; we will go on the figures that the Senator cannot dispute; we will not argue on figures. Here is what this bill does: It proposes to start a pension first at 65. If we are going to start pensions at 65, why not make it 75? Then we will not have any expenses at all; or make it 85. That would be the best way. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will remind the occupants of the galleries that under the rules of the Senate no signs of approval or disapproval are permitted.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. LONG. Let me finish this; then I will be glad to yield. To begin with, men cannot obtain employment at an age past 50, and the greatest economist have argued that the age of unemployment ought to be 45 or 50.

I have never yet known of anybody to propose an old-age-pension plan that was worth the paper it was written on when it proposed to pay a pension to anyone later than at 60 years of age. At the age of 60 there is generally no employment possible. I know Mississippi. I know what Mississippi needs as well as almost any man, probably as well as its own Representatives in Congress, because I have been through the State many times. There are the same kind of people in Mississippi as there are in northern Louisiana in the rural sections. My father and my grandmother came from Mississippi, Smith County. I know Mississippi people.

If we are going to start at the age of 65 with a pension, then my figures will have to be changed, but I do not propose to start at the age of 65. I propose to start at age 60. If we are going to start at age 75, we would have to change my figures again. I am told that for the first few years the bill would apply only to those who are over 70 years of age. It may be that that provision was stricken out of the bill, but there was a provision in the bill originally that it should apply only to those over 70 years of age. That was contained in the original recommendation of the President, though it may have been stricken out of the bill.

Who are eligible? Are we going to leave the matter of who shall be eligible for this pension to be determined by politicians, like the relief is now, where a man is told, "If you do not vote right you will be taken off the relief roll"? I do not want any old man to have to depend upon politics in order to stay on the pension roll or the relief roll, because it is the rottenest, crookedest, most corrupt game that is carried on in the United States today in politics, and that is saying something.

If we have to have the eligibility of every man for a pension determined by a local board or a State board or a Government board, if it is necessary to have a local board or a State board or a Government board determine that he is entitled to a pension, and if he must be subject to being taken off the pension roll from day to day or from month to month, that is not the kind of plan I want to see adopted. If that is what this is to be, it would prove to be a curse and not a benefit. If a man were compelled to realize from day to day, from month to month, from year to year, that he is a pauper, and must go through the embarrassment of proving that he is a pauper, that he has not any hogs in the woods nor any cow to milk nor any land to call his own, nor any son who might be helpful, then we would not have a pension system at all; we would not have even a pauper system to start with. I make that as an absolute statement of fact based upon my experience in social work in a State that does the best social work in America today—the State of Louisiana.

I propose that a pension should be paid to people who are over 60 years of age. I know Mississippi, I know Louisiana, I know Arkansas, each State nearly as well as I know the other—that is, the general run of people. I have traveled through those States all my life. I traveled them when I was 16 years of age and 17 years of age and many times since. I have been through them many, many times. Of all the people who have passed the age of 60 years in Mississippi there are not 10 percent who are not entitled to an age allowance.

According to insurance statistics issued by the life-insurance companies, we are told that only a few out of every hundred who passes the age of 60 is able to take care of himself. Senators have some Government figures tending to show that nearly everybody over 60 years of age can take care of himself, but the figures of the insurance companies who have been in the business say to the contrary, and I will show it by their advertisements. They read something like this:

> Only so many out of every 100 persons who has passed the age of 60, are not dependent upon charity or upon his folk or someone else for help.

Therefore I say that in my opinion from 90 to 95 percent of the common, ordinary run of people over 60 years of age are eligible to draw a pension, and the only way there will ever be a pension provided that is fit to talk about will be to provide a pension that shall be given to every eligible man free of politics. Otherwise it would mean that in my State I would be one of the men controlling the pension, if I continued as a friend of some of the administrators down there in the area in which I live. It might be that Senator Huey Long and Gov. O. K. Allen and our political organization would have the right to say who should get a pension and who should not get a pension in Louisiana.

Do I know what that would mean? Indeed, I do. I know I would have the right to put 14,000 people on the pension rolls of Louisiana; and that is about the same number Mississippi would have. We have about the same population in Louisiana that Mississippi has. Do I not know if I had the power and the right to put 14,000 people on a free pension in Louisiana that Huey Long's and O. K. Allen's politicians would put Long and Allen men on the pension roll if we would let them? Do I not know that Representative FERNANDEZ, of New Orleans, who would have about 2,000 people eligible for the pension roll in his congressional district, would try to put 2,000 Fernandez people in his district on the pension roll, when he has 5 or 10 or 20 times that many people down there who need a pension?

Are we going to have a political thing of that kind? Do I not know that some of the parishes even in that State who have a few hundred on the pension rolls, or "pauper rolls", as we call them down in Louisiana, the politicians would have only their friends on the roll or the fathers of their friends or the mothers and aunts of their friends?

You are going down to my State of Louisiana and tell me we can put only 14,000 on relief. Who most needs a pension in Louisiana? The colored people are among the poorest people we have in some instances. About one-third to 40 percent of our people are colored people. They do not vote in many of the Southern States. How many of them will ever get on the pension rolls? Huh! How many do you think? I give you just one guess to figure out how many will ever get on the pension rolls unless their sons and daughters and they themselves are on the voting list. That may seem like cheap demagoguery, but I am not afraid to say it. I am one southern Senator who can tell the truth about this matter. I am not afraid to say it. I do not want a pension system that will be of help only to those who declare themselves paupers and prove themselves unable to earn a living and eligible to be put on the roll.

There is only one pension that will be worth anything at all, and that is a pension which goes to everybody who reaches a certain age. Do not make it an age that is the dying age. Do not make it an age when the death rattle is sounding in a man's throat. Make it an age when he is reasonably certain not to be able to take care of himself. If you are not going to start a man's old-age allowance until he is 65 or 70, you are going to wait until the Lord's threescore and ten years' time allowed man on earth is nearly over.

Do not make it necessary that one must depend upon the whims and decisions of politicians to get on the pension roll.

Therefore, if Mississippi pays a pension to every man who is 60 years old who needs it—I know what I am talking about and the Governor of Mississippi knows what he is talking about—if we provide payment of a pension to every man 60 years of age who needs it, it will cost the State of Mississippi one and one-fourth to one and one-half times its present tax revenues just to pay the pension.

I took the United States census as my guide. I ascertained from the United States census how many people in Louisiana were over 60 years of age. Then what did I do? I took the United States insurance companies' statistics and figured from that what percent of those people were able to earn their own living. After deducting that number obtained in that way, I found that to pay this pension it would cost Louisiana more money than it raises for all other purposes put together in the State of Louisiana. According to the census reports, after deducting the people the insurance companies say are able to take care of themselves, still the State of Louisiana, to pay the others over 60 years of age a pension of $15 a month, would have to raise more money than it raises for all other purposes put together that are paid from the State treasury of Louisiana. I have forgotten how many millions of dollars it is, probably $12,000,000 or possibly $14,000,000. I have not the exact figures.

Mr. President, I am not condemning this effort. If I had been drawing an old-age-pension bill, I might have called into counsel the person who first proposed an old-age-pension plan to the Congress. I might have called in that kind of person. I might not. Perhaps I would not have been on friendly terms with him, and then I would not have called him in; but the chances are I would have called in someone who had first proposed old-age-pension plans to the United States Senate.

Do not misunderstand me. I am not condemning this effort. I am not fighting this bill. I am not opposing this bill. It probably will do no harm, to speak of, that will not have some corresponding good. Like the Senator from Nebraska, I think, taking it up one side and down the other, it is a gesture with some harm and some good in it; but apparently it makes a pretense to carry out the principles I have advocated. While it does not actually do so, nevertheless it is not a bill that I should oppose, except for being a void. What I am trying to show to the authors of the bill is this:

You want a pension bill enacted, and I want a pension bill enacted. This bill does not propose to enact a pension bill. We have here a pauper's-oath proposal which, if it ever amounts to anything, will operate in many States in a way that is fatally defective. Therefore, what I am saying to Senators is this:

On Monday I shall come in here—I hope before this bill shall have passed the stage of amendment—with what? I want Senators to listen to me. I shall propose that we provide an old-age pension of $30 a month. Payable to whom? To every man and woman in the United States who is over 60 years of age who has an income of less than $300 a year or $500 a year, whatever should be the proper amount—I am willing to be governed in that matter by the advice of my colleagues—or whose property ownership is less than a certain amount of money. That is what I shall do. I shall propose to carry out unemployment insurance and everything else that is in this bill. The bill does not propose to do enough.

How would I do it if it were left to me? Would I tax the pay roll of the man who is working? No; because the workingman is not getting today enough money to live on, even though he is working—and half of those who come within the class of workingmen are not working. I certainly would not say to a man who, according to the Government's own statistics, is making less money than it takes fairly to subsist upon even in poverty that he ought to be made to pay a tax for a pension in his old age, when he is not half living in his young age.

Therefore, I shall propose an amendment on Monday morning, or Monday afternoon—whatever time we meet—which will do all the good things pretended to be here contemplated. I shall not strike out one of the benefits proposed by the bill. I shall only add to them, and provide that in order to get the money to pay them we shall levy a tax of 1 percent upon all persons who own wealth and property in the United States which is more than 100 times greater than the average family fortune, and graduate the tax up on the succeeding millions owned by any one man, so as to get whatever amount of money may be required to carry out the purposes of the bill.

That would mean that $1,700,000 of every man's fortune would be altogether exempt from the taxes I shall propose. Therefore, the man who has one and one-half million dollars shall not have to pay a copper cent for the purposes of this bill; but if he has $2,000,000, he will have to pay 1 percent on, say, the last half million. Then I propose to make the tax 2 percent, and 4 percent, and 6 percent, and graduate it on up, so that the man who has four or five or six million dollars will pay a higher tax in proportion. I do not propose to tax the beggar or the weak, and I do not propose to tax persons who are already undernourished and already underpaid.

That is the amendment with which I am coming in here on Monday morning. That will carry out the purposes of the Government. We are supposed to be decentralizing wealth. We ought not to tax the beggar to help the prince, or even tax the beggar to help another beggar. We ought to tax the prince to help the beggar if we find that the beggar is such a person as ought to be helped by bounties granted to him by law.

So I ask my colleagues to hold an open mind for the amendment I shall propose here Monday afternoon if we meet Monday at noon, or Monday morning if we meet Monday morning. I ask my colleagues to think to themselves in this fashion: Are you willing to go back to your States and tell your people that you have voted for "social security" or "social relief" when, in order to get it, you have called upon them to pay a tax which they cannot pay? Are you willing to say to the laboring man, "I voted for unemployment insurance that will amount to anything", when all you have done is to vote to tax his own pay check, and that check is now less than he can live on?

That is what I want the Members of the Senate to think about; and I want them to think whether or not they will be willing to support this beneficial legislation along the lines that we said in the Chicago convention we would advocate, namely, legislation that would give the people a share in the distribution of the wealth of the country. I am quoting the words of the President of the United States, who delivered that promise at the Chicago convention, that we would provide a share in the distribution of the wealth of the country to the people who need it. That is what we said. We are not doing that when, in order to support the benefits of this bill, we tax the poor man who is making a thousand dollars a year or $500 a year, who has a family that it takes $2,000 a year to clothe and feed and house, and who therefore needs an income of $2,000 a year.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. I yield to my friend from Washington.

Mr. BONE. I realize that I have no right to suggest to the Senator the propriety or lack of propriety of any amendment he may offer, or the practical wisdom of offering an amendment to any one bill; but I am wondering if that sort of an amendment might not jeopardize the bill.

Mr. LONG. It would not hurt anything if it did.

Mr. BONE. I merely wish to ascertain the Senator's idea as to whether it might not be wiser to propose the type of amendment the Senator has in mind to one of the revenue-raising bills which will come over from the House, because there might be those here who would be willing to vote for this bill, and are very anxious to vote for it, who might not be willing to vote for it if that sort of a rider were attached.

I am in harmony with the Senator's idea of increasing taxes in order to meet the necessary expenses of the Government and the necessary expenses of the type of legislation we are now considering; but I am so highly desirous of seeing this type of legislation enacted that I am fearful that anything attached to it of that character, which we might attach to another bill with more hope of having it adopted, might jeopardize this bill.

Mr. LONG. The place where it belongs is on this bill.

Mr. BONE. I have no quarrel with the theory of raising more money to care for these very large expenses.

Mr. LONG. I am satisfied that the Senator has not been here to hear my remarks. I have demonstrated that the people will not get anything under this bill. I have demonstrated it very thoroughly, I think, as the Senator will see if he reads my remarks; but if we are to provide money for old-age pensions, it ought to go in this bill. We propose in this bill to provide money for old-age pensions, and we propose in this bill to provide money for unemployment insurance. If we are to provide for old-age pensions and if we are to provide for unemployment insurance we shall have to provide for raising the money in some way, because it is not provided for here.

Why, just see what is provided. Read this. This is really funny:

For the purpose of enabling each State to furnish financial assistance, as far as practicable under the conditions in such State—

Listen to this:

to aged needy individuals—

Aged needy individuals, paupers, found to be paupers by the governing board of the county or State, controlled by the politicians, of whom I am one!

I am trying to keep the people out of the hands of men of my type and worse.

For the purpose of enabling each State to furnish financial assistance, as far as practicable under the conditions in such State, to aged needy individuals, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated * * * $49,750,000 a year.

Think of that! Talk about appropriating the little, infinitesimal amount of $49,000,000 to pay old-age pensions to all the people in the United States who are in need of those pensions. It is the most absurd and ridiculous thing I ever heard of in my life. That will not pay for the ribbons of the typewriters it will take to mail out the envelopes to the old-age pensioners of the United States. I know what I am talking about. I figured this thing out long, long ago, when I introduced the first old-age pension bill or resolution that ever came into the United States Senate, at least that I ever heard about.

I figured out how much it would cost. Do Senators know how much it would take? It would take $3,000,000,000. That is what it would take, according to the statistics of the United States Government, deducting those who earn their own living according to the tables of the life-insurance companies—and they are the most accredited statistics of which we have any knowledge. According to the Government statistics and according to the deductions made by the life-insurance companies, according to their tables—and their mortality tables have been accepted as authoritative by acts of Congress and by all the courts—according to them it will take something in excess of $3,000,000,000 to pay old-age pensions to the people in the United States, who are entitled to them at the rate of $30 a month. And the proposal here is to appropriate $49,000,000.

Talk about appropriating $49,000,000, and go back to the people and tell them that we have provided for old-age pensions. That will not pay half the pensions in the city of New Orleans alone. It is an absurd thing to talk about, if we are to do anything.

Then where are we to get the $49,000,000? It would mean taxing the poor devil who is to get the pension. It is ridiculous! It is absolutely absurd!

I want my good friends to know I am with them heart and soul and body; I was away ahead of them in this old-age-pension matter.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURKE in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I think the Senator is confused. The $49,000,000 is for old-age assistance. That is to be paid by the taxpayers of the United States.

Mr. LONG. Very well. That is the Government's part of it. It is our part.

Mr. WAGNER. It is the Government's part. The other part is to be paid by the taxpayers of the States.

Mr. LONG. The other half?

Mr. WAGNER. Today all of the States which have pension laws—and I want to remind the Senator that his State has not one——

Mr. LONG. According to what these Government statistics show, Louisiana has not anything.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator's State has not such a law; that is what I mean. They have not a pension law, and 35 States have inaugurated a system of pensions.

Mr. LONG. Louisiana has one of those things.

Mr. WAGNER. No.

Mr. LONG. Louisiana calls it a pauper law. We will not call it a pension, because a man who has to take a pauper's oath is not getting a pension. Under the proposed legislation a man would get a pension whether he took a pauper's oath or not. This thing says "needy people."

Mr. WAGNER. I do not desire to get into a controversy with the Senator about that, because the records are here as to whether States pay pensions or not, and how much they are.

Mr. LONG. The records are not here.

Mr. WAGNER. I was afraid the Senator was confusing this.

Mr. LONG. No; I am not.

Mr. WAGNER. It is money supplied by the taxpayers of the United States.

Mr. LONG. I understand. It is supposed to provide for payment up to $15 a month by the Government of the United States and $15 a month by the States, in order to make the $30.

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly.

Mr. LONG. Forty-nine million dollars is half of it, then, and the State has to put up the other $49,000,000, and that will make $98,000,000, substantially a hundred million dollars, and we would have one hundred million when we need three billion.

Mr. WAGNER. I should be glad to examine the Senator's figures——

Mr. LONG. I have been trying for years to get the Senator to talk this matter over with me.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not want to interrupt the Senator; I merely wanted to correct what I thought was misinformation.

Mr. LONG. No; I am right, absolutely.

Mr. WAGNER. The States of the Union today are paying a little less than $40,000,000 in old-age pensions.

Mr. LONG. Very well.

Mr. WAGNER. At least we are matching, and, of course, as the number of States making such payments increases, our assistance will increase, and we will hope that Louisiana will pass a law.

Mr. LONG. If the Senator will listen to me, I will show him that Louisiana has such a law. Louisiana authorizes its police juries, which are the same as the boards of governors of the counties, to pay paupers, when they want to put people on the pauper's roll. We give it the right name. Louisiana calls a spade a spade, and a "t" a "t", and an "i" an "i." We do not call these payments old-age pensions. We call them help to paupers, and that is the definition which ought to be given to what is proposed here.

A pension is something given to someone like a soldier. The Spanish-American War veteran does not have to take an oath and say that he is a pauper in order to get a pension. The World War veteran did not have to do it. The Civil War veteran did not have to take an oath that he was needy and destitute in order to get a pension, and I wish to say to my friend from Mississippi and to my good friend from New York—and he is my friend—I say to them that we know the dictionary too well to call such a thing as is proposed a pension when it is paupers' assistance. That is what it is. I can take the dictionary and show that this thing is not a pension. It is assistance to paupers who take the pauper's oath, provided politicians approve them. That is all it is.

Down in Louisiana we are honest people in our use of language. I do not mean that others are not honest in their language, but I mean we are not extravagant. We give paupers help, just as the bill before us proposes paupers' help, and the administration has been sandbagging Louisiana with these Government statistics because we will not change the word "pauper" to "pensioner." A pauper is not a pensioner.

If my friend from New York will do what he ought to do about this matter he will change the wording and say "pauper's assistance" instead of "old-age assistance", because when the language is "to aid needy individuals" it is taken out of the category of being a pension and it is made a payment to a pauper. That is what is done. It is not a pension at all, nothing of the kind.

For a long time I have wanted to talk this matter over with the Senator from New York, because his heart is in the right place and his mind, I believe, would yield to the figures. If he will come and listen to the figures I will give him from the life-insurance companies of the State of New York and the city of New York, which he knows to be reliable, and will compare those figures with the Government statistics, he will find the conditions in States like the State of Mississippi and the State of Louisiana, which latter State is not so much better off but is some better off than Mississippi, because we have minerals there. Oil, and salt, and fish, and oysters, and crabs, and pepper, and gas, and minerals like salt and copper, and all such minerals, are found in abundance in the State of Louisiana. There is located in Louisiana the big port of New Orleans, and it can boast many things like that which the State of Mississippi does not possess. It also has a few millionaires from whom to collect income taxes, something of which Mississippi has not so much.

I beg Senators to listen when I tell them that, according to the statistics of the life-insurance companies, there are only a few men out of every hundred who pass the age of 60 who are not dependent upon charity for support.

The mortality tables of the larger insurance companies have been accepted by the Government, and have been accepted by courts in every State, and by United States courts. If today we pay a pension to everyone in the United States over 60 years of age, we shall pay out not less than $3,000,000,000 a year. If we are limited to the $49,000,000 provided by the bill, and $49,000,000 more, or $100,000,000 in all, that will give $1 where we need $30; and then if there is taken out of that the cost of administration, we shall not have enough money to pay the postage necessary to send out the money. I am going to bring in the figures on Monday.

If the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] will give me part of his time on Sunday I will meet him and give him the figures in his hotel, or I will meet him in his office, or he can meet me in my office, and I will show him that, in his own words, 96 percent of the people today are making less than a mere subsistence living, and that we cannot afford to tax people of that kind for their relief in their old age when they are not now getting enough money with which to buy food to eat.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BONE. Will the Senator tell us what proposal he makes in his amendment with respect to the increase in taxation?

Mr. LONG. Yes; I will. Here is what I propose: I propose that the money with which to make all these relief payments shall be raised by tax, but that the tax shall not be levied on any except those whose wealth exceeds 100 times the average family fortune of the United States.

Mr. BONE. Will the Senator leave that to be determined by the Treasury Department, or how will he make that calculation?

Mr. LONG. I will put the calculation in the bill, or do it otherwise. I will provide that there shall be an exemption on a man's first $1,700,000.

Mr. BONE. $1,700,000,000?

Mr. LONG. No; $1,700,000. That amount is exempt from the tax. On the first $1,700,000 no tax is to be paid. That limit is too high, but still we can make that limit. I am trying to make the limit so high that no one on earth will have a right to kick about it. It ought to be that the exemption was no more than $100,000, but we can make the limit the figure I have given, so that there shall be no tax for the purpose levied on any fortune except one which is 100 times the size of the average family fortune, and not take money away from the poor devil who is earning $500 and who actually needs $2,000 to buy food and to buy the necessities of life. The poor fellow who only has enough for a bare subsistence, the man whom we claim we are helping, who is starving to death already, who cannot send his children to school, whose children's clothes are tattered—we cannot afford to levy a tax on him for an old-age pension. We are not doing any good to him if we do. In many cases we should be doing harm to him.

If we are going to give old-age pensions, let us give them to those who need them, but not provide for them in such a way that the determination of who is to receive them will simply be made by the State politicians or any bureaucrat.

I ought to be able to convince some of my friends here that I am somewhat idealistic in this. By what I propose I am excluding myself and friends from having the right to say who shall draw a pension in my State and who shall not draw a pension in my State. I am excluding myself from having a hand in handling that great political club with which we could say to a man, "You will have to be with HUEY LONG in order to get the pension, and if you are not with him you will not get it," because I am looking forward to what will be done in 47 other States, and I am looking forward to the time in my own State when the pension will mean something to the people. I know it does not mean anything as the bill is now drawn.

Therefore, I desire to say to my friends, if any of them wish to make any suggestions between now and Monday concerning my amendment—which does not provide for a tax, as I said, upon the first $1,700,000—I shall be glad to have them do so. If any one thinks the figure ought to be lower than that I should agree with him, and if the Senate would support a lower exemption I should prefer to have the lower exemption. However, I desire to put it on a basis where no one can say that the taxation for this work of social security has been placed upon the back of the man who can be hurt a little bit by paying it. That is what I wish to do.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I did not hear all of the Senator's argument. Does he propose his tax in the form of a capital levy?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Mr. BONE. I am wondering if that could be sustained under our Constitution without an amendment.

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir; it can be sustained. Not only can it be sustained, but it was the basis upon which the law of the United States was founded. It was the basis of the law upon which the United States started as a Government, and the only reason why we are in this fix today is because we departed from it. According to the statement made by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]—and it should have been made a thousand times more strongly—no one can question, topside nor bottom, the right of the United States to levy a tax on property and to graduate the tax. Nobody can question it. There is not a doubt about it.

I am not going to argue with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] the constitutionality of the taxes imposed under this bill. It is barely possible the Supreme Court may not sustain the constitutionality of some of the levies proposed in the bill. I hope they will, but they may not. I am not going to give the Senator from New York the kind of advice I gave him on the N. R. A., because he did not take my advice the last time and he might not take it this time; and since I was right the last time and he did not take advantage of my advice, he may be right this time, because, to say the least, both might be a guess; and in view of the fact that my friend from New York is a better lawyer than I am this might be his time to be right. I am not going to argue the matter.

It may be that the Supreme Court of the United States will hold the levies under this bill to be not valid under the Constitution; but there is no question about the levy of a uniform tax on property—none whatever. There can be no doubt about that. Nobody who has ever gone through a law school will ever be found who can argue anything to the contrary. There is no doubt about that. What I tell the Senate is constitutional. What I tell them is real. What I tell them is actual. What I tell the Senate helps these people. What I tell the Senate punishes no one. It gives the people of the United States actual unemployment relief, actual pension relief, actual social relief, and the burden of it is borne in such amounts as are ample to create a fund 30 times the one provided in this bill, and the burden of it is borne by people who have $1,700,000 or more.

Mr. President, I shall be here on Monday with the amendments I have suggested. If Senators have any suggestions to offer, I hope they will offer them. I shall be glad to give copies of my amendment to Members of the Senate who are interested in it, between now and tomorrow morning, as soon as I shall have perfected my amendment; and when I do, if they have any suggestions to make, either before we come to the Senate or on the floor of the Senate, which would perfect the amendment in accordance with what they think is their better judgment, I shall be glad to have them, in order that we may follow that system rather than follow the plans that are set forth and enumerated in this bill, which are not ample, not sufficient, which are burdensome, and in many instances will do more harm than they will do good.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I was about to make a few observations, but I notice that the Senator from Louisiana has left the Senate Chamber, and I do not care to make them in his absence.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator be content to recess at this time, and begin with the committee amendments in the morning at 12 o'clock?

Mr. HARRISON. I think there ought to be an executive session at this time.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection to that. However, on account of the great number of Senators who are absent from the Senate Chamber at this time, I think we ought not to begin with the committee amendments until tomorrow.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not wish to have the Senate get into any controversial matters tomorrow. I am willing to agree that we shall recess until tomorrow if we can have an agreement as to limitation of debate, and so forth, and try to wind up the consideration of the bill on Monday.

Would there be any objection to having a recess taken until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning?

Mr. McNARY. I do not think the recess ought to be taken until 11 o'clock a. m. I think it should be taken until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to have disposed of the Senate committee amendments about which there is no question, or about which there will be no debate. I do not expect, however, to conclude the consideration of the bill tomorrow.

Mr. McNARY. If the Senator will agree to the Senate taking a recess at this time until 12 o'clock tomorrow, I can assure him that there will not be any unnecessary delay, but I should not like to have the session commence at 11 o'clock in the morning.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 112) extending the effective period of the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act, 1933, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

ST. CLAIR RIVER BRIDGE, PORT HURON, MICH.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, Senate bill 1788, Calendar No. 900, is a Michigan bridge bill, the enactment of which is necessary in connection with our public-works program. The measure is in satisfactory form, approved by all the departments, and unanimously reported by the Committee on Commerce. Will the Senator from Mississippi yield in order that I may ask unanimous consent for its present consideration?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 1788.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1788) authorizing the State of Michigan to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the St. Clair River at or near Port Huron, Mich., and to acquire other transportation facilities between said State and Canada, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate international commerce the State of Michigan, by and through its State bridge commission or the said successors of said commission, be, and is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the St. Clair River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the city of Port Huron, Mich., and the city of Sarnia, Canada, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act, and subject to the approval of the proper authorities in the Dominion of Canada. For like purposes the State of Michigan, by and through its State bridge commission or the successors of said commission, is hereby authorized to purchase, maintain, and operate all or any ferries across the St. Clair River within 5 miles of the location which shall be selected for said bridge, subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act, and subject to the approval of the proper authorities in the Dominion of Canada.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the State of Michigan and its State bridge commission, or the successors of said commission, the right and power to enter upon such lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use such real estate and other property in the State of Michigan as may be needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of said bridge and its approaches, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of said State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation of private property for public purposes in said State. And the State of Michigan and its State bridge commission, or the successors of said commission, may exercise in the Dominion of Canada all rights, powers, and authority which shall be granted or permitted to it or them by the proper authorities of the Dominion of Canada or the Province of Ontario, including the entering upon lands and acquiring, condemning, occupying, possessing, and using such real estate and other property in the Dominion of Canada as may be needed for such location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge.

SEC. 3. Notwithstanding any restriction or limitation imposed by the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes", approved July 11, 1916, or by the Federal Highway Act, or by any act amendatory of or supplemental to either thereof, the Secretary of Agriculture may extend Federal aid under such acts, for the construction of said bridge, out of any moneys allocated to the State of Michigan with the consent of the State highway department of said State.

SEC. 4. The said State of Michigan, by and through its State bridge commission, or the successors of said commission, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge and such ferry or ferries in accordance with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 5. In fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge the same shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund which shall be sufficient to amortize the cost of such bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 40 years from the completion thereof. If revenue bonds or other obligations of the State shall be issued to provide for the payment of the cost of such bridge and its approaches and of any such ferry or ferries and the necessary lands, easements, and appurtenances thereto, such sinking fund shall be sufficient to pay the principal and interest of such bonds or obligations as such principal and interest shall fall due, and the redemption or repurchase price of all or any of such bonds or other obligations redeemed or repurchased before maturity. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization or for such payment shall have been so provided such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 6. Nothing herein contained shall require said State bridge commission, or the successors of said commission, to maintain or operate any ferry or ferries purchased hereunder, but, in the discretion of said commission or its successors, any ferry or ferries so purchased, with the appurtenances and property thereto connected and belonging, may be sold or otherwise disposed of or may be abandoned and dismantled whenever in the judgment of said commission or its successors it may seem expedient so to do. The commission and its sucessors may fix such rates of toll for the use of such ferry or ferries as it may deem proper, subject to the same conditions as are hereinabove required as to tolls for traffic over the bridge.

SEC. 7. The State of Michigan, by and through its State bridge commission, or the successors of said commission, be, and is hereby, authorized to acquire by purchase or by condemnation any existing bridge, tunnel, or ferry (each of which is hereinafter termed a "transportation facility" and shall be deemed to include all property, rights, easements, and franchises relating thereto and deemed necessary or convenient for its operation) between the State of Michigan and the Dominion of Canada. The method of condemnation and of ascertaining and making payment of just compensation shall be in accordance with the provisions of section 2 of this act. Said State of Michigan, by and through said commission or its successors, may unite or group into one or more separate projects for financing purposes such transportation facilities so acquired as shall be deemed practicable by said commission or its successors. Said State of Michigan, by and through said commission or its successors, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for the use of such transportation facilities. In fixing the rates of tolls to be charged for the use of such transportation facilities in a single project, the same shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating all such transportation facilities included in the particular project under economical management, and an amount sufficient in addition to the foregoing to provide a sinking fund which shall be sufficient to amortize the aggregate cost of the transportation facilities embraced in the particular project, including reasonable interest and financing costs, as soon as practicable under reasonable charges, but within a period not exceeding 40 years from the date of acquiring such transportation facilities. If revenue bonds or other obligations of the State shall be issued to provide for the payment of the cost of such transportation facilities, such sinking fund shall be sufficient to pay the principal and interest of such bonds or obligations as such principal and interest shall fall due, and the redemption or repurchase price of all or any of such bonds or other obligations redeemed or repurchased before maturity.

SEC. 8. The rights to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURKE in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations (and withdrawing a nomination), which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for appointment, by transfer, in the Regular Army.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, reported favorably the nomination of Clyde L. Seavey, of California, to be a member of the Federal Power Commission for the term expiring June 22, 1940 (reappointment).

Mr. WAGNER, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, reported favorably the nomination of Anning S. Prall, of New York, to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission for the term of 7 years from July 1, 1935 (reappointment).

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. TRAMMELL, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters in the State of Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first nomination in order on the calendar.

FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK BOARD

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of John H. Fahey, of Massachusetts, to be a member of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask that the nomination go over until tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination will go over until tomorrow.

BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of William M. Welch to be collector, district of Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Theodore J. Bauer to be assistant surgeon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Nelson Trusler Johnson, of Oklahoma, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to China.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, about 2 months ago the Senate unanimously confirmed the nomination of Anning S. Prall to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission. That was for the short term. The President has sent in his nomination for the full term. The Committee on Interstate Commerce again this morning unanimously reported the nomination favorably; and I ask, under the circumstances, that his nomination be now confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in view of the statement made by the Senator from New York, I have no objection.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Anning S. Prall, of New York, to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

RECESS

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest that the recess be taken until 12 o'clock. There is a very important matter coming up before the Committee on Privileges and Elections tomorrow morning.

Mr. HARRISON. Then, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in legislative session, took a recess until tomorrow, Saturday, June 15, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate June 14 (legislative day of May 13), 1935

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Elwood Hamilton, of Kentucky, to be United States district judge, western district of Kentucky, to succeed Charles I. Dawson, resigned.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

John B. Tansil, of Montana, to be United States attorney, district of Montana, to succeed James H. Baldwin, appointed United States district judge for the district of Montana.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL

John E. Sloan, of Pennsylvania, to be United States marshal, western district of Pennsylvania, vice J. Hilary Keenan, resigned.

APPOINTMENT, BY TRANSFER, IN THE REGULAR ARMY

TO QUARTERMASTER CORPS

Capt. John Edward Nolan, Infantry (detailed in Quartermaster Corps), with rank from January 4, 1929.

PROMOTIONS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

TO BE CAPTAIN

First Lt. Harris Fulford Scherer, Cavalry, from June 12, 1935.

TO BE FIRST LIEUTENANTS

Second Lt. Louis Ellis Massie, Air Corps, from June 7, 1935.

Second Lt. Stuart Phillips Wright, Air Corps, from June 12, 1935.

APPOINTMENT IN THE NATIONAL GUARD OF THE UNITED STATES

GENERAL OFFICER

To be brigadier general, Adjutant General's Department, National Guard of the United States

Brig. Gen. Francis Guy Ash, Adjutant General's Department, West Virginia National Guard.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY

Lt. Comdr. Robert W. Hayler to be a commander in the Navy from the 1st day of May 1935.

Lt. George P. Kraker to be a lieutenant commander in the Navy from the 1st day of February 1935.

Lt. Frederick C. Sachse to be a lieutenant commander in the Navy from the 1st day of May 1935.

Lt. John B. Longstaff to be a lieutenant commander in the Navy from the 1st day of June 1935.

Lt. (Jr. Gr.) Elijah W. Irish to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 6th day of March 1934.

Lt. (Jr. Gr.) Ernest S. L. Goodwin to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 30th day of June 1934.

Lt. (Jr. Gr.) Lermond H. Miller to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 1st day of February 1935.

The following-named lieutenants (junior grade) to be lieutenants in the Navy from the 1st day of June 1935:

Clement R. Criddle	Arthur H. Graubart
John D. Reppy	Charles E. Tolman, Jr.

Ensign Robert B. Farquharson, Jr., to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy from the 4th day of June 1934.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy from the 2d day of June 1935:

Gilbert H. Mitchell	Levering Smith
Charles L. Frazer	John R. Leeds
Harold E. Baker	Thomas M. Fleck
Odale D. Waters, Jr.	Stephen M. Archer
Alfred G. Ward	Theodore H. White
Lloyd M. Mustin	John M. Grider
William W. Brown	Earl P. Finney, Jr.
Henry G. Munson	Richard C. Williams, Jr.
Porter Lewis	Harold L. Sargent
John S. Horner	Edwin C. Woodward
Harry Hull	Robert E. Vandling
George W. Bailey	Jack I. Bandy
Sidney A. Ernst	Norman E. Blaisdell
David D. Scott	George R. Beardslee
Frank H. Brumby, Jr.	William B. Perkins
Ernest D. Hodge	Ernest M. Snowden
Harry L. Reiter, Jr.	Hugh L. Hendrick, Jr.
Morton Sunderland	Maximilian G. Schmidt
Ernest P. Abrahamson	Alvin W. Slayden
Ronald L. Wilson	George W. Kehl
Richard H. Lambert	Barry K. Atkins
Burl L. Bailey	John Corry
Robert H. Weeks	Ralph M. Wilson
Spencer L. Shaw	Jacob C. Myers
Paul G. Osler	Robert O. Beer
George L. Raring	Daniel L. Carroll, Jr.
William J. Dimitrijevic	Frank M. Parker
Robert B. Fulton, 2d	Henry I. Allen, Jr.
John M. Lietwiler	Allen M. Shinn
Herbert M. Coleman	John L. Counihan, Jr.
Selden C. Small	Lucien E. Wagnon
Joel C. Ford, Jr.	Rex B. Little
William R. Franklin	William L. Tagg
Clayton R. Simmers	Robert C. Young
Howard R. Prince	Bruce McCandless
Jacob A. Lark	William R. Cox
Paul H. Grouleff	Allen B. Adams, Jr.
Joseph C. Wylie, Jr.	Mason J. Hamilton
Francis M. Douglass	Henry C. DeLong
Scott K. Gibson	George R. Luker
William I. Bull	Samuel F. Quarles

George C. Hunter	Allen A. Ovrom
William H. Groverman, Jr.	Clare B. Smiley
William W. Vanous	John C. DeWitt, Jr.
John S. Lewis	Malcolm T. Munger
Thomas D. F. Langen	Howard E. Shelton, Jr.
George W. Pressey	Harry W. Seely
Robert P. Walker	Albert S. Major, Jr.
George O. Hobbs	James A. Thomas
Max C. Mather	Philip W. Cann
Jack W. Wintle	Jack Roudebush
Alton E. Parker	William C. F. Robards
Arthur H. Vorpahl	Garry W. Jewett, Jr.
Malcolm E. Garrison	John F. Fairbanks, Jr.
Mark E. Dennett	Nathaniel M. Dial
Reynolds C. Smith	James D. Collett
Robert D. Roblin	John H. Hooper
Bernard W. Freund	Adolphe Wildner
DeWitt C. McIver, Jr.	Charles M. Lyons, Jr.
John W. Ramey	Herbert L. Jukes
Norman J. Sampson	Joseph A. McGoldrick
John B. Smith	Roland O. Lucier
James G. Marshall	Harvey H. Head
Lindsey Williamson	Hinton A. Owens
William Winter, Jr.	George R. Wilson
John S. Fahy	Juan P. Domenech
Richard D. Harwood	George E. Porter, Jr.
Ennis W. Taylor

Midshipman Dermott V. Hickey to be an ensign in the Navy, revocable for 2 years from the 6th day of June 1935.

Surgeon Earl C. Carr to be a medical inspector in the Navy with the rank of commander from the 1st day of August 1934.

Alvin H. Grunewald, a citizen of Wisconsin, to be an assistant dental surgeon in the Navy with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) from the 1st day of June 1935.

Lewis M. Smylie, a citizen of West Virginia, to be an assistant dental surgeon in the Navy with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) from the 1st day of June 1935.

Richard F. Redden, a citizen of the District of Columbia, to be an assistant dental surgeon in the Navy with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) for temporary service from the 1st day of June 1935.

Paymaster George C. Simmons to be a pay inspector in the Navy with the rank of commander from the 1st day of August 1934.

Lieutenant (junior grade) Richard H. Gingras to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 1st day of April 1935.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy from the 2d day of June 1935:

Charles C. Gold	Victor B. McCrea
Nicholas J. Nicholas	Otto A. Scherini
Paul D. Williams	John J. Sutton
Michael B. O'Connor	John G. Tennent, 3d
Samuel P. Moncure	Charles Keene, Jr.

Assistant Paymaster William L. Patten to be a passed assistant paymaster in the Navy with the rank of lieutenant from the 1st day of June 1934.

MARINE CORPS

Lt. Col. Ross E. Rowell to be a colonel in the Marine Corps from the 14th day of May 1935.

The following-named captains to be majors in the Marine Corps from the 1st day of June 1935:

Joseph W. Knighton	James A. Mixson

The following-named first lieutenants to be captains in the Marine Corps from the 1st day of June 1935:

Lawrence T. Burke	Thomas J. Walker, Jr.
Thomas B. White	Maxwell H. Mizell

The following-named second lieutenants to be first lieutenants in the Marine Corps from the 2d day of June 1935:

Ellsworth N. Murray	James G. Smith
Alpha L. Bowser, Jr.	Forest C. Thompson

The following-named meritorious noncommissioned officers to be second lieutenants in the Marine Corps, revocable for 2 years, from the 6th day of June 1935:

Sgt. Michael S. Currin	Corp. Henry B. Cain
Sgt. Lewis J. Fields

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate June 14 (legislative day of May 13), 1935

AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY

Nelson Trusler Johnson to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to China.

MEMBER OF THE FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Anning S. Prall to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE

William M. Welch to be collector of internal revenue, district of Massachusetts.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

Theodore J. Bauer to be assistant surgeon.

POSTMASTERS

ALABAMA

Robert L. Stallworth, Evergreen.
Richard Glenn Rice, Northport.

ALASKA

Agnes Moran, Nenana.

CALIFORNIA

Charles W. Spencer, Aptos.
Richard G. Glover, Camarillo.
Raymond D. Siler, Corning.
Robert A. Ascot, Highland.
Edwin C. Halverson, Lynwood.
Charles M. Gorham, Mar Vista.
Enoch H. Russell, Ramona.
Jessie R. South, Santa Clara.

GEORGIA

Robert G. Hartsfield, Bainbridge.
Charles R. Brumby, Cedartown.
Hal D. Austin, Conyers.
Olive S. Fraser, Hinesville.
Sadie W. Crittenden, Shellman.
James H. Mahone, Talbotton.
Jones R. Arnold, Thomson.

IDAHO

Halo M. Hart, Preston.
Mercedes Tremblay, Priest River.

IOWA

Kathryn Fagan, Ayrshire.
Blanche M. Oslen, Ellsworth.
William R. Flemming, Forest City.
DeEtta I. Reindl, Manly.
Mark A. Trumbull, Manson.
Leonard L. Snyder, Oskaloosa.
Ruth M. Stoltz, Ottumwa.
Otto Germar, Volga.
Olive A. Burrows, Wilton Junction.

KANSAS

Eugene Franklin Glover, Caldwell.
Richard R. Bourne, Delphos.
Max H. Dyck, Fowler.
Elizabeth C. Johnson, Hartford.
Orville K. McQueen, Kirwin.
Harold J. Schafer, McPherson.
Oscar J. Strong, Mound City.
Charles L. Krouse, Onaga.
Dick A. De Young, Prairie View.
Thomas W. Ross, Sterling.
George F. Popkess, Toronto.
John H. Pennebaker, Virgil.
Wilders D. McKimens, Westmoreland.

MARYLAND

Edmund H. Bray, Easton.
George L. Edmonds, Rockville.

MINNESOTA

Percy L. Hakes, Brownton.
Robert M. Foster, Buffalo Lake.

Alton E. Torgrimson, Grand Meadow.
Delwin B. Clabaugh, Swanville.

MISSISSIPPI

Frederick J. Fugitt, Booneville.
Mrs. Dewey M. Collins, Boyle.
John B. Glenn, Brookville.
Mr. Ethel W. Still, Clarksdale.
James B. Keeton, Grenada.
Samuel A. Witherspoon, Meridian.
Arthur V. Smith, Pascagoula.

MONTANA

Hiram B. Cloud, Wolf Point.

NEBRASKA

Naomi G. Fackler, Burwell.
Harold Hald, Dannebrog.
J. Melvern West, Herman.
Fred C. Johnson, Merriman.
Albert H. Bahe, Ohiowa.
Ben G. Worthing, Overton.
Effie E. Adams, Ralston.

NEW MEXICO

Laura W. Martinez, Tierra Amarilla.

NEW YORK

Edward P. McCormack, Albany.
Harold F. Garrison, Fort Montgomery.
Timothy J. Gibson, Lindenhurst.
John A. Donahue, Newburgh.
Francis J. A. Marlborough, Smithtown Branch.

NORTH CAROLINA

George M. Sudderth, Blowing Rock.
Patrick H. McDonald, Carthage.
Wingate A. Lambertson, Rich Square.
Henry E. Earp, Selma.
John R. Dildy, Wilson.

NORTH DAKOTA

Catherine Ross, Arthur.
Herman A. Borcherding, New England.
William Stewart, Butte.
Dorothy L. Schultz, Carpio.
Frank M. McConn, Fairmount.
Mildred Peck, Glenburn.
Loren J. Savage, Litchville.
Bland Elsberry, Rocklake.
Christian H. Budke, Sherwood.
Howard Miller, Werner.
John H. Case, Wishek.

OKLAHOMA

Blanche Lucas, Ponca City.
Robert R. McCarver, Wister.

PUERTO RICO

George P. DePass, San Juan.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Philip M. Clement, Charleston.
John R. Rivers, Chesterfield.

TEXAS

Ephraim B. Hyer, Buckholts.
Ross H. Johnson, Burnet.
Otis G. Baker, Jr., Edna.
Alva C. Cotney, Follett.
Mildred M. Hardie, Freer.
Rosa M. Boucher, Gorman.
Cecil R. Coale, Orange.
Mansel R. Coffee, Perryton.
Charlie C. Truitt, Pittsburg.
Lemuel O. Robbins, Raymondville.
Charles B. Morris, Rhome.
Frank Clark, Rockwall.
Roy C. Owens, Tyler.
Ellis Campbell, Wills Point.

VERMONT

Jeremiah C. Durick, Fair Haven.
Richard Harlie Standish, Montpelier.

WEST VIRGINIA

Hugh B. Lynch, Chester.
George C. Sowards, Hurricane.
Joseph F. Blackman, Parsons.

WISCONSIN

Joseph Schmidlkofer, Chilton.
David A. Holmes, Milton.
Clarence G. Schultz, Neenah.
John P. Snyder, Oconomowoc.

WITHDRAWAL

Executive nomination withdrawn from the Senate June 14 (legislative day of May 13), 1935

POSTMASTER

Thomas S. Starodoj to be postmaster at Ware, in the State of Massachusetts.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JUNE 14, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We withdraw again, our Heavenly Father, to the gray and solemn ministry of the cloud. Encircle it with a rainbow; walk again upon the troubled waters and breathe upon us the spirit of the world to come. Bless us with the morning that shall enable us to look to the fulfillment of tomorrow. A heavy hand has been laid upon us. Another Member has been removed from our congressional family. Buoyant of spirit, schooled by training, and a wise counselor. Help the sorrowing hearthstone to feel the sympathy that comes from the rent in Thine own heart. Hide the gloom of the present through the gladness of the eternal promise: "Though the earthly house of this tabernacle be dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." O Thou of infinite love, Thou of the burning purity, let the star of Bethlehem light up the stairway that leads to the Father's paradise. In our Savior's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PORT CITIES IN OUR INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech made by Hon. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the speech about?

Mr. RANKIN. It is a speech on the port cities and our international relations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, under permission granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I am inserting an address delivered by the Honorable Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, before the Conference of Seaport Cities on International Trade, in New York City on June 12, 1935.

It is one of the most masterful presentations of our international relations, especially from a standpoint of economic recovery, that I have ever read. It shows that we have at the head of our Department of State a real statesman, who not only compares most favorably with the leading premiers of the world but a man who has a thorough grasp of the great economic and international problems with which the world is now grappling.

I hope every Member of the House and every Member of the Senate reads this address carefully. I wish it could be read by every citizen and every student throughout the land. For, in my opinion, it points the way to world recovery and to world peace.

Secretary Hull's address follows:

I am very happy to have the opportunity to address this great convention, called for the purpose of promoting the interests and development of the ports of the United States. The prosperity of our port cities and the rebuilding of our foreign trade occupy an important place in the larger and broader program of our whole international economic relations.

We are met in the greatest port of the world, a port which handles more tonnage than any one of its great competitors in England, on the European Continent, or in the Orient. Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Norfolk, New Orleans, Galveston, Los Angeles, San Francisco, and Seattle rank high in the list of important world ports, along with London, Hamburg, Rotterdam, Antwerp, Liverpool, Singapore, Hong Kong, and Shanghai.

There are, all told, more than 300 ports in the United States through which our trade with foreign countries passes. The volume of commerce passing through these ports reflects and, in turn, reacts upon the prosperity of the entire Nation. Between 1929 and 1933 the cargo tonnage of water-borne imports and exports declined from 108,000,000 tons to 59,000,000 tons. A recovery of the tonnage of exports and imports to the predepression level would give tremendous stimulus to economic activity throughout the length and breadth of the entire land.

Railroads and trucking firms which carry the goods from the centers of production to these three-hundred-odd ports and in turn back again to the various centers of consumption would experience a tremendous stimulus if we could again recover the volume of port traffic, approximating the 52,000,000 or 53,000,000 tons handled by the Atlantic ports prior to the depression, the 23,000,000 tons handled in the Gulf ports, the 16,000,000 or 17,000,000 tons in the Pacific ports, and the 16,000,000 or 17,000,000 tons handled in the ports of the Great Lakes region. New activity would be stimulated in the repair plants and shipbuilding yards; the business of exporting and importing firms, shipping offices, insurance houses, brokerage houses, and foreign-exchange institutions, and the employment by these firms of hand and brain workers would be increased. This activity would be carried back in the various processes of production for the export market and in all the intermediate distributive stages handling both export and import goods. The activity of our port cities has been in the past an index and barometer of the economic health and prosperity of the entire Nation. This will continue to be the case in the future only if we turn our backs definitely away from the doctrine and practice of self-sufficiency and economic nationalism which has gripped the world so mightily and disastrously in the last few years.

An indication of the greatly increased business that the trade-agreements program may be expected to bring to American ports and shipping is afforded by the results of the Cuban agreement. Our exports to Cuba during the first 7 months in which the agreement was in force, from September 1934 to March 1935, amounted to 645,000 tons, against only 365,000 tons during the corresponding period a year earlier, an increase of 77 percent. Between the same periods our imports from Cuba increased from 1,305,000 tons to 1,804,000 tons, or by about 38 percent.

Trade agreements have been signed with 5 countries and negotiations are in progress with 13 other countries. These 18 countries accounted in 1934 for 39.1 percent of our exports and for 45.5 percent of our imports on the basis of value. On the assumption that these agreements, now completed or actually being negotiated, will increase trade on an average only one-half as much as the increase which has resulted from the Cuban agreement, there would be added in the course of a year some 7,000,000 or 8,000,000 tons to our export and import cargoes. Several million additional tons to the total cargo entering and leaving our ports would have no mean significance for the prosperity of our port cities. But this is merely the beginning. The full fruits of our trade agreements will not be seen in the first few months. The cumulative effect, reacting upon world-wide prosperity, will, I hope and believe, carry our foreign-trade tonnage back to the full high level of former times. This is the prize which the successful pursuance of the trade-agreements program holds out to those interested in ports and in the shipping of the United States.

The close relationship of the rise and power of port cities to the development and spread of civilization is well known to all students of history.

The remains of ancient harbor works have been found in Crete, attesting the commercial intercourse between Crete and Egypt nearly 4,000 years before the Christian era. As early as the thirteenth century B. C., the Phoenicians built harbors at Sidon and Tyre, and, on the basis of the commercial intercourse thereby developed, a great civilization was reared. The numerous harbors developed in the Mediterranean Basin in ancient Greece and Rome constitute the foundation upon which was erected the great commercial development and the glorious culture of ancient times. The Middle Ages were stirred from intellectual stagnation by the commercial intercourse and contract with the eastern world which followed in the wake of the Crusades. The unparalleled splendor of the Renaissance, its arts, literature, and early scientific inquiries, had its material basis in the great Italian ports and in the wealth born out of a radiating network of world-wide commercial relations. The association of the trading towns along the Baltic, known as the Hanseatic League, continued in full strength for over 3 centuries. The impetus given to commerce by this remarkable association of maritime towns carried trade to all points within the Baltic Basin, west to England and east to Russia, and served as an outpost and connecting point to older trade routes on the Continent and to the Far East. The regional headquarters of the Hanseatic League lived on into modern times in Antwerp, Bergen, and London, until finally its influence was swallowed up in the great commercial development of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, and in the growth of national sentiment and control.

In the New World also port towns played a great role in economic development. In 1609 Henry Hudson sailed up the great river which bears his name and in the next year a beginning was made of the rapidly flourishing Dutch trade in furs with the Indians. Thus developed the earliest beginning of the great port of New York, first in the rich trade with Holland, and later in the trade with the southern English colonies and with the Antilles. With the coming of English control the ports of New York, Boston, and Philadelphia shared in the rapidly growing and world-wide expansion of British commerce. In addition, there developed the enormously important port of New Orleans, which served the great inland territory later to be added to our great domain.

These great ports served a vital function in the development of the colonial period and in the early years of the Republic. Trade was vital to the very life of the New World and synonymous with the economic progress of the new nation. The tonnage of the vessels engaged in foreign trade in the port of New York alone increased from 18,000 tons to 146,000 tons in the 12 years from the formation of the Federal Union to the turn of the century.

History is replete with illustrations of nations which have languished and perished in consequence of a hermit policy, and in consequence of restraints and prohibitions placed upon intercourse with the outside world. The building of docks, quays, wharves, warehouses, terminals, and merchant fleets, the development of lines of commercial intercourse reaching out into all parts of the world—these activities form the first stage in the economic development of new countries, and continue, after industrial maturity has been reached, to furnish the means for expansion and progress.

An address on the subject of our foreign trade and our ports would not be complete without some mention of the act approved by the President on June 18, 1934, providing for the establishment, operation, and maintenance of foreign-trade zones in ports of the United States. This act provides that in each port of entry there may be established, after due authorization, a zone into which goods may be imported without being subject to the customs laws of the United States and in which they may be stored, broken up, repacked, assembled, distributed, sorted, graded, cleaned, mixed with foreign or domestic merchandise, or otherwise manipulated. Because of the large amount of preparation required, no foreign-trade zone has thus far been established, but it is hoped that before long the facilities provided by this act may be availed of. While it is not to be expected that the establishment of foreign-trade zones will greatly add to the volume of our foreign trade, a gradual development of our reexport business may be expected to result from them. The act authorizing these zones opens up an additional field of profitable business for our people.

Our great port cities have a peculiarly vital interest in our neighbor countries on this great hemisphere. The friendly relations promoted and encouraged at the Montevideo Conference continue to bear fruit. A spirit of cordiality, confidence, cooperation, and good will, is steadily gaining ground between the countries of the new world, and this spirit of friendship cannot fail to bear fruit in the material and cultural advance of all these nations. The port cities can play their part in dissipating misunderstanding and prejudice and in nurturing the spirit of cooperation, mutual confidence, and respect between the United States and other American countries. This country will not turn back from the policy of the good neighbor, manifested at Montevideo and supported day by day by new evidences of cooperation and good will.

May I at this point take the occasion to say a word about two fallacies that are being worked overtime by lobbies and unfair opponents of our trade-agreements program. I refer first to the misconception which has become more or less wide-spread with respect to the recent imports of agricultural products and particularly grains and fodders. Let me say at once that for many years back we have year by year imported a limited quantity of grains, meats, vegetables, and dairy products, and even cotton. There are special reasons for this, such as seasonal factors, special varieties, transportation costs, etc. The proportion of imports in relation to the total domestic production has always been insignificant. Moreover, we have normally exported enormously more than we imported.

With respect to the recent imports, the fact is that our imports of dairy products, vegetables, meats, and fruits were in the 8-month period from July 1934 to February 1935, inclusive, considerably smaller in quantity than in the preceding 10-year average for the like period. Only in feeds and fodders is the importation greater than in former years. This increase in imports is due to the calamitous drought which reduced the production of grain products to almost a half of its normal level. The small restriction of output due to the A. A. A. amounts to less than 5 percent of normal production, while the drought reduced the normal supply by 45 percent. Farmers in need of feed grains for livestock and poultry have urgently needed the driblets of imports that have come in. How small these imports are can be seen when I tell you that these slight importations offset by less than 2 percent the shortage created by the drought.

I make this brief observation because it has been alleged that our trade-agreements program is flooding our domestic market with foreign agricultural products. This is not the case. Indeed, these importations have come in over the tariffs of the act of 1930, which in the case of these products have not been touched by any trade agreement.

In our trade-agreements program we are faithfully bearing in mind all sections of agriculture and industry in the entire country. We scrutinize with the utmost care every item of our trade with each country with whom we negotiate. We have gone far enough in our program to know that mutually profitable trade can be materially increased. Such trade expansion reacts cumulatively to the advantage of the whole country by increasing the volume of purchasing power and thereby expanding both the foreign and the domestic market for our agricultural and industrial products.

The second fallacy to which I wish to allude is the "buy at home" slogan. It is used by nationalistic and isolationist groups throughout the world. It is intended virtually to prevent imports into any country, no matter how desirable. Carried to its logical conclusion it would mean the end not merely of imports but of exports as well. A nation must buy if it wants to sell. "Buy American" really means: Don't sell abroad any cotton, tobacco, lard, fruits, automobiles, electrical and agricultural machinery, or other burdensome surpluses. In reality it means: Destroy the prosperity of large sections of our agriculture and our export industries, and with them the prosperity of our great port cities.

We have reached a critical period in the progress toward world-wide recovery. In this country and in some others substantial progress has been made. But in the world as a whole recovery thus far has fallen short of the desired goal. It has proceeded by fits and starts and recurring recessions. The millions of unemployed, the low level of productive activity, the continued stagnation in the heavy-goods industries, and the insignificant advance made in the physical volume of world trade attest how really inadequate is the progress thus far made. And when one looks at the international situation, it is not difficult to see some of the weighty reasons why these unwelcome facts confront us.

There are a number of fundamental conditions without which a full measure of industrial recovery in any important country is not possible. In the first place, there must be present a material basis for recovery in the revival of demand in the capital and durable goods industries and in the whole range of constructional activities. After 6 years of depression we have reached a point in this country, for example, in consequence of the accumulated need for replacement, repairs, and renewals, and in consequence of the continued development of new technics, new processes, and new products, which foreshadows an enormous improvement, a great forward march, in the heavy capital goods industries. Thus the material and technological condition for a sustained and pronounced revival is, I believe, present.

In the second place, there is needed a better balance in the domestic cost-price situation. Costs in certain important heavy and constructional industries are abnormally swollen. We have not yet worked our way down to bedrock. A large section of our industry is maintaining an artificial price situation, is endeavoring to move forward under the heavy burden of inflated capitalization, excessive overhead charges, wasteful overcapacity, and obsolete units and equipment. Never was improvement in industrial efficiency more needed than now. We cannot hold our place in the world if industry is to rely on doles, subsidies, and other artificial arrangements which bolster up and keep alive inefficiency at the expense of the progress and expansion of the vigorous and efficient units in our economy. We must come down from our artificial stilts to solid reality if we are to achieve substantial industrial prosperity and if we are to hold our place in the world market. To this end we need renewed application of business energy and initiative.

Thirdly, we must leave no stone unturned to reach progressively a better balance in the international price structure. The world economy has been subjected to a number of violently destructive upheavals during the course of the depression. Each of these disruptions in the balance of prices has set in motion devastating waves of wild speculation which obstruct the normal processes of production and exchange.

We must minimize to the utmost possible extent the possibility of further serious upheavals. Statesmen in many countries are inquiring whether the time has not arrived when cooperation between leading countries could put an end to serious exchange fluctuations. Such action would enormously facilitate the remaining need for international price adjustments which must be made before a genuine balance has again been reached.

As progress is made in this direction, we may confidently expect a loosening of the quantitative and other artificial barriers to trade which have been erected as bulwarks of protection against the chaotic international price and monetary situation. We find a growing willingness among foreign countries to go along in our trade-agreements program to ease trade restrictions and to remove progressively the prevailing discriminatory practices. More and more, as the balance in the international structure is improved by the continued progress made in exchange stabilization, we may anticipate an accumulating movement in the direction of freeing the channels of international commerce. While we must proceed as rapidly as possible on many fronts, it is not necessary to solve all at once the many baffling problems which confront humanity at this moment in the field of international economic relations.

The final thing which is needed to bring about recovery, without which the material technological basis and the price balance just referred to become mere dead mechanisms without vital driving power, is the resurgence of the spirit of enterprise based on renewed confidence. Business calculations with respect to the expansion of investment activity depend not merely upon the technical needs of industry, upon cost and price relationships, but also upon confidence in the workability of human institutions, in the facilities and safeguards provided for both old and new enterprise, and in sufficient flexibility of costs and prices so that the efficient unit can go forward unhindered by the fetters imposed by abnormal restrictions upon production or by arbitrary rigidities in costs and prices. It is most gratifying in this connection to observe an improvement in confidence and in business in our own country. I predict this will gather large momentum in the coming months.

It is of utmost importance that we seek by every means at our disposal to solidify and make more secure the stability thus far reached and to facilitate continued progress toward an improved international situation. But there are some ominous tendencies present in the world which, if persisted in, cannot fail to bring disaster and to undo whatever progress has thus far been made toward greater world stability. We witness all about us a reckless competitive building up of armaments, a recurrence of the mad race which prior to 1914 led the nations of the world headlong to destruction. If persisted in this course will again plunge the world into disaster. If it remains unchecked, we shall witness national bankruptcies, hopelessly unbalanced budgets, and consequent inevitable inflation, together with the utter destruction of such measure of national stability as has thus far been achieved. The world cannot extricate itself from this relentless circle if it does not stop its extravagant military expenditures. International sanity requires both military and economic disarmament.

Isolationism has been tried and found wanting. It has destroyed $22,000,000,000 of international trade. It leaves every nation struggling as best it can to save for itself whatever it can from the general wreckage. The resulting international situation which confronts the world today gives cause for grave concern to every thinking person. We cannot afford, after years of experience, to discount its powerful effect upon peace, economic security, and stable governments everywhere. The issues involved are enormously greater than the petty interests of this or that industry in tariff protection. The explosives packed in the current nationalistic tendencies may result, as they have resulted, in the further disorganization of social and economic fabrics.

Facing these threatened dangers, however, I have faith in the great traditions and strength of our American civilization, and I also have faith that statesmanship will, before it is too late, respond to the world crisis and find a workable solution.

PEACE HATH HER VICTORIES

Mr. KNUTE HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech by our colleague the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CHRISTIANSON], made on June 8, which demonstrates how Sweden settles its difficulties without going to war.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTE HILL. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of Hon. THEODORE CHRISTIANSON, of Minnesota, at Pocono Pines, Pa., June 8, 1935:

We are gathered here to observe the thirtieth anniversary of the separation of two peoples, closely related, that from time immemorial have lived side by side on the Scandinavian Peninsula. Personally, I have seen neither Norway nor Sweden. Like my father before me, I was born in Minnesota. It is 85 years since my paternal grandparents, in obedience to an instinct which for unnumbered ages had prompted men and women of their blood to sail in ships out of Norwegian fiords into the sea, left their ancestral homes to seek more room and wider opportunities in a new land. I assume that most of you, like myself, are far removed from the European scene. You have become warp and woof in the fabric of America.

Nevertheless, although we belong wholly to this country, we cannot separate ourselves entirely from the Old World. We are the inheritors of traditions which have been brought to these shores. The British, the Irish, the French, the Germans, the Dutch and the Scandinavians came during the formative period; they contributed not only most of the blood of America, but most of its traditions and institutions. These peoples, and the others who followed, are a part of us, as we are a part of them. Nothing can happen to them that does not in a measure concern us.

It does not evidence, therefore, any narrow clannishness that we gather here to recall an event of historic importance and wide significance that brought honor and credit to our kinsmen across the sea, any more than it convicts a man of chauvinism, of whatever nationality his ancestors may have been, to observe Magna Carta day, to wear a sprig of shamrock in one's coat lapel, to thrill at the Marseillaise, to attend a performance of Goethe's Faust, or to drink Italian wine in commemoration of Christopher Columbus.

In order to understand what happened on June 7, 1905, it is important to know something of the history of the union between Norway and Sweden, which was severed on that day. The partnership under which these two countries had shared one king for 90 years, was one of the byproducts of the Napoleonic wars. King Gustavus IV of Sweden, sharing the prejudice of many of the reigning monarchs of his day against the young upstart from Corsica, mixed in the European melee, and paid for it by losing Finland to Russia. The Swedish people thereupon rid themselves of their king and in due season placed in the line of succession to the throne the son of an obscure French lawyer, who as a young man had enlisted in the marines as a private and, following the rising star of Bonaparte, had become Marshal Charles Jean Bernadotte of France. The new crown prince, who, when he became king of Sweden assumed the title of Charles XIV, repaid his former leader by joining the European coalition against him, cast the deciding die at Leipzig, and claimed for his reward the crown of Norway, which for 433 years had rested somewhat easily on the head of the King of Denmark. Norway, Barnadotte thought, would be a fair recompense for Sweden's loss of Finland.

It was not difficult to persuade the great powers, for by transferring Norway from Denmark to Sweden they would not only recognize adequately Sweden's assistance in putting Napoleon in his place, but inflict a fitting punishment upon Frederick VI of Denmark for the latter's obstinate attachment to the French emperor. Accordingly on January 14, 1814, by the Peace of Kiel, the assignment was made by a group of diplomats who did not scruple to confer what was not within their power to give.

The Norwegian people had, for some time, been considering separation from Denmark, and some of the national leaders had even been planning to bring about a union with Sweden; but when the European powers sought to accomplish that union by giving the Norwegian crown to the Swedish King as a pawn of war, the spirit of nationalism burst into flame and swept over the land. Christian Frederick, Prince of Denmark, who at the time was Viceroy of Norway, undoubtedly did his best to fan the fires. He denounced the peace of Kiel, declared that Norwegian sovereignty resided only in the people, and stepped to the front as the leader of a nationalistic movement.

On April 10, 1814, 112 representatives of the people met at Eidsvold. They assigned to a committee of 15 the duty of drafting a constitution. The instrument that resulted from their labors was liberal without being radical. A British commentator has declared: "There is not probably in the history of mankind another instance of a free constitution not erected amidst ruins and revolutions, not cemented with blood, but taken from the closet of the philosopher, and quietly reared and set to work, and found to be suitable without alteration to all ends of good government." The reason for the success which attended the work of these constitution makers was that what they wrote merely put into words principles and procedures which had long been followed. "The new constitution was but a superstructure of a building of which the foundations had been laid and the lower walls constructed 8 centuries before."

The assembly formally adopted the constitution on May 17, 1814, and on the same day elected Christian Frederick king of Norway. The reign of the new king was short, lasting only 143 days. The former marshal of France, backed by the great monarchs of Europe, invaded the country. Colonel Krebs and his 2,500 Norwegians won brilliant victories at Lier and Matrand, but Christian Frederick's little army could not hope to stand for long against Swedish veterans commanded by one of the greatest warriors of Europe. Bernadotte, showing that he was a statesman as well as a soldier, refrained from pressing his military advantage, offered an armistice, and agreed to accept the Eidsvold constitution with such modifications as were required to effectuate a dynastic union between Norway and Sweden. On August 14, 1814, at the Convention of Moss, the offer was accepted, subject to ratification by the Storthing. The Storthing met on October 7, and 13 days later, by a vote of 72 to 5, agreed to accept the terms of the convention. Christian Frederick reluctantly surrendered his crown and returned to Denmark.

The act of union, which was approved by the Norwegian Storthing and the Swedish Riksdag the following year, like the Norwegian constitution recognized the union as resting, not on the Treaty of Kiel, but on the free consent of the Norwegian people. It recognized also the complete equality of the two kingdoms. It constituted, therefore, a renunciation of the Treaty of Kiel—a fact which must be borne in mind if one wishes to understand the issues involved in the separation which occurred 90 years later.

Within two decades after the union with Sweden was consummated there was launched a movement which was due to influence Norwegian thought profoundly. Norway's literature heretofore had drawn its inspiration from abroad; it had been basically Danish. Henrik Wergeland, the poet, initiated a new trend. He conceived the idea that as the men of Eidsvold had asserted the nation's political independence, Norway's poets and thinkers must establish its cultural independence. He proceeded to draw his literary material, not from classical sources as the Danes and their Norwegian imitators had been wont to do, but from the life of Norway's rural people. He also scorned the current literary forms and incurred the criticism of the patrician Johan Sebastian Welhaven. Between the two a literary feud developed, which shortly divided the nation in two schools of thought. On the one side, with Wergeland, were ranged the common people, who became infected with his fierce nationalism; on the other, back of Welhaven, stood the official class—the defenders of the status quo. The controversy spread from the literary to the political and sociological front. Out of it eventually came the cleavage between the Party of the Left and the Party of the Right. The conservatives were disposed to support the king and the union with Sweden; the liberals, on the other hand, were fierce nationalistis, who fought unceasingly to extend Norway's autonomy.

Ivar Aasen led a movement for the substitution of the local dialects, the "language of the common people", for the literary Danish, which to him was the sign of an ancient bondage. He raised the colloquial speech to a new dignity by reducing it to grammatical form. His work did not find general acceptance, but he succeeded in initiating a movement which has given to the Danish language as used in Norway a distinctly Norwegian flavor.

In 1850 Ole Bull built in Bergen a theater, of which Henrik Ibsen became stage manager, and the following year Bjornstjerne Bjornson, then of youth of 23, collaborated with Ibsen and others in establishing a national theater in the capital, in which Norwegian actors were to present Norwegian plays. Bjornson described the institution as "an outpost of nationalism against foreign supremacy." In 1857 Bjornson revived the Wergeland tradition by publishing Synnöve Solbakken, a novel which glorified the life and character of Norway's rural folk. He was joined by a galaxy of young writers, among whom the most conspicuous were Jonas Lie, Alexander Kielland, and Arne Garborg, who attacked social wrongs and pleaded for a better social order. Edvard Grieg and his contemporaries established a distinctly national school of music. Perhaps the most significant result of the work of these and other men of creative genius was that it developed in the people a new confidence in their native culture. Out of that confidence sprang a national consciousness which paved the way for the events of 1905.

In 1572 the King of Denmark had established in Norway the office of statholder, or viceroy, which served as a connecting link between the crown and the government. That office had been retained when the King of Sweden become King of Norway in 1814. In 1873 the Storthing passed a bill abolishing the office and establishing in its place that of prime minister. The next step to make the Government responsible to the people was taken a year later when the Storthing passed a bill requiring ministers of state to be members of that body and responsible to it. Oscar II vetoed the measure. The next Storthing repassed the bill, as did a third, and each time the King interposed a veto.

According to the terms of the constitution of 1814, a bill passed by three Storthings became a law, notwithstanding the King's objection; but the ministry nevertheless refused to promulgate the measure, taking the position that it amended the constitution and was therefore subject to an absolute veto. The Storthing thereupon impeached the entire ministry and removed it from office. The King finally yielded, after the measure had been so amended as to provide that members of the ministry should be eligible to election to the Storthing from districts in which they were not resident. Through the new constitutional amendment Norway got a cabinet form of government and stepped into line with the most advanced democratic states in Europe.

If the equality stipulated in the act of union had been recognized in practice as it had been acknowledged in theory, there probably would have been no separation of Norway and Sweden in 1905. But, unfortunately, it was not. The Norwegian Constitution was defective in that it made no specific provision for the conduct of foreign affairs; accordingly the King was left with a free hand in the appointment of diplomatic and consular representatives. Inasmuch as there was no Norwegian agency through which he could operate, he acted through the Swedish Minister of Foreign Affairs. Until 1836 the nomination of consuls, who represented Norway and Sweden jointly, was made in actual practice by the Swedish Council of State. Thereafter consuls were nominated by a joint council of State, upon which both countries were represented. In 1842 it was agreed that all commercial treaties which concerned both countries should be ratified by this composite body.

Until 1885, despite occasional controversies, the plan worked. But during that year Sweden incorporated in her constitution a section which provided that all questions of foreign policy should thenceforth be decided by the Swedish Foreign Minister. The effect was to subject the King of Norway and Sweden, while acting on matters which concerned both countries, to direction by the Swedish Government, while he was under no direction from the Norwegian Government. The control of Norway's foreign policy had passed into the hands of a Swedish official who was responsible only to the Swedish Riksdag. The new arrangement presented a direct threat to Norwegian sovereignty and made Norway, insofar as her foreign affairs were concerned, a vassal of Sweden.

The Swedes at once recognized the unfairness of the arrangement and offered to negotiate. They were willing to go full length in redressing the grievance. But by this time the Norwegian people, their spirit of nationalism running strong, were not disposed to accept such terms as the Swedes could afford to give. What the Norwegians had set their hearts on was a separate Norwegian foreign service.

The Norwegians felt that their shipping and foreign-trade interests, twice as great as those of Sweden, needed separate representation. The Swedes, on the other hand, feared that if Norway obtained the rights to negotiate treaties with foreign countries, she might commit herself to obligations that would jeopardize the safety of both countries. This fear was not without foundation, for one or two of the most influential Norwegian leaders had indiscreetly proposed that Russia be given an outlet to the ocean through an ice-free port on the northern coast of Norway, 18 miles from the Finnish-Norwegian boundary. If Russia, like the camel that got its nose inside the tent, effected the slightest penetration of Scandinavian soil, it would be only a question of time, the Swedes believed, until the whole peninsula became a Russian province.

I shall not burden you will all the details of the story of the 20-year effort to solve what had become an unsolvable problem. In 1892 the Storthing, without consulting Sweden, adopted a resolution abolishing the joint consular service, which the King promptly vetoed. In 1895, and again in 1902, a joint commission was created to consider the points at issue. In each case the two countries agreed to disagree. To be sure, the commissioners reached an understanding; they proposed that there should be two separate consular systems, each directed by its home government, and that the relations which the respective consular services were to bear to the minister of foreign affairs should be defined in identical laws passed by the Parliaments of the two countries and not subject to amendment or repeal except by mutual consent. This proposal was hailed in both Norway and Sweden as a solution of the vexed problem; but exchanges of views between the two Governments as to what the "identical laws" should provide disclosed no common ground upon which they could meet.

The Swedish Riksdag, anxious to preserve the union, which was threatened by a rapidly crystallizing Norwegian opinion, made another effort toward a rapprochement. It invited the cabinets of the two kingdoms to negotiate an agreement providing that there should be a joint foreign minister, who might be either a Swede or a Norwegian, to whom the separate consuls of the two nations should be responsible.

The Norwegian Government refused to reopen negotiations, and the Storthing, with only 10 dissenting votes, passed a bill creating a separate Norwegian consular service. The King vetoed the measure, and the Norwegian members of the Swedish-Norwegian ministry resigned. The King, realizing that he could find no one in Norway who would accept the responsibility of forming a new ministry, refused to accept the resignation.

On June 7, 1905, the ministers, headed by Christian Michelsen, the Minister of State, appeared before the Storthing and gave notice of the resignation. Thereupon, without debate, the Storthing unanimously adopted a resolution declaring that inasmuch as the King had no ministry through which he could act, and had declared himself unable to form one, the constitutional royal power had ceased to operate; that the King of Norway was unable to continue to function as such; and that the union of Sweden and Norway had therefore been dissolved. The Storthing empowered the members of the ministry to constitute themselves a temporary government, notified the King that the union was dissolved, and asked him to consent to the election of a member of his family as King of Norway.

The events which followed this coup d'état demonstrated the wisdom and greatness of the Swedish people. There can be little doubt that with their superior wealth and population and their preponderance of military and naval strength they could have forced Norway to remain in the union. To let Norway go meant to weaken Sweden's power to resist possible aggression from outside, as Sven Hedin had pointed out in his discussions with Fridtjof Nansen. The legal question whether Norway could withdraw from the union without Sweden's consent was at least debatable. The situation was one which, between any other two nations, would undoubtedly have brought armed conflict.

On May Day, when events were quickly moving toward a crisis, 30,000 Swedish workingmen marched through the streets of Stockholm, carrying banners inscribed "Justice to Norway, peace with Norway" and "Peace is secured by justice." After listening to a speaker who declared that "Sweden should treat Norway as the Swedes would wish to be treated by the Norwegians if Norway was the larger and stronger nation", the huge throng of Swedish men and women closed their meeting by singing the Norwegian national anthem.

Upon receiving notification that Norway had dissolved the union, King Oscar went through the formality of issuing a protest, but he took no step to prevent the separation. A sincere friend of peace, he refused to involve the two nations in a fratricidal struggle which would weaken and embitter both. The ministry recommended to the Riksdag that no effort be made to maintain the union by force, declaring that a union so maintained would be a source of weakness and not of strength.

The Riksdag passed a resolution offering to negotiate terms of separation after the Norwegian people by a plebiscite had indicated that they desired a severence of the union. By a strange coincidence, on the same day the Storthing ordered a general election to be held on August 13, at which the question of separation would be submitted. On the appointed day 368,208 voted for dissolution, and only 184 against.

In August and September, for more than 3 weeks representatives of the two countries negotiated at Karlstad. They agreed that new fortifications, erected along the border, should be razed. They created a neutral zone within which neither country would ever conduct any military operations. They stipulated that all points at issue between the two kingdoms not involving the independence or integrity of either should be submitted to The Hague tribunal.

The Storthing ratified the agreement on October 9, and 1 week later the Riksdag annulled the act of union. On October 27 Oscar II formally abdicated as King of Norway.

As American citizens, concerned about our own affairs, we should probably not be here today but for the fact that the events which I have related carry a lesson for us and for all the nations of the world. We are in the sixth year of a depression of unprecedented severity and duration. With the rest of the world we are suffering economic shell-shock from the Great War—the most destructive war of all time. We got into that war, although we had much less at stake than Norway and Sweden had in 1905. I believe that the same thing can be said of all the other participants in that titanic struggle. An Austrian archduke was murdered by a rash Serbian youth at Sarajevo. Therefore 10,000,000 men, the very flower of the civilized world, must be murdered, too. Does that make sense? The simplest half-wit could answer that question more wisely than the statesmen of the world answered it 21 years ago.

We entered that struggle in order to "make the world safe for democracy." Disregarding the generally accepted fact that we failed utterly to attain our professed objective, let me ask what business is it of ours whether democracy is "safe" in Europe and Asia. After all, democracy is a thing that springs from within; it cannot be imposed from without. If a people is ready for it, is capable of it, and is determined to have it, that people will get it and retain it, as the experience of the Scandinavian countries, of Holland, and of Switzerland well proves.

If other countries want dictators, let them have them. It is our job to see to it that we do not allow any dictatorship at home.

The theme that flows naturally from the historic facts which we have reviewed today is the futility of war. This country has had six wars, and it is reasonable to believe that all but one of them should, and could, have been averted. The one exception was the War of the Revolution. It justified itself by making it possible for a free people to develop free institutions and to build on this continent the greatest republic of all time.

The War of 1812 was fought to defend our right to use the seas. It did not settle anything; in the treaty of peace which followed it the issue which started it was not even mentioned. It did not give us great military prestige; the only battle in it that reflected any particular credit upon us was the Battle of New Orleans, which was fought after the war was over. The National Capital was sacked and burned, and today the only remaining tangible result of the War of 1812 is that we call the President's home the White House instead of the Executive Mansion—which, I concede, is an improvement, but hardly worth going to war for.

The War with Mexico was unpopular even while it was being fought. It was excoriated by Tom Corwin and condemned by Abraham Lincoln. At that, it had the unique justification that it was the only war since the Revolution out of which we ever got anything worth having. Stripping off the cloak of righteousness with which we like to cover our nakedness, it was a war of conquest. It was the kind of war our Norse ancestors were wont to wage before they became too civilized to fight.

When we come to the Civil War I admit that I am treading on dangerous ground. It has become so intimately tied up to our emotions that anybody who questions its justification is under suspicion of not being as patriotic as he should be. But, while I concede fully that the preservation of the Nation's integrity was worth every drop of blood spilled, I shall adhere to my premise that the Civil War was one which should and could and would have been averted if the Nation's statesmanship had not been utterly bankrupt in the latter fifties. The only truly great political leader of the day was Lincoln, and he came to power only when it was already too late to avert a conflict of arms. For only a fraction of the cost of the Civil War the Federal Government could have bought every slave in the South, paying twice what his master considered him worth, and could thereby have avoided not only the war itself but the carpetbag regime which followed it.

The War with Spain, like the World War, had a euphonious name. It was called a "war for humanity." We started it because we believed that Spain was responsible for blowing up the Maine, which we have never been able to prove. We fed the finest young men in the country embalmed beef, killing more of them with putrid food and bad water than the Spaniards did with bullets, and emerged from the affray with nothing to show for our effort but a Pandora's box of continuing and recurring troubles.

The sixth war in which we engaged I have already mentioned. I hope it was our last war, but fear it will not be. If anybody is disposed to question the assertion that our entry into it was the most colossal blunder of our Nation during its entire history, I shall agree to abide by the vote of any intelligent adult audience in the land.

Men are supposed to learn from their past mistakes. Sometimes I wonder whether they do. Today our Government is spending more for the Army and the Navy—for the next war—than ever before in times of peace. This year Congress is making $1,000,000,000 available for defense. By a vulgar display of naval strength in the Pacific we are helping the jingoes of Japan to get more funds for counterdefense from the Japanese Diet. Some day a spark will touch off an emotional powder magazine, and the two defensive navies, covering their camouflage of pretense with the black paint of war, will steam to some spot in waters that "lie east of Suez"; thundering guns will drop their burdens, spars will float among the waves; for a few moments the foam will be streaked with red. Then it will be said in the East that brown boys died for an emperor who was descended from some god, and in the West that white-skinned lads perished to defend some high and mighty principle that everybody talks about and nobody really understands. And a hundred years hence men delving in books and records and surveying the huge costs and insignificant consequences will wonder what in the world those boys did die for.

The time has come for us as Americans to think seriously about how we can keep out of the next war. The time has come to consider how we can preserve civilization in a world that seems determined to destroy it.

I have not come to give you the plans and specifications of a utopia, but I can suggest some things that should be done, and done at once. We should now, while the nations are at peace, redefine neutrality, rewrite the law of contraband, and recheck our ideas concerning the freedom of the seas; this we should do so that when two or more nations come to grips again we shall not find ourselves involved on one side or the other for supplying war materials or refusing so to do. We should let it be known that we do not consider warring peoples a good risk and that therefore we do not purpose to be their banker. We should serve notice upon our own citizens that we will protect their persons and their dollars so long as they keep them both at home, but that if they venture with either into zones of hostility they will do so without the backing of American battleships. We should be honest with our profiteers, telling them frankly that in the next war there will be no profits, and that if they want to spend any money for propaganda they will gain most by spending it for propaganda to keep us out. We should renew our negotiations with the great powers, seeking not only a limitation but a progressive reduction of armaments. We should show by example as well as precept that when we signed the Kellogg-Briand Pact to outlaw war we did not take the name of peace in vain.

It cannot be said of the two nations whose adventure in peaceful adjustment of international controversy we commemorate today, that they did not dare to fight. In their veins coursed the reddest fighting blood of Europe. For a thousand years their forebears scoured the seas and harassed every coast of the then known world. Their depredations made pious priests write into the ritual of the church, "From the fury of the Norsemen, deliver us, O Lord." They overran Russia and established its first dynasty, plundered palaces in Byzantium, conducted campaigns in Syria, Armenia, Palestine, Sicily, and Africa. They established colonies along the coast of Ireland, placed the greater part of England under their dominion, and exacted tribute from Alfred the Great. Under Rollo they invaded France and forced Charles III to surrender that part of his kingdom since known as "Normandy." Under Rollo's descendant, William the Conqueror, they took possession of England in 1066 and imposed the Norman upon the Anglo-Saxon culture. The history of western Europe for many centuries is the story of the exploits of tall blond warriors that came out of the North.

What accounts for the fact that the children of this fighting race became men of peace? Civilization. They not only had lost interest in war by learning its futility, but they had found that the battles that win enduring victories are the battles in which mind engages mind. So it is that the great names of Norway, Sweden, and Denmark today are not, like the Viking names of old, the names of soldiers, but of poets, composers, musicians, painters, sculptors, novelists, dramatists, historians, linguists, critics, architects, engineers, and statesmen. I wonder if we cannot find in the evolution of the people of the north a hint and a promise of what will come, as civilization advances throughout the world, to every people and every race.

The skalds, those poets and prophets of long ago, brooded on such themes as the mysteries of creation, the end of the world, and the death of the gods. They conceived of existence as a constant struggle between good and evil, light and darkness, life and death. In that final tragedy known as "Ragnarok", fate decreed that Odin, Thor, and most of the other gods and heroes of Valhalla would be slain. The sun would darken, fire consume the land, and the sea engulf the earth. But out of the waters would arise a new world, verdant and fruitful, where evil could not intrude, where there would be no more war, and there peace and righteousness would prevail. There a new race of men would appear, to live with the gods that had survived Ragnarok; and over them all would reign a new God, whose name no one dares speak—whose name, indeed, no one knows.

Man's most inspiring hope today is that this dream of the skalds was not merely a poetic fancy but a true and glorious prophecy.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute in order to explain my absence on two roll calls.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, on roll call 93 of June 12 and on roll call 94 of June 13 I was necessarily absent, due to the fact I was acting as chairman of a subcommittee of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the House, which committee was holding hearings on the Pettengill long-and-short-haul bill during the absence of the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL], who was acting in a similar capacity on a subcommittee having in charge the holding company bill.

ANTILYNCHING

Mr. MORITZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address of my own.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORITZ. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address which I delivered over the radio:

Friends, I deem it a rare privilege to address you on a practice that has gone farther toward destroying our civilization, returning to an age of persecution and barbarism, and destroying the finest principles of Americanism than any plague that had ever infested this country.

I refer to that despicable, cowardly, criminal form of lawlessness that should be ranked as public enemy no. 1 of law and order, namely lynching.

We shudder as we review the dark, dim days of Salem witchcraft when superstition condemned many innocent victims to horrible death, to the days of the guillotine when human beings were beheaded to satisfy the whim of some monarch. Yet in this year of our Lord, 1935, we tolerate—and in some instances uphold—the mob that steals in under a blanket of darkness, defies the very law created for our protection, and condemns to horrible death some poor soul without so much as a hearing.

Why do I approve of an antilynching law?

Because I, like you, am an American citizen and a believer of the principles upon which our democracy is founded.

It is my firm belief that the one outstanding creed, not only of our Government but also of humanity, decrees:

"A man is innocent until proven guilty."

You can imagine the emotion, the heartache, and heartbreak of some poor mother or wife and family whose loved one is spirited away by the human wolf pack and hung by his neck until dead—a gruesome, horrible death, instigated by human vultures—on suspicion, and suspicion alone, mind you.

My very heart bleeds for many innocent souls who have passed to the great beyond without so much as a trial, the trial that God intended even the humblest should receive.

Have we entered an era of intolerance, returned to an age that mocks law and order, and steeled ourselves to the point that we can view with indifference the most damnable, most unfair, and most barbarous practice known to mankind?

Can the United States of America, after setting an example of Government that the entire world respects, conscientiously condone the cold-blooded, first-degree murder of a blood-thirsty, inhuman pack of monsters who laugh in the face of those who have founded our democracy and in doing so have guaranteed the constitutional protection which every citizen of this great Republic, regardless of creed, race, or color, is rightfully entitled?

I say no, and, in doing so, voice a most emphatic no.

It is my honest belief that those whose hands are stained with the blood of one not proven guilty in a court of justice should be punished accordingly, should be charged with the murder they have committed, and should be punished to the fullest extent of the law.

It is time, good friends, that this most dastardly, most cowardly, and most repulsive form of crime be abolished. The time is ripe when we, as a people, should turn upon the wrongdoers who are responsible for this premeditated form of murder and show these mobs, for once and for all, that we are not a race of savages who will tolerate the taking of a man's life without first granting him the trial that both God and man intended he should have.

It is time, and good time, that we should strike back at those whose victims have no chance to fight back and to uphold the very ideals that years ago prompted our forefathers to go to war with a great empire and gain the independence, liberty, and square deal denied us while under European yoke.

Before proceeding further, may I, with your kind permission, cite an outstanding example of patriotism, courage, and respect for the law that will live long in American annals.

I refer to that heart-broken and most gallant hero and father, Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, whose babe in arms was so cruelly kidnaped and murdered a few years ago.

Would it not have been an easy matter for Lindbergh's far-reaching influence and personal popularity to have incited a flaming mob spirit and have caused the horrible death of a suspect since proven guilty and condemned to death in a court of law?

Yet what action did he take?

None whatever save to mask his emotion, conceal his suffering, and with his head up and heart every bit as stout as when he made history by spanning the Atlantic, say:

"I want this man (with whose identity you undoubtedly are familiar) to receive a fair trial." Yet, there are those who, for far less reason, frequently no reason at all, are so steeped in prejudice, so small of heart, so deprived of character, and so contemptuous of your law and of my law that they will, brazenly and defiantly, seize a man from the very portals of justice, beat him and curse him, inflict upon him multiple tortures too horrible to mention, and hang him by the neck until he is a lifeless, inanimate, cruel testimonial of unspeakable barbarism.

Yet, good friends, it is within our power to put a stop to this terrible foe of civilization, to prove for once and all we are solidly behind the Government we love and to eradicate, for once and all, this public enemy no. 1 of the United States and civilization, the lyncher.

In much the same fashion that our Department of Justice has virtually eliminated the kidnaper, has jailed, and in some instances legally put to death, the gangster element, and has subdued the gunman and murderer in hand-to-hand battle, it also can take steps which will prove for once and all that we, as a people, will not tolerate (much less sanction) the taking of a life by those with no authority to do so.

My friends, in all humility, I have tried to present facts as I see them. I have tried to reveal the horrors, the injustice and the sorrows caused by those half insane, half inhuman citizens who, unless we act and act quickly, will continue the reign of horror that has been created through this most contemptible and most cowardly of all practices—lynching.

I can only recommend measures that would put an end to a throw-back to the tortures our forefathers opposed so vigorously while banding us into the greatest nation on earth while shedding their blood. In other words I heartily recommend an antilynching law, a law that will punish the offenders and prove to the whole wide world that the United States of America, my United States and your United States, can enforce its own laws, inflict its own penalties, and exercise its own rights without interference of those who strive to tear down the very foundation upon which our Constitution is founded, namely the creed that: "A man is innocent until proven guilty."

And that guilt, mind you, can be proven only in a court of law and not by a band of murderers who would defy all principles of rationalism and Americanism.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of today the gentleman from California [Mr. HOEPPEL] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein three verses of a poem, Our Flag.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, today is the one hundred and fifty-eighth anniversary of the adoption of our flag. Our flag was officially born when George Washington and two compatriots, as representatives of the Continental Congress, called on Mrs. Betsy Ross in Philadelphia and left an order for a flag. It would be futile for me or anyone else to attempt to express in mere words the symbolic value of the Stars and Stripes and what our flag means to us as citizens of a great republic. I fear, however, that too many visualize our flag as more or less the symbol of the veteran rather than the symbol of citizenship.

As a veteran of two wars, I make the assertion without apology that each and every one of us has a sacred obligation to the flag, the symbol of our national life, and that even though the majority of our citizens did not have the opportunity and honor of serving our Nation in war in the military or naval service, nevertheless the spirit of sacrifice and patriotic devotion evidenced by the nonveteran has equaled, if not in some instances eclipsed, that of the veteran himself. In simple justice we cannot ignore the sacrifices and the heroism of the mothers of our race, who instill patriotism and love of country in the hearts of their children from infancy and who thus lend impetus to the determination of the manhood of America to defend right and justice through every hazard. This debt which we owe to the mothers of our race should be gratefully acknowledged on this anniversary of the birth of our flag. The fortitude, patience, and hope which are evidenced by the youth of America today, passing as they are through a most serious economic crisis, portrays, as nothing else can, the high type of citizenship inculcated in the young, inspired, as we know it to be, in the family circle, through the love of God, country, and flag on the part of the parenthood of America.

The cross and the Bible, the two basic symbols of Christianity, are of no avail unless we reflect in our daily lives the precepts based upon their acceptance. Similarly, our Declaration of Independence, our Constitution, and our flag are symbols of American ideals of liberty and justice and we attain to the heights of citizenship, rightfully predicated upon these principles, insofar as we apply them in our daily contact with each other as citizens. We give further confirmation of these principles as we apply them in our relationship with other nations of the world.

Harry L. Burgess, of California, a comrade of mine and a member of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, has written a poem which I ask leave to insert in the RECORD at this point, since it strikingly personifies the flag in our daily lives and voices the sentiments I have here sought to express.

OUR FLAG AND YOU

I am whatever you make me,
And nothing, nothing more,
I am your belief in yourself,
The heights to which people may soar;
I live a life of various moods,
And of passions that urge and lag,
At times I rear myself with pride,
I am the American flag.

When purpose departs and I droop in shame,
And my judgment goes astray,
Still I am all that you hope to be
As you toil from day to day;
I am song and fear, and ennobling hope
That should never, never sag,
I am the Constitution, the courts and the law,
I am the American flag.

I swing aloft with colorful gleam,
A symbol of your own self,
My stars and stripes are your fondest dreams,
Devoid of pilfer and pelf;
They are bright with courage and resolute faith,
When you do not permit them to drag,
I am made from your true hearts and righteous souls
I am the American flag.

THE OLDEST LIVING DEFENDERS OF THE FLAG

While we pay just homage and tribute to our flag and to the defenders of the flag who have passed on, it is proper and appropriate that we also pause to consider and pay tribute to those yet alive who have contributed so much to maintain the honor and prestige due the United States as a nation and the flag which symbolizes it.

It is indeed an honor to me to have this opportunity of reciting the distinguished military service of Brig. Gen. Aaron Simon Daggett, retired, who was born June 14, 1837, at Green Corner, Maine, and who thus today celebrates his ninety-eighth birthday. He is the oldest officer on the retired list.

General Dagget enlisted on April 27, 1861, as a private in Company E of the Fifth Maine Volunteer Infantry, and was commissioned second lieutenant 4 days later. He was promoted to first lieutenant May 27 and to captain August 15 of the same year, 1861. He is a veteran of the Civil War, the Indian Wars, and the Spanish-American War.

He participated in 18 battles of the Civil War, commencing with the First Battle of Bull Run July 21, 1861, and including the Battles of West Point, Gaines' Mills, Goldings' Farm, White Oak Swamp, Second Battle of Bull Run, Battle of Crampton's Gap, Antietam, and Fredericksburg, Va.; Second Battle of Fredericksburg, Salem Church, Gettysburg, Rappahannock Station; operations at Mine Run; Battles of the Wilderness, Spottslvania, Cold Harbor, and Petersburg. At Spottsylvania he was wounded at the "bloody angle", and he was again wounded at Cold Harbor.

He was brevetted major "for gallant and meritorious services in the Battle of Rappahannock Station, November 7, 1863", and was later brevetted lieutenant colonel "for gallant and meritorious services in the Battle of the Wilderness." After the war he was brevetted colonel and brigadier general, United States Volunteers, "for gallant and meritorious services during the Civil War."

After the Civil War, he was commissioned captain, Sixteenth Infantry, and served in various parts of the United States until June 1898, when he embarked, with his command, with the American army of invasion for Cuba.

He participated in the Battle of San Juan, Cuba, in July 1898. Following this, he served in the Philippine Islands where he participated in the battles at Imus River and Bacoor. He served in China with the Chinese Relief Expedition and was recommended for "gallantry in the Battle of Yangstun, China, August 6, 1900, and for energy and good judgment in the attack on Pekin, China, August 14, 1900, and for gallantry and excellent supervision of the attack on the gates of the Imperial City, August 15, 1900."

In the Chinese Relief Expedition, American troops served for the first time in our history with allied troops. The very creditable manner in which our troops comported themselves on the field of battle is described in a volume published in 1903 by the Hudson-Kimberly Publishing Co., of Kansas City, Mo. In this volume, General Daggett, then colonel of the Fourteenth Infantry, with his command, is credited with being the first to scale the walls of Pekin and the first to open the gates to bring relief to the beleaguered legations and populace, notwithstanding that one of the armies of the allied forces participating endeavored to attain this objective first, but they were repulsed.

The report recounts that Battery F of the Fifth Artillery, commanded by Captain Reilly, who was killed in the attack, shelled the gates preparatory to the action. During the bombardment, General Chaffee was in command of the American troops. Addressing a remark to Captain Leonard, now Major General Leonard, retired, General Daggett stated, "I believe that wall can be scaled." His enlisted trumpeter, Calvin Titus, now Colonel Titus, retired, spoke up, "If you wish, I will try it, sir." General Daggett consented. Titus leading, the Fourteenth Infantry men were soon on top of the wall, and after stopping the Chinese fire, they entered the city and opened the gates, thus permitting the allied troops to enter.

General Daggett, with his command, was the first finally to reach the wall, first actually to scale it, and first to get inside the fortifications.

In paying tribute to General Daggett and his immediate command, the Fourteenth Infantry, I do not wish to detract from the credit due other American troops who participated in the relief of Pekin and whose commendable and creditable service evidenced to the participating allied troops that the American soldier was the equal, if not the peer of any other.

Most remarkable and outstanding in the long, honored, and distinguished career of General Daggett is the fact that at the age of 99 years he is still active in the affairs of his country and his fellow men. According to a communication received, General Daggett is extremely alert mentally. Reading is his hobby. About 2 weeks ago he attended a meeting of National Indian War Veterans and gave a 10-minute address, recounting some of his experiences as a soldier. His friend, Gen. Samuel Sumner of the Indian wars, who is 96 years of age, frequently takes him for an automobile ride.

OLDEST KNOWN RETIRED ENLISTED MEN

It appears fitting on this occasion also to recognize the outstanding service of the oldest known retired enlisted men who served during the Civil War, our Indian wars, and the Spanish-American War. One such is Comrade James H. Wilson, now residing at Watertown, N. Y., who is 96 years of age. The next oldest, according to my knowledge, is Comrade E. M. Waller, a resident of the District of Columbia, who enlisted in the Confederate service at the age of 14 years as a drummer boy in the Thirteenth Tennessee Infantry on June 6, 1861, to serve for a period of 1 year. He was discharged by expiration of term of service immediately after the Battle of Pittsburg Landing, Tenn., in which engagement he, a mere youth, participated. He reenlisted in General Bell's escort of General Forest's cavalry and was in all engagements in which Brigadier General Forest's cavalry forces participated, including Paducah, Ky.; Fort Pillow, Brices Cross Roads, Miss.; and Johnsonville, on the Tennessee River; and was in the advance guard of Hood's army in its advance to Nashville. He participated in all the engagements which were fought in this advance and acted as the rear guard in the retreat of General Hood's troops, which meant that he was under fire virtually every day from the time General Hood's lines were broken at Nashville until they crossed the Tennessee River in their retreat. Comrade Waller was awarded a medal of honor by the Confederacy for outstanding valor on the field of battle.

After the Civil War, Comrade Waller enlisted in the Eleventh Infantry and served during the Indian uprisings in the West. He was discharged in 1878 and reenlisted in the Fifth Cavalry, serving in that regiment continuously until he was placed on the retired list as an enlisted man in June 1902.

The high type of creditable service which Comrade Waller rendered to the Confederacy and later in the Regular service has been continued by him in his retirement. Since 1903 he has been the custodian clerk of All Souls' Unitarian Church in the city of Washington, and has the highest testimonials of esteem and regard from citizens of influence here in the District. He is the present commander of Camp 171, United Confederate Veterans, and brigadier general commanding the District brigade of Confederate veterans. He is also a member of the Retired Men's Association, No. 1, of the District of Columbia.

In closing, it is fitting that I reiterate that the examples of unselfish service which I have just enumerated should inspire our American youth of today to emulate in the conduct of their daily lives the high type of service which was so unstintingly and patriotically given in peace as well as in war by General Daggett, Comrade Waller, and their aged compatriots. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, in recognition and in appreciation of a highly patriotic speech just made by the gentleman, I ask unanimous consent that his time may be extended 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, yesterday a colloquy occurred on the floor of the House between the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] and myself, and I wish to say at this time that what I hereafter state will in no wise impugn the motives and action of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. I regard him as one of the most outstanding Members of this House. He is a personal friend of mine, and I wish to cooperate with him wherever I can in the interest of legislation in behalf of the people.

In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday, on page 9226, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] asked this question:

I asked the gentleman if he advocates what is going on now in Russia.

To this I replied:

In reference to Russia, yes.

As Mr. BLANTON proceeded without giving me time to answer fully, I here wish to affirm that it is my opinion that the Russian people are entitled to the type of government that they themselves wish and that it is not the business of any American to interfere in the internal political problems of a friendly nation. The President himself recognized this basic American principle when he recognized Russia and sent a distinguished Ambassador to represent us.

I wish to reiterate that I am a firm believer in the freedom of speech, in the freedom of religious worship, and also in the free use of the radio by all classes and groups of our own citizenry. It ill behooves me as a citizen to criticize a friendly nation as long as we have millions of our own people unemployed, with a debt problem becoming increasingly burdensome, and very little to cling to in our distress except hope! It is my opinion that if we would pay more attention to our own affairs and abolish special privilege, the creator of communists in this country, we would be more truly living up to the true concepts of Americanism.

As a Christian who believes in the basic teaching of the Bible, I cannot condone or approve of the reported actions of the Russian Government in respect to religion. I believe that every man has a right to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, whether he be in Russia, Mexico, or anywhere else, and I do not believe that any nation or any person has the right to attempt to efface the thought of God from the schools.

While I do not approve of the reported attitude of the Russian Government toward religion, my opinion of the Russian people, with whom I lived for 6 years, is that they are a wonderful people. I found them to be a sincere, family-loving, Christian people, honest and upright, and it was a pleasure to be associated with them.

Yesterday I called the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] to a speech delivered by Mr. Gannett, of the Gannett newspapers. I recognize that the newspapers cannot always be right, although I believe they make a sincere effort to give us the truth. I met Mr. Gannett personally at a banquet recently, and he gave us his fair and honest impressions in reference to his journey through Europe and expressed his views in reference to the governments of Europe. I hope that every Member will read what Mr. Gannett said in reference to Russia, which appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 8.

I attended a dinner last winter here in Washington, honoring the Russian Ambassador, at which banquet our late-lamented Speaker, Mr. Rainey, gave a very clear and concise résumé of his experiences and observations in Europe. He did not criticize but rather extolled the Russian idea of cooperation. I have no knowledge of conditions in Russia, except that gained from reading and from the contacts made with persons who have been in Russia, but it would seem to me that if our Government, through the Department of State, finds conditions in Russia to be detrimental or menacing to our country, suitable recommendations should be made by the State Department to the President and, if necessary, to the Congress. I am not concerned with the problems of the Russian people, or any other foreign people, except from the broad standpoint of brotherhood, but I am vitally and basically interested in the well-being of our own people who are being driven into communistic thought by the agencies of entrenched wealth which are becoming increasingly powerful. The failure of our Democratic administration adequately to tax entrenched wealth is an indictment, it would appear, of our intelligence and ability to legislate in the interest of the people.

Our Democratic platform of 1932 specifically pledged a Budget balanced with revenue raised upon the basis of ability to pay. Instead of paying our obligations, we are continuing to vote tax-exempt bonds, which are subscribed to with alacrity by Pierpont Morgan and others of the "ultra-patriotic" group, who are, in fact, so patriotic that they evade income-tax payments wherever possible. Pierpont Morgan, however, did pay income tax to England while he was not paying any to the United States.

Under the new deal, the profits of many corporations have increased. The billions of dollars of surpluses which lie in the vaults of the great corporations are not taxed. Under the new deal the number of persons receiving net incomes of more than $25,000 per annum has increased surprisingly while the number of individuals receiving less than $2,000 per annum has also increased. The rich are getting richer and the poor are getting poorer, according to this.

Our party refuses to adopt the basic principle of equalizing the cost of government through a proper system of taxation wherein wealth will pay its proportionate and just share. If wealth bore its share of taxation, our national indebtedness would not be approximately $35,000,000,000 and there would be no necessity to fear the thought of communism in our country. I have a higher regard for the citizenship of America than to believe that if our people are given a chance for honest labor to provide for themselves and families, they will ever stoop to such a fallacy as communism.

Our Government should appropriate hundreds of millions of dollars for education, for health, and for recreation. Our American youth, under the conditions of the new deal, are suffering inordinately. Unless their families are objects of charity, they cannot obtain Federal work, even in a C. C. C. camp at a starvation wage of $30 per month. It should be borne in mind that the young people of America, thus penalized, are the very individuals who will be called upon ultimately to pay for governmental profligacy and the squandering of billions through the present improper system of borrowing from the rich to give a crumb to the poor.

I am inclined to refer to the Bible to which I subscribe as a guide for human conduct. It is my opinion that we Americans may well cast the beam from our own eyes before we criticize what we hear or what we believe is taking place elsewhere on the globe. I wish to see the new deal a success, not for the sake of our party, not for the sake of the President, but for the sake of our suffering people who are going through an unnecessary Gethsemane because of the fact that our American Congress fails to act legislatively on definite recovery measures now before it.

Communism! There is no danger from that source if we will meet the problems before us courageously and in justice to our people; and it is my sincere belief that those who shout their warnings against communism from the housetops may well retire to the solitude of self-examination to determine whether or not they are doing their part to avert the danger they visualize, and whether the voting of tax-exempt bonds by the billions and increasing our national debt out of all proportion is the kind of a new deal they hoped for and subscribed to when we all so unitedly supported our President in 1932.

I for one will not criticize any nation or any people on their form of government as long as I find so much to do in my own beloved country to alleviate the distress and suffering of our aged, our youth, and our unfortunate unemployed. While I consider it my sacred duty to exercise to the utmost the principle that I am my brother's keeper, I believe that my first duty, as a legislator, is to those who are looking directly to us for assistance, to our own people, and after they are contented, employed, and prosperous, I may utilize my energy in considering the political and economic problems of other nations.

BRIG. GEN. AARON SIMON DAGGETT

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Resolution 243, which extends the felicitations and congratulations of the House and acknowledges with gratitude the distinguished and patriotic service which Gen. Aaron Simon Daggett has rendered to his country.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 243

Whereas Brig. Gen. Aaron Simon Daggett, United States Army, retired, celebrates his 98th birthday on June 14, 1935; and

Whereas General Daggett is the oldest officer on the retired list of the United States Army, the oldest officer who served during the Civil War and the Spanish-American War; and

Whereas Gen. Aaron Simon Daggett, who was born at Green Corner, Maine, June 14, 1837, and who enlisted as a private in Company E of the Fifth Maine Volunteer Infantry on April 27, 1861, served throughout the Civil War, attaining the rank of lieutenant colonel, participated in 18 battles of the Civil War, was twice wounded and thrice commended for gallant and meritorious service during the Civil War; and

Whereas General Daggett served during the Spanish-American War and participated in the Battle of San Juan, Cuba, in July 1898, and later participated in the Philippines in the battles at Imus River and Bacoor; and

Whereas he later served as a colonel of the Fourteenth Infantry in China and was recommended for gallantry in the battle of Yangtsun; and

Whereas, although all the allied troops participating in the suppression of the Boxer Rebellion endeavored to be the first to reach and scale Pekin's "Chinese City" wall and open the massive gates from within, this feat was accomplished by troops of the Fourteenth Infantry, commanded by the then Colonel Daggett, who, with his troops, was also the first of the allies to enter the Imperial City and who had command of the "Forbidden City (Innermost and Most Holy)" within his grasp when General Chaffee's order to cease firing was received; and

Whereas the military record of Gen. Aaron Simon Daggett will forever serve as an inspiring influence to American youth, instilling in them the quality of patriotism and the desire to serve freely and voluntarily in the defense of their country: Therefore be it

Resolved, That felicitations and congratulations are hereby extended to Gen. Aaron Simon Daggett on his ninety-eighth birthday and that the House of Representatives acknowledges with gratitude the distinguished, patriotic service which he has rendered to his country; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be appropriately inscribed and presented to General Daggett by the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk of the House be authorized and directed to telegraph to this distinguished soldier the fact that the House has, on this his ninety-eighth birthday, felicitated him by the passage of this resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries may sit during sessions of the House on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

RETIREMENT PENSIONS OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA FIRE DEPARTMENT MEMBERS

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including facts I have gathered to go with a bill I am introducing today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to bring to the attention of the Congress a most important subject. It is a subject in which I hope every Member will become interested. I refer to the discrimination against the rank and file members of the District of Columbia fire department in the awarding of retirement pensions.

One of my first assignments in Congress was as a member of the House Committee on the District of Columbia. In giving my conscientious attention to this assignment I have seen many things for which our District of Columbia Commissioners should be strongly commended, but I am sorry to say not all things.

By my nature, having always extended my deepest sympathy and aid to the oppressed and those who need help, this attitude soon became known here in Washington, with the result that on many occasions I have been requested to intercede on behalf of citizens here in the District of Columbia who thought they were being imposed upon. Naturally an investigation on my part would ofttimes disclose that these claims were without merit, being purely imaginary on the part of the complainants, and on such occasions I would try to pacify the aggrieved persons and make them see their particular problem in its true light.

On the other hand, whenever occasion arose, and with a desire to determine what was right and what was wrong, without regard to politics and without regard to whether or not the person aggrieved was my constituent, and with a full sense of my duty as a member of the District of Columbia Committee of the House of Representatives toward residents of the District of Columbia, I have never failed to sponsor rectifications of wrongs and to expose wrongdoers in a frank and open manner.

For a considerable length of time, as you know, I have been interested in the well-being and welfare generally of the fire department of the District of Columbia, particularly the rank and file thereof. They are a splendid group of men and have rendered a loyal service in years gone by in spite of certain administrative handicaps which, since they have been rectified to a large extent, need not now be discussed.

More recently, my attention was directed to the plight of a group of the rank and file members of the District of Columbia Fire Department, who had been retired from service because of disabilities incurred in line of duty. Charges were made that while retired officers of the fire department were almost unanimously receiving full pensions of half pay, which in the case of a chief engineer of the fire department would amount to $4,000 per year, economies were being practiced on retired privates who at most were eligible to receive but $100 per month or $1,200 per year and who were receiving less than that figure in many instances. Being unable to comprehend such unfair treatment of human beings by human beings, especially those in high offices in the administration of District affairs, I decided to investigate the matter on my own account.

First, I called on Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen for a list of pensioners of the fire department of the District of Columbia, with the retirement rate of each. After great reluctance, and pledging me to utmost secrecy, after a long elapse of time, I finally got this data, and it verified the original charge which had come to me from the general counsel of the City Fire Fighters' Association of the District of Columbia, an organization comprised of the active rank and file of the District of Columbia fire department. This list showed that as of April 4, 1935, there were 204 retired firemen on the pension rolls, of which 68 were officers. Of the officers, all but 4 got the maximum pension allowed by law, of full one-half pay, the 4 not receiving full pensions having been disabled by injuries or illnesses incurred in line of duty; whereas of the 136 retired privates—most of whom were retired for disabilities incurred in line of duty rather than on account of age or length of service—45, or 33⅓ percent, do not get as much as $100 per month.

In the belief that this situation would be rectified if the discrepancies were called to the attention of the District of Columbia Commissioners, I then suggested to the men, through their counsel, that several cases be appealed to the Commissioners for an increase in pension. For no apparent reason, the Commissioners recently turned down the majority of these applicants for an increase in pension, granting increases to but few, in one case raising the pension from $69.16 per month to $70 per month. Think of it—an increase of 84 cents. Just what will this man do with his 84 cents? My investigation further showed that all of the men involved had been incapacitated in line of duty and that increases in pension were denied them while these same District of Columbia Commissioners countenanced the huge pensions mentioned heretofore to officers who had been retired on account of years of service or age with no disability.

Of particular interest at this point is the case of one Sidney Bieber, who was retired on September 1, 1905, with but 6 years' service in the District of Columbia fire department, and all of this in the quasi-clerical position of fire marshal, and who is now receiving a pension of $208.33 per month or $2,500 per annum, although he was never disabled, never subjected himself to danger because his position did not require it, and who never fought a fire in his life, because that is not the function of the fire marshal.

Another case was that of ex-Superintendent of Police Edwin B. Hesse, who in his later life was appointed as superintendent of police from the nonpolice position of chief clerk of the department, who served as superintendent for less than 2 years (his total service in the uniform ranks), and who now receives a pension of $4,000 per year, being $333.33 per month, which is a full one-half of the present salary rate of $8,000 per annum for the major and superintendent of police.

There are innumerable other cases which are almost as flagrant as these, all while these poor disabled men, with injuries or illnesses incurred in line of duty, thrown out of their jobs as no more fit for fire department duty, on very low pensions of less than $100 per month, in one case as low as $40 per month.

Whose fault is this, I next ask? Is it the fault of Congress by failing to provide funds, or of the the District of Columbia Commissioners who administer the pension funds?

By an act of Congress dated February 1, 1916, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia were given authority to retire policemen or firemen for causes stated in the act, including disability incurred in line of duty, at not to exceed half pay. Due to discriminations against privates and lower-ranking officers in the administration of the fund, we next find that Congress passed the law of February 17, 1923, known as "An act to equalize pensions in the police and fire departments." (See section 593 of title 20 of the District of Columbia Code.) Even with this law the Commissioners failed to increase the pensions of the underpaid retirees, and forced one poor private of the police department (one Roberts) to bring a suit to prove the true meaning of the act of February 17, 1923. In this test case (Daugherty v. United States ex rel. Roberts, in 58 App. District of Columbia, 308), the court held that every retired policeman and fireman were entitled to receive pensions of full half pay based on the then current salary laws; but notwithstanding this decision the District of Columbia Commissioners still failed and refrained from giving these full pension rates to many pensioners. On July 1, 1930, Congress was prevailed upon to revest the Commissioners with discretion in setting the pension rates, with the limitation of one-half salary, upon said Commissioners' implied promise, at least, to administer the pensions fairly, impartially, and consistently. However, today we find from an examination of the pension rolls that these incapacitated rank and file members of the department are still being discriminated against by receiving very low pensions, when they could and should receive $100 per month, whereas the high ranking retired officers of the fire department are receiving full pensions.

In other words, by the maladministration of the pension funds by former District of Columbia Commissioners, which upon recent opportunity was not rectified by the present Board of Commissioners, the retired officers of the fire department are receiving public moneys for luxuries while the rank and file retired men, with their disabilities and handicaps, are barely able to subsist on the retirement pay to which they must be limited from the very low pensions meted out to them. Mr. Speaker, this condition touches my heart, as it should touch the heart of every Member of Congress.

What is the solution? The bill which I have just introduced to change the provisions of section 584 of title 20 of the Code of Law of the District of Columbia will take away the discretion from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in setting pensions of those who have been mistreated to date. In other words, under my bill, there will be no more uncertainty when a man must retire, whether it be due to his age, his length of service, or physical disabilities incurred in line of duty. Under my bill, he will receive a full one-half of his salary as a pension, with a minimum of $100 per month, which minimum, I submit, is necessary for a man's existence, especially where he has a family. A second proviso in my bill will make the law applicable to those who are now retired and who have been discriminated against by unfair and inadequate pensions as aforesaid.

This is a humane bill, and should be enacted into legislation at the earliest possible date, for in the meantime, the unfair administrative attitude of our present District of Columbia Commissioners in failing to grant proper pensions to the disabled rank and file members is causing human suffering by depriving them of the necessaries of life, including medical attention, as well as food, clothing, and the like. It will be a law for a definite pension, rather than one subject to the whims of administrative officials, and is in line with more general legislation of Congress, namely the Federal employees' compensation law, which grants $116.66 per month disability pension to anyone disabled on account of an injury or illness incurred in line of duty, provided said employee receives a salary of as much as $2,100 per annum. A minimum of $58.33 per month disability allowance is provided where the disabled employee's salary is as little as $58.33 per month, but these are details, and, as stated, the broad general proposition involved is that if a general Government employee is incapacitated in line of duty he receives a definite disability compensation, and not one which is subject to the whims of administrative officers, as is the case under the present disability and retirement law with respect to firemen and policemen of the District of Columbia.

While I naturally feel embittered at any Government official who would be unfair in his care of subordinates, especially the lowly and humble subordinates, nevertheless, bitterness and recrimination are not the basis for this bill. I would harm none, but only help those who most need help, and if you will indulge me it might not be amiss at this point to allude to the everlasting words of the immortal Abraham Lincoln, who in his second inaugural address stated in part these words:

With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive to finish the work we are in; to bind up the Nation's wounds, to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow and his orphan. * * *

The disabled firemen with injuries or illnesses incurred in line of duty, are the ones who have borne the battle here. Let us, by enacting a definite and appropriate law, properly care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow and his orphan.

EXTENSION OF N. R. A.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, due to the severe hoarseness of the Chairman of the Rules Committee I have been requested to call up House Resolution 256.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 113) entitled "Joint resolution to extend until April 1, 1936, the provisions of title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, and for other purposes", with the amendment of the Senate to the House amendments, be, and the same hereby is, taken from the Speaker's table, to the end that the Senate amendment to the House amendments be, and the same is hereby, agreed to.

Mr. SABATH. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY] desire any time?

Mr. RANSLEY. We would like to have 15 minutes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman the usual 30 minutes, although I understand he is not going to use all of it.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any opposition to this resolution as the Members are familiar with Senate Joint Resolution 113, it having been debated at great length in the House.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand, with one exception no such rule as this has ever been brought into the House. Therefore I am not familiar with just how it works and I should like to ask this question: Under this rule, as I understand it, when you adopt the rule you have agreed to the amendments and given approval to the N. R. A. resolution. In other words, there is no opportunity to discuss the amendments or to give them any consideration. There is no opportunity to read the amendments. This is just a question of voting "yes" for the rule, and when you vote "yes" for the rule you adopt the amendment and give approval to the resolution. It is a rarefied type of gag rule.

Mr. SABATH. I disagree with the gentleman that it is a gag rule. It is not a gag rule. If gentlemen on that side had not objected yesterday and if unanimous consent had been granted, as originally agreed to and stated on the floor by your leaders, we would have had only 20 minutes on the side. This resolution will give 1 hour—30 minutes on the side—and in view of the statement of Mr. RANSLEY, ranking Republican member on the Rules Committee, that he desires only 15 minutes, it cannot be charged that anyone is being gagged.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Not now. I cannot yield, because the gentleman is responsible for this extra time being taken by the House.

Mr. RICH. I should like to explain my position to the gentlemen.

Mr. SABATH. I refuse to yield.

I repeat, this is not a gag rule. All this rule does is to take the Senate joint resolution that has been amended by the House and then the House amendment amended by the Senate from the Speaker's table and agree to the Senate amendment. This amendment is similar to the amendment originally offered by the gentleman from Texas in the House, and which was defeated by only a few votes. The amendment is as follows:

Provided, That the exemption provided in section 5 of such title shall extend only to agreements and action thereunder, (1) putting into effect the requirements of section 7 (a), including minimum wages, maximum hours, and prohibition of child labor, and (2) prohibiting unfair competitive practices which offend against existing law, including the antitrust laws, or which constitute unfair methods of competition under the Federal Trade Commission Act as amended.

Mr. Speaker, this amendment had my support originally and I do not think it necessary to take up any more time in explaining the important need for the passage of this resolution without unnecessary delay.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, reserving the balance of my time.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, insofar as the Republican Membership of the House is concerned, or at least insofar as the leadership is concerned, I am advised that there is no organized opposition to this rule. The few remarks I shall make will be directed principally to the Republicans, and I shall try in this length of time, if I can, to explain the parliamentary situation. If there is anything I say that will be at all interesting to the Democrats, they are welcome to listen, because we have a parliamentary situation here which is rather unique.

At the expense of being tedious, I would like to review for a moment what has taken place with reference to the matter we are about to consider. You will recall that last week we voted an extension of the N. R. A. We passed the Senate joint resolution here in the House with an amendment. The Republican Membership quite generally opposed to the measure. It went over to the Senate, and the Senate sent it back for our consideration with an amendment to the House amendment. In the regular course it went to the Ways and Means Committee. The Ways and Means Committee met and accepted the amendment.

The ordinary parliamentary procedure would be for the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee to come in and ask unanimous consent to take up the Senate amendments and agree to them or to disagree and ask for a conference. The committee instructed him to bring them up under unanimous consent. If such a request was unanimously agreed to, that would amount to passage of the amendments; but if someone should object, as happened yesterday, then the matter would properly have to come before the House for consideration. How could it come up? The Rules Committee should bring out a rule. This was done, and we are now considering that rule. This rule, on the face of it, would indicate that it is a gag rule or a closed rule; but, as a matter of fact, it is not intended to operate in that way. An hour is given for discussion of this measure, and anyone who wants to discuss it on the Republican side will, I think, have an abundance of time to do so, for I am only going to speak for a few minutes, and I take it from the remarks made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] there will be sufficient time for anyone on the Democratic side who wants to discuss this amendment to do so.

From a canvass that has been made among the Republicans, I am advised that there is no serious opposition to the amendment; but we have here a parliamentary situation that we should understand.

As I have heretofore stated, the Republicans have gone on record as being against the N. R. A.

Now, they are not seriously opposing this amendment. Why? Because this amendment improves the bill that was voted on by the House. It is always good politics and good statesmanship to vote for any amendments that improve a bill, even if one expects to vote against the bill when thus amended. We should vote to perfect a bill as far as we can; and if the perfecting amendments do not go far enough, the proper and logical course is to vote against such bill.

I want the RECORD to show that the Republicans who voted against the continuation of the N. R. A. when that bill was up for consideration on its merits stand exactly as they did at that time. We oppose the continuation of the N. R. A., for it is dead by the wise and forceful decision of the Supreme Court, and it should be buried without any further formalities.

You will remember that our position at that time was that there may have been some good features about the N. R. A. We could hardly expect to employ 5,400 men and women for 2 years and spend millions of dollars for 2 or 3 years without getting some experience that would be of value. Quite frequently bad experience is good for an individual. You will remember the old adage, "A burnt child dreads fire."

But, as stated before, we maintain that the N. R. A. has been killed by the Supreme Court as far as any practical purpose might be considered.

But in the discussion the other day, when this proposition came up, it developed that, while the amendment placed on the bill by the Ways and Means Committee to the Clark resolution sheared from the President all powers to enforce the codes and contained the word "code", it did not contain the word "agreement." The voluntary agreements remain in the old bill.

I believe that Mr. Richberg and the President himself might have accepted the additional words that we tried to put in on the amendment; but whether they would or not is immaterial now, because it was not done.

The matter went to the Senate, and the Senate put on this amendment. What kind of an amendment is it? It is about the same thing as we had in our motion to recommit when the bill was before us a few days ago, and about the same thing that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] had in his amendment on the Democratic side. I want to give credit where credit is due, and it is about the same thing as in the amendment that I myself offered when we were considering the bill.

Now, we have that up for consideration today. Here is the Senate amendment. Let me explain briefly what it is. It is worth while paying some attention to it. It is not difficult to understand. It is not complex.

I do not know whether this has been printed or not, but there were only a few copies available yesterday. As I said, the amendment adopted by the House originally provided that the President would not have any power to enforce any codes. This goes on and adds the words:

Provided, That the exemption provided in section 5 of such title shall extend only to agreements and action thereunder (1) putting into effect the requirements of section 7 (a), including minimum wages, maximum hours, and prohibition of child labor; and (2) prohibiting unfair competitive practices which offend against existing law, including the antitrust laws, or which constitute unfair methods of competition under the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended.

What is section 5 of the N. R. A. law? It is as follows:

SEC. 5. While this title is in effect (or in the case of a license, while section 4 (a) is in effect) and for 60 days thereafter, any code, agreement, or license approved, prescribed, or issued and in effect under this title, and any action complying with the provisions thereof taken during such period, shall be exempt from the provisions of the antitrust laws of the United States.

This section 5 provides in effect that while the N. I. R. A. was in effect, the antitrust law would be suspended.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman's statement is rather broad. It is an exemption of the antitrust laws from the provision, providing it contained agreements in codes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I have not come to that yet. I cannot make my statement all in one sentence.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman said the antitrust laws were suspended.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I say that under the original N. R. A. Act the antitrust laws were suspended so far as its applications to codes were concerned. Of course, it did not suspend all the antitrust laws.

This amendment provides that the exemptions provided in section 5 of such title shall extend only to such "agreements and actions thereunder." What agreements and actions thereunder? Then it goes ahead and says what shall be in those agreements. In other words, we maintained the other day that this whole thing ought to be studied by the Federal Trade Commission and other permanent agencies of the Government that could investigate it and see how far the antitrust laws should be suspended; and if so, how the matter should be carried out. The amendment of the Senate provides that exemptions provided in section 5 of such title shall extend only to agreements and actions thereunder, but on what conditions? Here is the first condition: That none of these agreements shall be accepted by the President if he intends to operate the N. R. A. or the skeleton that is left unless they comply with this amendment. If he intends to continue it under voluntary agreements, what must the agreements provide? Here is one thing they must provide: They must provide all of the requirements of section 7 (a) which are the requirements that organized labor advocated when the N. R. A. was adopted.

What are these? They must include minimum wages, maximum hours, and prohibition of child labor. All and any agreements adopted and permitted to be adopted by the President, known as "unanimous-consent agreements" or "voluntary agreements", must contain the provisions that I have just enumerated. What else must they contain? No. 2, I think, is called the "Borah amendment", or at least part of it. The conjunction used is "and", not "or." These agreements must contain no. 1 and no. 2. What is the second one? Prohibiting unfair competitive practices which offend against existing law, including the antitrust laws, which constitute unfair methods of competition under the Federal Trade Commission Act as amended.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. In a moment. Why are we as Republicans in favor of this amendment? Because it does in part what we insisted should have been done. We are in favor of the amendment, but we still maintain if the amendment is adopted it will not do what ought to be done. Here is what ought to be done: The Supreme Court killed the N. I. R. A. to all intents and purposes, and we ought to bury it, and we ought to take from it its good points, however, few they may be, and as Mr. Richberg suggested turn the records over to the Federal Trade Commission. That is all he wants. He wanted to keep enough of these men on the pay roll to gather up the records and the information so that it might not be lost, and then we maintain that these should be turned over to the Federal Trade Commission and a study made of the work assumed to be done by the N. R. A. That is what this amendment tends to do in a small way at least.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I am glad that the gentleman favors the Senate amendment, even though he is opposed to the N. R. A. Will the gentleman tell us in what way the Senate amendment either adds to or takes from the Senate joint resolution as amended by the House amendment.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I thought I had just got through telling that. The principal objection that developed to the amendment as offered by the Ways and Means Committee, of which the gentleman is a valuable member, was that it left questionable as to how it would relate to voluntary agreements. The gentleman will remember that in the discussion on the floor he took one position and other majority members of the committee did not agree with him as to how it affected voluntary agreements. I offered an amendment to clarify that, as to where voluntary agreements would find themselves as any court would seek to interpret them, and I maintain now that this amendment does clarify them. If the President permits any to operate under voluntary agreements, it provides that the agreement must contain two things. It must take care of labor and must see that the antitrust laws are not disobeyed in that respect.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Of course, section 7 (a) remained in the act, and it was obligatory upon the President and upon those entering into voluntary agreements under the act to observe the provisions of section 7 (a). I think that we are all agreed that section 4 (a), which related to voluntary agreements, was the only thing left in the N. R. A. after the Supreme Court decision.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Oh, there is no question about it. The gentleman and his group would have agreed to this, but they did not get it that way from the White House. You would have agreed to it if you had the chance. You were sincere about it, but the language which the White House sent you did not contain it and you would not let us change it, but the Senate did change it.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. There was no amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] or any other Member similar to this language in the Senate amendment. I contend now that under the amendment of the House, section 2 of the act, which was the House amendment, the President and those entering into voluntary agreements can do everything and no more than they can do under the Senate amendment. It particularizes certain things, but does not broaden or detract or narrow the language of the House amendment.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. If the gentleman believes that, why did he not propose the Senate amendment and be done with it?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. It is harmless.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. MAY. As I understand, under the provision of the original N. I. R. A., the right of collective bargaining and the right to regulate child labor and unfair trade practices as set out in subsections (a) and (b) of the Borah amendment were regulated under codes that were mandatory. This now will apply to voluntary agreements entered into by any particular industry and their employees, and it takes it out of the condemnation of the Supreme Court to that extent?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Exactly. Now, Mr. Speaker, just to recur for a moment to the parliamentary situation, as far as the Republicans are concerned, some of you who voted against the continuance of the National Industrial Recovery Act may feel constrained to vote against this amendment. If you do, I am not trying to tell you how you should vote, but I am trying to explain to you that if you want to vote for this amendment you can do so with all propriety and be absolutely consistent with your other vote, because this amendment does nothing, except that it goes one step farther toward clarifying the situation and taking power away from the President if he seeks to put this skeleton back after Congress has adjourned, during the 9 months of the extension of this bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If a trade association or group of manufacturers enter into a marketing agreement with the President which does not contain the provisions recited in the Senate amendment, will they be subject to prosecution under the antitrust laws?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I should think so.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is that the gentleman's understanding of the Senate amendment?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is my understanding of the Senate amendment; yes. If it did not do that, it would not do anything.

Mr. CRAWFORD. But if that agreement contains only the provision on minimum wages, maximum hours, child labor, and section 7 (a), then it does come outside prosecutions under the antitrust laws?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not assume that the President would sanction any agreement unless it met the requirements of this amendment that we are considering. If they attempted to operate without regard to the President or the law, they would surely find themselves in jeopardy.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. I hold in my hand an article signed by one Moley, saying that provision should be made, in any act for the continuation of some form of the National Recovery Act, and in the light of what has been suggested, for a constitutional amendment to at once be prepared and presented. I want to ask the gentleman, if there was any argument made in sessions of his committee, if he will tell us about it, or does he know of any proposed action to present to the Congress any constitutional amendment, attempting to remedy this N. R. A. situation according to the theories of this administration?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. All I can say is what I have read in the papers. Of course, there may be some people who think that our Government is built upon such fragile foundations that all we need to do when the Court decides against us is to run out and offer an amendment to the Constitution. Of course, I do not think any sensible person or any patriotic person would give one moment's consideration to such a proposition.

It is beyond the comprehension of any reasonable American citizen how anybody, whether he be President or Congressman or Senator, could rise up and challenge the authority of the Supreme Court of these United States, one of the greatest triumvirates of our Government, when by unanimous vote it does its duty.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman, in view of the spectacular interview given by the President of the United States soon after the decision of the Supreme Court, if the Committee on Ways and Means has any idea of presenting to the people of the country a constitutional amendment in line with what the President suggested at that time should be done?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No; I think I can say, out of respect for the majority members of the Ways and Means Committee, and I dare say there is not a man on the Ways and Means Committee of either party who would countenance such a program for one second; and I also dare say, although I cannot speak for the President, of course, but I will venture the assertion that the President will never live long enough but that he will wish he had never made the statement he made with respect to the decision of the Supreme Court. This was a most unfortunate statement, and the President will never be proud of it.

Mr. GIFFORD. Does the gentleman really think that in a short 2 weeks the President and the Ways and Means Committee have heard sufficiently from the people of the country? As I understood it, their desire was to wait until they heard from the people.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I think they have.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. If I understand the gentleman's argument correctly, it is that the bill extending the N. R. A., as it is now before us with the Senate amendment, is now harmless, and that it makes no great difference which way we vote on it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The amendment is of considerable importance from the standpoint that it further restricts the President in reference to his powers over voluntary agreements. They must comply with section 7 (a) and must not violate the fair-trade provisions of the antitrust laws.

Mr. MOTT. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman. And may I suggest in this connection that when the original bill extending the N. R. A. was before the House last week the Republicans here did their best to amend it in substantially the same manner as the Senate amendment now does. We were prevented in our effort to do this by practically a straight party vote on our motion to recommit. Had that motion been adopted the President's powers would have been restricted to the same extent as the Senate amendment now restricts them. Again, had the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] prevailed when the bill was in the House section 5 would have been eliminated altogether, and that also would have limited the President's powers substantially as provided in the Senate amendment. Republicans supported the Maverick amendment, Democrats opposed it. I am glad to see now that the Senate, having done by this amendment what the Republicans of the House tried to do, that the Democrats of the House have now surrendered on this point and have accepted our views and our arguments in their entirety.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Does not the gentleman believe that the real reason for the extension of what is left of N. R. A. is to provide a skeleton research organization for the purpose of attempting to justify the administration of N. R. A.?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It looks very much that way. I am sorry to be forced to that conclusion, but it looks bad. As I have heretofore stated, when the Supreme Court killed N. R. A. we should have buried it.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Does the gentleman believe that it is intellectually honest to put that investigation into the hands of those who were engaged in the administration of the N. R. A.? Does he believe it is intellectually honest to permit anybody to investigate his own administration?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I think this should be done: I think the people who investigate trade and commerce ought to be experts in that line. I think the administration should quit playing politics with the business of the country. Throw out the brain trusters and turn business over to business men and labor questions over to laboring men and men interested in the welfare of labor.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. As a matter of fact, the Senate amendment is virtually the motion to recommit that was defeated here in the House last week. Am I not correct?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; it is in line with it and with the minority views as printed in the report that accompanied that bill.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The motion to recommit was proposed on this side of the aisle and defeated by the Democrats but now accepted by both sides.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is right.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. FORD of California. Would the gentleman say, in his reasoned opinion, that any man who offers an amendment to the Constitution is un-American?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Oh, no; no; the gentleman is not justified in giving my language any such interpretation, not at all.

Mr. FORD of California. But that is what the gentleman said.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Anybody would know better than that. The idea of a man asking a question like that! Why, nobody could propose a constitutional amendment but an American; no foreigner has the right to offer an amendment to our Constitution. I doubt the Americanism of any man who, because the Supreme Court finds against him, wants to change the Constitution. Long live the Supreme Court and may it never wear the collar of any man. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] such time as he may desire.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, a week ago today, June 7, 1935, I addressed this House on the N. R. A. bill before us, and I did so both on the rule and upon the law itself. I suggested then that the bill was being rushed through too quickly; that we were not giving it enough consideration; further, I stated that we are faced with the most important economic issues in our national history; that from a viewpoint of economics, the bill involves the rights of labor, child labor, the Sherman antitrust law, big business and little business, and many other questions.

Thereafter I offered an amendment as section 2 of the bill, which in effect reinstated the Sherman antitrust laws; and I stated then that we should not surrender any right to prosecute under the Sherman Antitrust Act or give up all rights of labor and the consumers.

I had hoped that the amendment would be adopted, but it was defeated by a small margin of 15 or 16 votes. My opinion is that if we would have had time to discuss the matter and had not rushed the bill through in such a hurry, that the amendment might have been adopted. In fact, I feel sure that it would have been adopted. That is the reason I hate to see bills rushed through the House so hurriedly—we enact some law in that manner, and it goes to the Senate, where the bill is changed, and then we simply agree to everything the Senate does, I do not know, but I presume that we will overwhelmingly do the same today. Now, suppose the amendment that I offered had gotten the sympathetic consideration of the leaders of the party and of the Ways and Means Committee? It could have been improved and made more suitable to the needs of the American people, but we rushed the bill through without much consideration and it goes to the Senate, where they take their time and have the proper amendment made—and now, undoubtedly, we will simply agree to it.

The Borah amendment filed in the Senate, and which the rule we are now discussing seeks to fully approve, is clearer and better than the one I filed in the House, and that is the reason I say that had it received mature consideration, undoubtedly we could have reached the same conclusion as the Senate, without their having to do our thinking and then merely handing us a law, which we are to forthwith approve.

The Borah amendment is as follows:

To the text of said amendment (House amendment in S. J. Res. 113), after the word "repealed" in the last line thereof, insert ": Provided, That the exemption provided in section 5 of such title shall extend only to agreements and actions thereunder (1) putting into effect the requirements of section 7 (a), including minimum wages, maximum hours, and prohibition of child labor; and (2) prohibiting unfair competitive practices which offend against existing law, including the antitrust laws, or which constitute unfair methods of competition under the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended."

Who gets the credit for the beneficial legislation? The Senate, of course. Who ought to have the real power or at least equal power in legislative matters in this country? The House of Representatives, of course, just as the House of Commons has the power in England and most every other country.

I suppose issues have always been beclouded, evaded, and twisted; but more issues are being clouded, evaded, and twisted now than ever before.

Let us, for instance, take the N. R. A. I suggested that we are faced with fundamental, economic changes which will necessitate fundamental changes in our fundamental law, probably the Constitution, and certainly our statutory system. One of my old friends writes to me, down in Texas, and he says that he has no job and has been almost starving to death for several years, has lost all his property and is broke, and that he certainly thinks that I am a fine Congressman, but that he hopes that I will not try to change the Constitution, and ends up by saying, "Thank God for the Constitution." There is a man who is completely broke and hungry and starving writing to me about the Constitution, and, with all due respect to him, I doubt if he has ever read it—who is thanking God for something he knows nothing about. When you are talking about the Supreme Court, you are not talking about the N. R. A.; and when you talk about the N. R. A., you are not talking about the Supreme Court. They are two separate questions.

Therefore, I desire to make myself clear: There is no reason why constitutional changes in government should not at least be discussed.

The point not well understood is the fact that the fundamental change in our law is being confused with Mr. Shechter's sick chicken. The N. R. A., as I have said many times before, was poorly administered; it was unpopular; and when the Supreme Court declared the N. R. A. unconstitutional it was a popular decision—and probably right, according to law. That however, does not change the fundamental necessity of having an elastic form of government for the people in order that they may make the government suit the demands of the people instead of the people having to conform to obsolete laws which keep them in poverty and ignorance.

Whenever anybody says anything about the Constitution we are told that our forefathers wrote it; that, of course, in spite of all scientific progress and the machine age, nothing should ever be done about our political system. That was not, however, the view of those who wrote the Constitution.

Thomas Jefferson said:

Be attentive to amendments to the Constitution to make it keep pace with the advance of the age in science and experience.

He further said, that these changes must be made unless the people will—

Undertake it themselves by force, their only weapon, and work it out through blood, desolation, and long-continued anarchy.

Even Hamilton, whose general philosophy I do not approve, said in the Federalist, no. 22, as follows:

We are apt to rest satisfied that all is safe because nothing improper will be likely to be done, but we forget how much good may be prevented and how much ill may be produced by the power of hindering that which it is necessary to do, and of keeping affairs in the same unfavorable posture in which they may happen to stand at particular periods.

People are often afraid to make a change, saying it is a "leap in the dark." This was said in England when general suffrage was discussed. Slaves, unaccustomed to liberty, have often refused freedom. Slaves to custom, unaccustomed likewise to progress, have often through fear remained in ignorance and poverty. Let us, therefore, discuss our fundamental necessities and do all honorable, legal, courageous things necessary to accomplish our just purposes.

Again, quoting Hamilton:

It is a fundamental maxim of good sense and sound policy which dictates that every power ought to be proportionate to its object. A government ought to contain in itself every power requisite to the full accomplishment of the objects committed to its care, and the complete execution of the trusts for which it is responsible; free from every other control but a regard for the public good and to the sense of the people.

And George Washington, whom all Americans admire, during the time that we were changing from the Confederation to the Constitution in 1785, wrote as follows:

Illiberality, jealousy, and local policy are mixed too much in our public councils, for the good government of the Union. In a word, the confederation appears to me to be little more than a shadow without the substance; and Congress a nugatory body, their ordinances being little attended to. To me it is a solecism in politics; indeed it is one of the most extraordinary things in nature that we should confederate as a nation, and yet be afraid to give the rulers of the Nation, who are the creatures of our own making, appointed for a limited and short duration, and who are amenable for every action, recallable at any moment, and subject to all the evils which they may be instrumental in producing, sufficient powers to order and direct the affairs of the same. By such a policy as this the wheels of government are clogged and * * * from the high ground on which we stood we are descending into the vale of confusion and darkness.

Then Grayson, writing to Madison, wrote as follows:

A partial reformation will be fatal; things had better remain as they are now than not to probe them to the bottom * * * The State of Virginia having gone thus far, it is a matter of great doubt with me whether she had not better go further and propose to the other States to augment the powers of the delegates so as to comprehend all the grievances of the Union, and to combine commercial arrangements with them and make them dependent on each other.

I merely make these references to show that the Constitution is at least worthy of discussion. I can see nothing wrong in discussing it; I can see nothing wrong in discussing political science. I think it well established that science—I mean mechanical science—has advanced far ahead of political science. For that reason we should always attempt to progress, and in discussing the N. R. A. or any other social measure, we must understand the mechanics and fundamentals of government.

I have never advocated "circumventing" the Constitution or violating it; I believe that we should change the Constitution, if necessary for the people, especially if the Constitution must be changed to eliminate child labor, poverty, hunger, and a low standard of living. I do not believe that we should endure all of these things for the sake of a Constitution. Furthermore, I really believe that orderly discussion of these things is preferable to the making of ill-tempered and ignorant conclusions.

Let us take, for instance, the Civil War. Suppose a constitutional amendment had been passed abolishing slavery and paying the owners of the slaves even twice what the slaves were worth—no doubt, this Nation would have been saved the Civil War and saved 4 years of fratricidal strife, with sickness, hunger, and disturbance, physical destruction, and money waste for all that time. In other words, it is always preferable to do things peacefully, and some of those who claim to love the Constitution have gone so far as to say lately that Lincoln was such a good man that he preferred to go to war rather than change the Constitution. Of course, Lincoln was a good man, but I would suggest that his opinion of the powers of the Executive and Legislature as against the Supreme Court be read. Likewise I call attention to the fact that it took the Civil War to change the Constitution at that time. Therefore, if a necessity exists for the change of the Constitution now, let us do so with thought and consideration and in a peaceful manner.

My colleague and able friend, Mr. DRISCOLL, good Democrat from Pennsylvania, has just called to my attention the Republican attitude on the Constitution in 1860, and I shall discuss it. I think it safe to say that when we speak of judicial decisions, it depends on which foot the shoe fits. Ordinarily when a judge renders a decision favorable to one side he is a learned gentleman, but if he does not he is anything you want to call him. And now we find our Republican brethren shouting to preserve the Constitution, stop having laws altogether and no more progress, and give the people "a full dinner pail"—and let there be no protection of labor, the sweating of children in factories, the small consumer, or any other exploited group. In 1860 the Republicans were denouncing the Democrats because they used the Federal courts, and then, in regard to slavery, said this was done under "the perversions of judicial power", as Mr. DRISCOLL has pointed out, which was an outright attack on the Supreme Court of the United States and the Dred Scott decision. At that time the Republicans were all for progress and abolishing slavery under Abraham Lincoln, whom they have now forgotten. But now, for political expediency, they pose as the sacred defenders of the Constitution and would let the American people be prosperous by letting them starve; be free by letting them be industrial slaves; the children have happy lives by having child labor.

Of course, these statements do not in any way apply to all Republicans, nor even to all Republican leaders and Congressmen, but in effect it applies to some Republican leaders, because it is at least fully fair to state that most of them are not meeting the real economic issues, nor attempting to correct our present economic situation by real thought. They are merely criticizing and offering no substitute.

Now, let us talk about the economic conditions of the Nation with which we are faced; and along with this discussion let us take the N. R. A.. You will understand this is about economics, and not the Constitution. As I stated before, the N. R. A. was not a perfect instrument—it was probably something of a failure—but, at the same time, it could have been improved upon and should have been improved upon in order to eliminate sweatshops, child labor, and to protect the consumer and worker, and business men in general. In other words, with rapid transportation, with the invention of all kinds of new machinery and scientific methods, there has naturally come a great change over this Nation; and, therefore, with Maine being closer to Texas than parts of Texas were to each other even as much as 30 years ago, and with the Nation necessarily more unified, we need laws which meet the new situation. Hence, one principle of the N. R. A.—that is, some unified control in order to protect all the people of the United States—was right. In other words, wholly aside from the N. R. A., there are certain rights of individuals and States which can only be protected by unified national action. Proceeding on that point, I will discuss some of the phases of the N. R. A.

Let us take, for instance, child labor. If the certain States have child labor, working kids from 10 to 14 hours a day, paying them practically nothing, and another State has a law against child labor where they must hire adults and pay decent wages, where are your State rights? That is where one State uses its laws to bring down the standards of labor of another State. Let us take, for instance, unemployment insurance. I think a large majority of the people of the United States believe that we should have unemployment insurance, old-age pensions, and social security in general. Suppose one State refuses to enact any such legislation. A man living in another State has all the benefits of social security, he loses his job, and has a chance to get a job in another State where there is no social security. We will say he takes the job and loses it afterward. Then he has no rights of social security in the State to which he moved, and he has lost his rights of social security in the other State because he has moved away. In unemployment insurance and social security, if we leave it wholly up to the States, there will be 48 different systems, 48 conflicting jurisdictions, 48 different systems of conflicting laws, regulations, and decisions; and it will reduce, in this modern age, the people living in a given area to the standard of the moujiks of Russia in the days of the Czar, when people could not move from place to place. Let us take labor in general. In one State we have modern safety appliances, short hours, and decent working conditions; another State has no regulations and no protection of labor; and therefore we can see very plainly that the conditions of the bad States will naturally hurt the conditions of the good States on account of competition gradually breaking down all good laws. It necessarily follows there must be some national regulatory powers.

Therefore there are certain fundamental things that the Nation as a whole must do for the protection of State rights—for the rights of the people within them. I do not believe that the United States Government should interfere in purely local matters, in municipal government, or in the rights of the police power of the State, or of the State to protect its own citizens—but I do believe that there are certain fundamental social and economic problems which must be dealt with in order to give equal protection to all of the people of the United States. Take education, for instance. I think every child is entitled to an education. I say this because if large portions of the United States are left in illiteracy, it will certainly have a bad effect upon the Nation as a whole. Therefore I believe the Federal Government has a right to assist and cooperate in matters of education. There are many things in which the Government not only should have a right but must have a right to protect the rights of the people as a whole, because when one portion of the United States is adversely affected, this portion adversely affects all other portions of the United States.

Take the N. R. A. as it just lately passed the House. In it we continued the suspension of the antitrust laws enacted 2 years ago. In that way we had suspended also all rights of regulations of codes in local industry and national industry—by it we allowed certain voluntary agreements with the suspension of the antitrust laws, which meant in effect that we allowed the big merchants in centers like New York and Chicago to control prices from those places all over the Nation, and which will run our local merchants out of business. That is certainly a violation of the rights of States and of individuals. Now, when we talk about State rights, let us discuss how they ordinarily come before the courts. I have read a great many decisions, and I see very few, if any, cases where State rights are decided on a basis of the State claiming any rights, or being a party to the suit. Ordinarily, it is some selfish individual with a smart lawyer, ordinarily a very well paid lawyer, who has books, books, books, all over his place, and who uses these books for the protection of the selfish interests of his client. Let us take the Schechter poultry case. Unquestionably, the Supreme Court delivered a very clear opinion and they have clarified many points that are necessary to clarify. They have made it plain that we should not make an unconstitutional and illegal delegation of power. However, who is Mr. Schechter? Is he the State of Texas or the State of New York? Was any State involved in the case? Was any State right included in there? No! No State was included whatsoever; it was merely one client with a smart lawyer, and the smart lawyer won. Possibly he was right. I merely submit that as a matter for discussion by us.

I have therefore reviewed, first, the constitutional phases of our Government; and, second, the economic phases of our Government as expressed through the N. R. A. or other similar act intended to meet modern industrial life.

Now let us discuss some of the political phases of the N. R. A. and of things in general. When we voted on the N. R. A. last week I read in the newspaper, 3 hours before we passed the N. R. A., this headline: "Congress passes N. R. A." In other words, the newspaper reporters knew 3 or 4 hours before what Congress was going to do. In fact, I have to pick up the paper every morning to see what I am supposed to do. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is somewhat long and somewhat tiresome—and I realize that I am making it tiresome right now—and you have to shuffle through many pages to find anything, and even then you do not know exactly what is going to happen. You can read in the paper that a certain rule is coming up the next day for a certain length of time; that at the end of a certain length of time we will vote, and that we will then vote "aye" or "nay." I can get up at 7 o'clock in the morning, go to my hotel door and open it, and there I find a newspaper telling me exactly what I am going to do during the day.

Now, today I read in the Washington Post:

House to extend N. R. A. under gag rule today.

The article further says:

The route to final passage, 2 days ahead of N. R. A.'s June 16 deadline, was specially beaconed late yesterday by a rigid House rule limiting all debate today on the Senate's extension resolution to 1 hour.

Now, the Washington Herald says:

House orders gag. Vote N. R. A. today.

So undoubtedly, the newspapers must be right, for they have never been wrong on predicting exactly what we are going to do.

Be that as it may, I shall vote for this rule, although we rushed the other N. R. A. through quickly in a few minutes—or rather in about an hour and a half—it has since been over in the Senate where they have rather thoroughly discussed it, filibustered it, and where we now understand it; and now, this new N. R. A. before the House provides in effect that the Sherman antitrust law shall not be suspended but shall be enforced—which was provided in my amendment and defeated by a small margin in this House—and it specifically sets out that there shall be no price fixing, and expresses through Congress at least a policy in opposition to sweatshops and child labor, long hours, and abuse of the rights of the ordinary man, and the intention of this legislation is good and should be passed. Therefore, I shall not object to the newspapers telling in advance what I am going to do, but shall be happy to vote for the bill and the rule, because it includes the betteer features of the old N. R. A., with its worst ones eliminated, and should be preserved for the time for purposes of collecting data, information, and statistics if for no other.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, there is in this Government one official who is responsible only to the Congress of the United States, to nobody else; and that is the Comptroller General of the United States, Hon. J. R. McCarl—and he is a good one, even though he is a Republican. He was brought here by Senator NORRIS, one of the ablest and most fearless men in either House of Congress [applause], and J. R. McCarl is an honest, efficient, active, alert, and dependable official of the Government.

I want you colleagues on the other side of the aisle to get this and remember it every time you make a speech such as was made by my friend a moment ago: Not a dollar can be paid out of the Treasury of the United States except by law, by the laws that you pass here on this floor; and if there ever is an attempt made to spend a dollar of money out of the people's Treasury except by law it will be stopped in the twinkling of an eye.

There never has been an instance yet where any attempt was made to spend money against provisions of law but what the Comptroller General of the United States has stopped it immediately. I have seen him stop big Cabinet officers. I have seen him stop the Secretary of War, I have seen him stop the Secretary of the Navy, I have seen him stop the Postmaster General and the Secretary of the Treasury, I have seen him stop organization after organization of the Government when they have attempted to spend money against the provisions of law.

So remember when you go to criticize, remember that you Republicans on that side of the aisle have in office a faithful, honest, efficient Republican officer of this Government, whose duty it is to prevent money being spent except according to law; and he is a man in whom every Democrat has confidence, in whom you have confidence. So it should go out to the American public that their money is safe in the Treasury, so far as being spent unlawfully is concerned; it cannot be spent unlawfully.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, it has been indicated that an amendment was offered in the House during the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 113 similar in nature to the Senate amendment upon which we are to pass today. The RECORD will disclose, Mr. Speaker, that no amendment similar to the one now under discussion was offered by anyone. It has been stated that the Senate amendment now under discussion was included in the motion to recommit. The RECORD will disclose that the motion to recommit was for a study of these problems by the Federal Trade Commission. So that the RECORD will be clear I insert herewith the Senate amendment:

To the text of said amendment (House amendment in S. J. Res. 113), after the word "repealed" in the last line thereof, insert ": Provided, That the exemption provided in section 5 of such title shall extend only to agreements and actions thereunder (1) putting into effect the requirements of section 7 (a), including minimum wages, maximum hours, and prohibition of child labor; and (2) prohibiting unfair competitive practices which offend against existing law, including the antitrust laws, or which constitute unfair methods of competition under the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended."

I make the broad statement that there is nothing added to the Senate Joint Resolution 113 as amended by the House. I call your attention to the fact that everything in subsection 1 in the Senate amendment is authorized and required in the original N. I. R. A. and its extension passed last week. I further state that the inclusion of section 7 (a) in any agreement that could be entered into by the President of the United States under the Senate resolution as amended in the House last week is mandatorily required. I quote section 7 (a) in its entirety:

Every code of fair competition, agreement, and license approved, prescribed, or issued under this title shall contain the following conditions: (1) That employees shall have the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and shall be free from the interference, restraint, or coercion of employers of labor or their agents in the designation of such representatives or in self-organization or in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection; (2) that no employee and no one seeking employment shall be required as a condition of employment to join any company union or to refrain from joining, organizing, or assisting a labor organization of his own choosing; and (3) that employers shall comply with the maximum hours of labor, minimum rates of pay, and other conditions of employment approved or prescribed by the President.

It will be remembered that under the N. I. R. A. we had three methods set out therein, namely, codes, agreements, and licenses. Codes went out under the Supreme Court decision. The license provisions went out under the operation of the law itself a year ago. Voluntary agreements were all that remained in the N. I. R. A. extension act.

Voluntary agreements are included in section 7 (a). This section says that every agreement approved under this title shall contain the conditions of section 7 (a). In other words, no agreement could have been entered into under the N. I. R. A. or the extension resolution without having in it the provisions of section 7 (a) which gave employees the right to organize and bargain collectively, the right to join a union of their own choosing or refrain from joining one which they did not choose, and provide for maximum hours of labor, minimum rates of pay, and other conditions of employment approved by the President.

Consequently, I say that there could have been no agreement approved by the President either under the original N. I. R. A. or the extension measure that would not include "putting into effect the requirements of section 7 (a), including minimum rates of pay, maximum hours of labor, and prohibition of child labor."

Subsection 2 of the Senate amendment prohibits unfair competitive practices which offend against existing law, including the antitrust law, or which constitute unfair methods of competition under the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended. It is inconceivable to me that industry would agree or that the President would approve any agreement which contained an unfair competitive practice which was a violation of law or against which the Federal Trade Commission had inveighed. It is inconceivable to me that industry would agree upon unfair competitive practices which were criminal in nature; but if they did reach such an agreement, who would intimate that the President of the United States would approve such agreement? Neither would such agreement contain criminal offenses or unfair methods of competition so determined by the Federal Trade Commission.

In my judgment, the Senate amendment adds nothing to and subtracts nothing from Senate Joint Resolution 113, as amended in the House last week.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN].

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, this afternoon at 5 o'clock our distinguished colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. SISSON] will deliver an address over the radio on the subject of The Judicial Veto. I understand the gentleman has made a very deep study of this subject, and I am sure his talk will be of interest to all the Members.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON].

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, as has been previously explained by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON], the resolution now under consideration adds nothing and subtracts nothing from Senate Joint Resolution 113 as amended by the House.

The gentleman from Ohio has seen fit to find fault with everything connected with the N. R. A. He sees some good in the N. R. A., but says it ought to be killed and it ought to be amended. He finds every possible fault. If it can make the gentleman feel any easier, sleep any sounder, or make him any happier or result in his living longer, may I say that certainly there is no objection to this perfectly harmless amendment being adopted.

The merits and demerits of the N. R. A. and of the House resolution relating to that subject were fully discussed and voted upon on June 7. The amendment to Senate Joint Resolution 113 was adopted by a vote of 265 to 121. So there is no use of additional debate on that subject. It was fully discussed at that time and the amendment was fully explained. Every criticism that could be thought of on the other side of the aisle, so far as the N. R. A. was concerned, was made at that time.

Mr. Speaker, there are two reasons why we are willing to agree to the Senate amendment. First, it means nothing; it adds nothing; neither does it subtract anything from the resolution. On the other hand, if we do not concur in the Senate amendment and send it back to the Senate, this will take additional time and means delay, which those on the other side would like to see happen. They are anxious to kill the N. R. A., of course. I hope the Members on this side and the Members on the other side who believe that there has been some good accomplished through the N. R. A. will vote to concur in the Senate amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time. Therefore, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICH. It was stated by the gentleman from Ohio that we would have permission to speak on the amendment submitted by the Senate. May I inquire if we will have an opportunity to discuss the Senate amendment?

The SPEAKER. If the resolution is adopted, that will be the end of the matter.

Mr. RICH. Then we are shut off completely from debate?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has answered the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman.

The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 336, nays 31, not voting 63, as follows:

[Roll No. 95]

YEAS—336

Adair	Darden	Hildebrandt	May
Allen	Delaney	Hill, Ala.	Mead
Amlie	Dempsey	Hill, Knute	Meeks
Andresen	Dietrich	Hill, Samuel B.	Merritt, N. Y.
Andrew, Mass.	Dingell	Hobbs	Millard
Andrews, N. Y.	Disney	Hoeppel	Miller
Arends	Dobbins	Hoffman	Mitchell, Tenn.
Arnold	Dockweiler	Hook	Monaghan
Ashbrook	Dondero	Hope	Montague
Bacharach	Dorsey	Houston	Montet
Barden	Doughton	Huddleston	Moran
Beam	Doxey	Hull	Moritz
Beiter	Drewry	Imhoff	Mott
Bell	Driscoll	Jacobsen	Murdock
Berlin	Driver	Jenckes, Ind.	Nelson
Biermann	Duffy, N. Y.	Jenkins, Ohio	Nichols
Binderup	Duncan	Johnson, Okla.	Norton
Blackney	Dunn, Pa.	Johnson, Tex.	O'Brien
Bland	Eaton	Johnson, W. Va.	O'Connell
Blanton	Eckert	Jones	O'Connor
Bloom	Edmiston	Kahn	O'Day
Boehne	Eicher	Kee	O'Leary
Boileau	Ekwall	Keller	O'Neal
Boland	Ellenbogen	Kelly	Owen
Boylan	Engel	Kenney	Palmisano
Brewster	Englebright	Kerr	Parks
Brown, Ga.	Evans	Kimball	Parsons
Brunner	Farley	Kleberg	Patterson
Buchanan	Fenerty	Kloeb	Patton
Buck	Fiesinger	Knutson	Pearson
Buckler, Minn.	Fish	Kocialkowski	Peterson, Fla.
Buckley, N. Y.	Flannagan	Kopplemann	Peterson, Ga.
Burdick	Fletcher	Kramer	Pettengill
Burnham	Focht	Kvale	Pfeifer
Caldwell	Ford, Calif.	Lambeth	Pierce
Cannon, Mo.	Ford, Miss.	Lanham	Pittenger
Carlson	Frey	Larrabee	Plumley
Carmichael	Fuller	Lea, Calif.	Polk
Carter	Fulmer	Lee, Okla.	Powers
Casey	Gambrill	Lehlbach	Quinn
Cavicchia	Gasque	Lemke	Ramsay
Chandler	Gavagan	Lewis, Colo.	Ramspeck
Chapman	Gearhart	Lewis, Md.	Randolph
Christianson	Gehrmann	Lloyd	Rankin
Church	Gifford	Lord	Rayburn
Citron	Gilchrist	Lucas	Reece
Clark, Idaho	Gildea	Luckey	Reed, Ill.
Clark, N. C.	Gillette	Lundeen	Reed, N. Y.
Coffee	Goldsborough	McAndrews	Reilly
Colden	Goodwin	McCormack	Richards
Cole, Md.	Granfield	McFarlane	Robertson
Cole, N. Y.	Gray, Pa.	McGehee	Robinson, Utah
Collins	Green	McGrath	Rogers, Mass.
Colmer	Greenway	McGroarty	Rogers, N. H.
Connery	Greenwood	McKeough	Romjue
Cooley	Greever	McLaughlin	Rudd
Cooper, Tenn.	Guyer	McLeod	Ryan
Corning	Gwynne	McMillan	Sabath
Costello	Haines	McReynolds	Sanders, La.
Cox	Halleck	McSwain	Sanders, Tex.
Cravens	Hamlin	Maas	Sandlin
Crawford	Hancock, N. C.	Mahon	Sauthoff
Crosby	Harlan	Mapes	Schaefer
Crosser, Ohio	Hart	Marcantonio	Schneider
Crowe	Harter	Martin, Colo.	Schuetz
Crowther	Hartley	Martin, Mass.	Schulte
Cullen	Healey	Mason	Scott
Cummings	Hennings	Massingale	Scrugham
Daly	Hess	Maverick	Sears

Secrest	Sullivan	Turner	Whittington
Seger	Sumners, Tex.	Turpin	Wigglesworth
Shanley	Sutphin	Umstead	Wilcox
Sirovich	Tarver	Utterback	Williams
Sisson	Taylor, Colo.	Vinson, Ga.	Wilson, La.
Smith, Conn.	Taylor, S. C.	Vinson, Ky.	Withrow
Smith, Va.	Taylor, Tenn.	Wallgren	Wolcott
Smith, Wash.	Terry	Walter	Wolverton
Snell	Thomas	Warren	Wood
Snyder	Thomason	Wearin	Woodruff
Somers, N. Y.	Thompson	Weaver	Woodrum
South	Tobey	Welch	Young
Starnes	Tolan	Werner	Zimmerman
Stefan	Tonry	West	Zioncheck
Stubbs	Truax	Whelchel	The Speaker

NAYS—31

Bacon	Ditter	Kinzer	Rogers, Okla.
Bolton	Ferguson	Ludlow	Stewart
Buckbee	Fernandez	McLean	Taber
Carpenter	Gray, Ind.	Maloney	Thurston
Cartwright	Griswold	Marshall	Tinkham
Castellow	Hancock, N. Y.	Michener	Wilson, Pa.
Darrow	Higgins, Conn.	Ransley	Wolfenden
Deen	Hollister	Rich

NOT VOTING—63

Ayers	DeRouen	Kennedy, N. Y.	Robsion, Ky.
Bankhead	Dickstein	Kniffin	Russell
Brennan	Dies	Lambertson	Sadowski
Brooks	Dirksen	Lamneck	Shannon
Brown, Mich.	Doutrich	Lesinski	Short
Bulwinkle	Duffey, Ohio	McClellan	Smith, W. Va.
Burch	Dunn, Miss.	Mansfield	Spence
Cannon, Wis.	Eagle	Merritt, Conn.	Stack
Cary	Faddis	Mitchell, Ill.	Steagall
Celler	Fitzpatrick	Oliver	Sweeney
Claiborne	Gassaway	O'Malley	Thom
Cochran	Gingery	Patman	Treadway
Cooper, Ohio	Gregory	Perkins	Underwood
Cross, Tex.	Higgins, Mass.	Peyser	Wadsworth
Culkin	Holmes	Rabaut	White
Dear	Kennedy, Md.	Richardson

So the resolution was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. Oliver with Mr. Treadway.
Mr. Mansfield with Mr. Wadsworth.
Mr. Celler with Mr. Short.
Mr. Cochran with Mr. Merritt of Connecticut.
Mr. Fitzpatrick with Mr. Culkin.
Mr. Eagle with Mr. Holmes.
Mr. Steagall with Mr. Cooper of Ohio.
Mr. Patman with Mr. Dirksen.
Mr. Kennedy of New York with Mr. Fenerty.
Mr. Dickstein with Mr. Lambertson.
Mr. Stack with Mr. Doutrich.
Mr. Sweeney with Mr. Robsion of Kentucky.
Mr. Thom with Mr. Perkins.
Mr. Ayers with Mr. Lamneck.
Mr. Dunn of Mississippi with Mr. O'Malley.
Mr. Richardson with Mr. Rabaut.
Mr. Burch with Mr. McClellan.
Mr. Bankhead with Mr. Cannon of Wisconsin.
Mr. Cross of Texas with Mr. Brennan.
Mr. Lesinski with Mr. Brown of Michigan.
Mr. Russell with Mr. Dear.
Mr. Gassaway with Mr. Claiborne.
Mr. Sadowski with Mr. Kennedy of Maryland.
Mr. Kniffin with Mr. Higgins of Massachusetts.
Mr. White with Mr. Underwood.
Mr. Faddis with Mr. Duffey of Ohio.
Mr. Smith of West Virginia with Mr. Gingery.
Mr. Dies with Mr. Brooks.
Mr. DeRouen with Mr. Peyser.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called Mr. BYRNS's name, and he voted "yea."

Mr. MAHON and Mr. HOFFMAN changed their votes from "no" to "aye."

Mr. DARROW and Mr. THURSTON changed their votes from "aye" to "no."

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from West Virginia, Mr. SMITH, has been called away on account of important business. He asked me to say that if he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. RUSSELL, is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. HIGGINS, is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, our colleague, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARY], is absent on account of the death of our late colleague, Mr. CARDEN. I have a pair with the gentleman from Kentucky. If he were present, he would vote "aye", and I therefore withdraw my vote and answer present.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues [Mr. SPENCE, Mr. CARY, Mr. GREGORY, and Mr. ROBSION] are all necessarily absent on business of the House. If present, they would each vote in the affirmative.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to announce that my colleague, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON], requests that he be paired against the rule. However, in view of the fact that a vote on the rule is, in effect, a vote on the Senate resolution, I ask that he be given a general pair.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 6323) entitled "An act to provide for the custody of Federal proclamations, orders, regulations, notices, and other documents, and for the prompt and uniform printing and distribution thereof", disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. BARKLEY, Mr. McKELLAR, and Mr. NORBECK to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7982) entitled "An act to amend the Migratory Bird Hunting Stamp Act of March 16, 1934, and certain other acts relating to game and other wildlife administered by the Department of Agriculture, and for other purposes."

EMERGENCY RAILROAD TRANSPORTATION ACT, 1933

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 258.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 319, a joint resolution extending the effecting period of the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act, 1933. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the joint resolution for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution from the Rules Committee providing for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 319, providing for the extension of title I of the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act, which we passed in 1933.

The other titles of the law are permanent law, but title I expires by operation of law on the night of June 16, or next Sunday, at midnight. The purpose of this measure is to extend title I.

This title provides for the Coordinator who has administered the law since its enactment. Because of the emergency in unemployment, the act froze the employment situation on the railroad transportation systems as of that date, May 1933, except that the railroads can take advantage of such vacancies as may arise by death or resignation or retirement. Outside of these vacancies, the employment stands as it did at the time of the enactment of the law. Without this emergency legislation, as I understand it, there would be opened up a field for consolidation of railroads and for a reduction of employees, as the railroads might see fit. We feel that an emergency still exists in reference to employment and that the coordinator should be continued as under the previous act and that the employment situation should stand as it has stood under the Transportation Act for the last 2 years.

The rule is an open rule and provides for 1 hour of debate, with full right of amendment. Both the railroad men and the railroad management have spoken in high terms of praise of Mr. Eastman as a coordinator and of his services in the administration of this law. We think its passage is imperative as an emergency measure and that title 1 of the act should be continued, and therefore this action becomes necessary.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Can the gentleman tell us what has been accomplished up to this time under this title?

Mr. GREENWOOD. As I understand it, there have been certain consolidations presented to Mr. Eastman upon which he has ruled, and certain questions relative to employment. I cannot tell the gentleman about the details as well as some of the members of the committee.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I was simply wondering how many actual coordinations have been made.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I cannot give the gentleman that information, but I think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] or the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] can give the gentleman the information, and these gentlemen will be yielded time later.

The President approves this measure, and we feel that the benefits that have been achieved by reason of this law should be preserved and that the policy should be continued for the present. Title 1 of the former act should be extended as provided in the joint resolution.

If there are no further questions, speaking simply on the adoption of the rule, which I hope and trust will be agreed to, I shall yield to others.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. MILLARD. Has any report been made by Mr. Eastman or anyone connected with his organization?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I think so, but I would rather the gentleman asked the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] or the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES]. The hearings were before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, and they are more familiar with the matter. The resolution shall be discussed by members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire any time?

Mr. RANSLEY. No.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Then, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER]——

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. I do not care to make a speech. I simply want the legislation adopted.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, no further time being requested on the adoption of the rule, I therefore move the previous question.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMENCEMENT AT NIAGARA UNIVERSITY

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and insert therein an address delivered by the Postmaster General at Niagara University.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There as no objection.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following commencement address delivered by Hon. James A. Farley to the graduating class of Niagara University, Niagara Falls, N. Y., June 11, 1935:

To the president and faculty of Niagara University may I acknowledge with sincere gratitude the signal honor that has been conferred upon me today. I am happy to become associated with this historic institution and to become a member of its alumni association. The training received under the Vincentian Fathers has enabled the graduates of Niagara by their activities to reflect in achievement the labors so freely given in the name of God by those devoted men whose sacrifices have made possible this great university.

To the graduating class, of which I am happy to be counted as an honorary member, I wish to address my remarks. You are completing a course of excellent training which should fit you well to cope with present-day problems. As a class you are entering into life's work with hundreds of other classes that are being graduated this month from institutions throughout the land. You are part of a great army of men and women possessed of special training entering into a world at a time when great problems are in the course of solution. There are tens of thousands of you new graduates who may not realize that your combined influence is bound to affect the course of future civilization. But such is the case, for the world's economic system is in a period of transition and is extremely sensitive to every new influence entering into what today to many people seems a maze of uncertainty.

Now, where are we to get the guides who will lead the world out of this period of doubt and uncertainty? They must come from such institutions as this—places where men and women may not merely acquire such knowledge as can be found in books or absorbed from the words of the devoted men who have been your teachers. These are the students of yesterday, as you are the students of today. Theirs has been the part of greatest services to humanity, for they are the ones who pass on from generation to generation all that experience and research have taught mankind.

If civilization has any meaning it is that, forever and forever, the effort must be to increase the total of happiness of the world. Success, such as I am sure you all seek—fame, power, riches—serve but for a lifetime, and pass; but what remains is progress. Most of us are not conscious that our selfish aims and ambitions tend to the general good but, inevitably, that is what happens. Fame becomes an example; power resolves itself into leadership; and riches, sooner or later, flow into the common pool of public improvement.

The greatest thing you and those other thousands of men and women who step into the arena of action today have acquired is that you have learned to think.

Man only learns by experience—his own or that of others—and education so gained is the lever that moves the world. It is the power that lifts mankind, that makes it possible to avoid the pitfalls of the past, and harvest the best the future has in store. And the more education is diffused, the surer is that harvest. So I say to you that yours is the glory and the honor and the task to end the doubt and the uncertainty, and carry on the supreme work of progress.

I recognize that I come here from the Capital of the greatest Nation of the world and, as a member of the one Government in the world on which the eyes of all nations are focused. We are looked up to everywhere because of the definite purpose of the present American administration to solve the problem of economic rehabilitation with a completeness that will assure permanency as to time, protection as to people, and prosperity as to result. I recognize also that unexpected events of recent days have intensified the seriousness of situations that continue grave, although definitely progressing toward improvement. These events have imposed on our Government additional problems that must be solved if the battles already won are to be followed by further victories in our fight to effect the conquest of depression. On their practical solution depends the eventual institution of a workable system of industry to provide for all the equitable distribution of the fruits of labor. Only a consuming power sufficient in volume to protect our processes of production, on which our prosperity depends, can save those processes from collapse.

I have come here with a message of confidence. In comparison with all the other nations of the world, these United States stand preeminent. In the genius of our people, the productivity of our soil, and the vast store of our natural resources we possess the elementals which are bound, with proper planning, to provide a high standard of living for all of our citizens.

The proper planning after 2 years of proven results has suffered a temporary set-back. The very nature of that set-back is a proof of the permanency of our institutions, and as loyal Americans living in orderly procedure, we must accept the set-back and proceed according to its terms.

But proceed we will; and you need not fear that our progress will be balked, for, at the helm of our ship of state is a guiding hand which has piloted us safely through the storms of 2 treacherous years. Now that the harbor is in sight you can be sure that he will find his way out of the present shoals into the channel of content and bring the ship safely into the port of prosperity. The accomplishments of the past provide you adequate reasons for your confidence in the future, and you graduates can go out into the world with full assurance that you will have every opportunity of successfully utilizing the training you have received. As you grow older you will be glad that you started on your way at the same time that a fairer and more equitable economic system was in the process of formulation. There is no doubt whatever that a new field of opportunity has been established for the use of America because of the fearlessness, foresight, genius, and the accomplishment of that great humanitarian, our President, Franklin D. Roosevelt.

You graduates of Niagara University who are before me have the privilege of a great opportunity. I have mentioned before the tens of thousands of others who are being graduated this month. Add to them the hundreds of thousands of graduates who have received their degrees during the 5 years that have elapsed since the start of the depression and look ahead another 5 years when other hundreds of thousands will join your ranks, and you have the composite force which will shape future civilization. These college-educated men and women of this decade of transition, together with those thousands of others of your age who will educate themselves, constitute a great trained army upon whom it is incumbent to provide for the continual expansion of the privileges you have received so that they can be within the reach of all.

Such extension of the privilege of education is the one sure way of relegating to oblivion all of the destructive forces of the many "isms" that are being promoted by the demagogues who seek to destroy by pulling down our democratic institutions, and by those at the opposite pole who seek to have and to hold illicit privilege. Both are in error.

Your training has taught you that error leads to inevitable failure and that truth must predominate. A truth that has been demonstrated through all the centuries of history is that some must lead. Give everyone equal opportunities and always a class of leaders will arise. These leaders are the thinkers and the executives who must provide the ways of progress. On their unselfish utilization of the natural talents bestowed upon them by their Maker and the opportunities they found depends whether or not they can permanently remain in possession of the powers of leadership. Twenty-five years from now, when the leaders of today are gone, the truth of what I am saying will be apparent to you, from among whom will come the leaders of tomorrow whose efforts will make possible the attainment of the goal.

Your first aim should be to extend as far as possible the privileges you have received. A college diploma is no longer a distinction. It should be just as much a right of all our boys and girls who are ambitious for or capable of profiting from that education as has been primary learning in the past. New York State has extended the compulsory-school age this year, which is a step in the right direction, but until the opportunity for higher education is just as general as the present grade- and high-school education, we fall short of that first principle of American citizenship—equal opportunity for all.

You know from your own experience that training by competent teachers is the one sure antidote for blind, and unreasoning, and destructive agitation against democratic government. You know, that the discipline which you have undergone has taught you to control yourselves and to respect our institutions. You know, that if all of our young men and women could have the same benefits that you enjoy the followers of the demagogic agitators would be fewer, that the potential criminals would be fewer, and a more enlightened citizenry would more intelligently solve the present-day problems of distress.

I am prepared to answer the two arguments that would be used against universal extension of higher education. The first argument is the cost. Wouldn't it be far better, if we realize that the pressing problem of the day is unemployment, that we keep our young men and women in training which would benefit them in later life? This would make possible the employment of more of those of mature years and thus reduce the expense we are at present under in taking care of the unemployed. At the same time thousands more would be engaged in the profession of teaching, thus providing jobs of a useful nature, the benefits of which would accrue through the centuries. Of course there would be extension of educational facilities as represented by plant and equipment. Every extension of this nature would provide employment; and what better way can be found for providing jobs than by making a happier people and establishing a citizenry that will cut down the forces that breed crime, communism, and chaos?

The second argument that will be broached is, "What will we do with all our people if they are educated?" America has grown great because of the continual raising of our standards of living. Just as we today would not return to the standards of living of 25 years ago, so will you, 25 years from now, look back on today as an antique age. In the past 25 years we have had a material progress. Motor transportation, rapid communication, high-speed railroad service, palatial ships, radio, massive buildings, motion pictures, mass production, aviation—these and many other advancements have all been on the material side. They have progressed with miraculous speed under the inspiration begotten of a zeal for acquisitiveness. The good is that as a Nation we can have plenty of everything with a minimum of productive effort. The evil that has resulted is that we have a hundred and thirty million of citizens who do not know just how to make possible the utilization of all of these inventions of modern progress. Since they do not know how, the lack of use has prevented them from having the means to afford their utilization even if they knew how to use them. A constant increase of education will implant the desire for continual higher standards of living, for an increasing demand for the finer things of life.

You who have spent 4 years at Niagara know that this area should be the mecca for many thousand more tourists than have actually enjoyed the scenic beauties of this historic river. Travel has fallen off because many have not the means; but if those who have the means would follow their impulses, thousands of others would be at work performing the services incidental to the entertainment of the traveling public. You know that the facilities of traveling can be expanded and utilized by the income which would be provided in the expansion of the facilities themselves. You know that a large part of the people do not travel because the desire has not been implanted in them, and you know that this desire would be implanted by education.

Likewise you know that many people not having a clear perspective on what the future holds are living under conditions that would be intolerable to them if by education the finer modes of living were made apparent. In this age where modern inventions have made possible low-cost houses that would have been considered palaces 50 years ago, those having the means of living in such houses are not always doing so. Only by education can this desire for better housing be promoted. And the very attainment of this desire by those able to do so will continually provide an incentive for a greater number of our citizens to improve their living conditions.

And as in travel and in housing, leisure time will be spent in the enjoyment of wholesome sports, clean plays, instructive lectures, in boating, motoring, and the thousand and one other ways that will promote the physical and mental well-being of our people. In providing the facilities for such recreations, new wealth will be created, which will provide employment out of which a more contented citizenry, improved in mind and body, will receive the benefits in a full measure of such a parade of progress.

But if we are going to create the high order of civilization that I have described, it is necessary to create a desire for its enjoyment, and this desire can only be created by the education of our people so that they can properly appreciate the benefits available. In the whole scheme of things the more informed and the better trained are our people, the more will they be able to have all of the comforts as well as the necessities that can be provided by intelligent planning.

There are so many things to be done that you need have no fear as you go into the whirlpool of life's activities. Direct your talents toward uplifting and unselfishly endeavor to help others upward and your success will take care of itself. If my words seem impractical, just ponder on the fact that for 5 years we have been universally an unhappy people, because material success was the goal. Then realize that just across the Niagara Gorge, a great nation has been able, for a century and a quarter, to live beside this great Nation of ours, in peaceful tranquillity, begotten of utter lack of material defenses; while in Europe, strife and war have resulted because one nation trusted not the other and because one people tried not to help the other.

There is an example of what friendship among nations will bring about. It is a fitting example for us as people to follow. From every other known system of economics we reached the brink of disaster. We are now building by uplifting. Uplifting comes through education. You, who have the benefits of education must use them to uplift others. Do so unselfishly and the results you obtain will well repay the sacrifices made by these good Vincentian Fathers on your behalf. In repaying your debt to them, you will at the same time be producing for posterity a rich heritage, and the sacrifices made by our forefathers who opened up this land of plenty, will at last bear the fruits they intended, and America will be what America deserves to be, a haven of happiness, where all will start with equal opportunities and will achieve in proportion to what they contribute to the general good in effort and energy.

EXTENDING THE EMERGENCY RAILROAD TRANSPORTATION ACT, 1933

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 319, extending the effective period of the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act, 1933.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. LEWIS of Colorado in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MONAGHAN].

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, the urgent necessity for this legislation makes me hesitate even to consume the 5 minutes allowed me. I am not making any partisan speech, because I do not believe in making partisan speeches.

In 1933, when Franklin D. Roosevelt was inaugurated President of the United States, the vested interests, railroads, banks, insurance companies, all forms of business were willing to accept his leadership, and under that leadership business continued to increase and the people continued to become happier and their condition more secure.

But just like all business, which is usually selfish and acquisitive, they forgot the benefits that Franklin D. Roosevelt's leadership brought them, and today they vigorously oppose legislation designed to bring recovery.

I call attention to the fact that the President sent a message to Congress urging the enactment of House Joint Resolution 319. For that reason, I hope that the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] will be approved to add section 2 which our committee struck from the bill, providing that the $2 mileage shall be paid by the railroad companies.

They are the ones to benefit from the legislation, if it is continued, and by all the rules of logic, reason, and justice they should be the ones to pay for its continuance.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONAGHAN. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. Are the railroads opposing this legislation?

Mr. MONAGHAN. They appeared before our committee and opposed the resolution. I may say that the chairman of the Railroad Association came before us, and in response to my question as to what he proposed to do for dismissed employees he was at a loss to respond.

Mr. TRUAX. It is approved by the Railroad Brotherhood?

Mr. MONAGHAN. Yes. Mr. George M. Harrison, president of the Railway Clerks and chairman of the Railway Executives' Association, appeared before our committee and made a very able statement in favor of the resolution.

Mr. TRUAX. This resolution—H. J. Res. 319—proposes to extend the effective period of the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act to June 17, 1936, and also proposes to continue until that date the office of Federal Coordinator of Transportation. These features are contained in title I of the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act and were not enacted as permanent legislation. This title and the office of Federal Coordinator were limited to a period not longer than 2 years which expires June 17, 1935.

In my mind there is no question of a needed continuation of this act. Without doubt that need is elemental and fundamental. The benefits accruing jointly for the railroads themselves, for their employees, and for that portion of the public affected directly and indirectly are manifest. While it may be true that some minor disadvantages may have been experienced through the passage of this act those disadvantages were so slight and of such negligible character as not to be worth serious consideration by the real friends of railroad workers and the patrons of transportation service.

The necessity for the act is quite apparent. Railroads, generally, were in a desperate financial condition; due alone not to the depression but also to their own willful selfishness, greed, and lack of economic foresight, and disregard for the rights of others. More than 750,000 railroad employees were dropped from the pay rolls, starting with the depression and continuing to the enactment of this law. Due to both the depression and the competition of other forms of transportation the net income of railroads today is only 50 percent of that for the period 1923–29. Railroads have exhibited a deplorable lack of foresight in determining and complying with the demands of twentieth-century transportation users. Passengers continue to swelter and wallow in hot, filthy, dusty, grimy passenger cars. Railroad executives and boards of directors could not, or would not, see the dire necessity for improved conditions. It was only upon the receipt of Government finances that they developed and made a part of equipment air-conditioned cars and trains. Worst of all they made no attempt whatsoever to meet the growing competition of automobiles, busses, and trucks with a reduction in freight and passenger rates. On the other hand, freight rates were advanced and passengers in most sections still pay 3.6 cents per mile, which in many cases is prohibitive for the users' pocketbooks.

Pullman companies are nothing more or less than bandits and brigands who compel their passengers to pay from $4 to $6 per night for the use of a lower berth. Passenger rates should be reduced now to a maximum of 2½ cents a mile, and Pullman rates should be reduced 50 percent. A 30-percent general reduction in freight rates would be justified at this time. Then and then only will there be a large increase in customers, patrons, and receipts by the railroads.

Millionaire owners of the railroads and Pullman cars are not only economically blind, they are stubborn. They stick to the oxcart age insofar as rates are concerned. They have been immensely benefited by the Government and taxpayers. Approximately $500,000,000 have been loaned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; only $70,000,000 have been repaid; $50,000,000 is in default. Many roads are in receiverships, bankruptcy, or in the hands of trustees. Through the operation of this act large savings can be realized by railroads should they adopt recommendations made by the Coordinator and his staff. The continuation of this act is vitally necessary for the maintenance of the positions of railroad workers now employed. It is absolutely necessary to the reemployment of those of the 750,000 dropped and not as yet reemployed.

The act provides that the railroads shall pay $2 for every mile operated by them, for the maintenance of the act. Many railroads wrongfully oppose this charge. An attempt will be made today to repeal that portion of the act, and to have the cost fall on the Government, hence on the shoulders of the taxpayer. I am thoroughly opposed to this attempted repeal. The carriers themselves benefit more than anyone else. Every move for economy by the Coordinator means increased profits for the railroads, consequently they should pay the bill.

The cost of all forward-facing measures and legislation should be borne by those groups who benefit most financially thereby. Some lawyers doubt the constitutionality of this act. In my judgment it is perfectly sound and wholly constitutional. Repeal this act and the railroads would not abide by voluntary agreements as some have suggested, no more than do certain industrialists abide by voluntary agreements under N. R. A. codes.

When considering legislation designed to benefit the railroad systems generally, we should have the broadest perspective and viewpoint, and always remember that railroad men, the railroad workers, are the warp and woof of all of the great railroad transportation systems. I shall continue in the future, as in the past, to fight for the human rights of these workers. [Applause.]

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONAGHAN. Yes.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Does it appear at any place in the hearings that while in 1920 there were in the employ of the railroad 2,033,000 men, in 1929 there were employed only 1,600,000, a loss of 400,000, and further, that in this same year, the railroads showed the greatest decrease in the cost of operation, $1,322,000,000, 70 percent of which was brought about by reason of the reduction of the number of employees.

Mr. MONAGHAN. I believe that point was made by Mr. Harrison when he appeared before our committee.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONAGHAN. Yes.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the railroad employees are in favor of the bill in its present form?

Mr. MONAGHAN. Yes; and I believe they want the committee amendment rejected. That is, they want the railroads to bear the burden of this benefit which they get under this law.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. And some Member of the House will present that amendment?

Mr. MONAGHAN. Yes. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] will present it. I hope the House will accept the amendment of Mr. CROSSER, because without it the law will be virtually worthless, as there will not be any money to operate it unless unappropriated funds in the Treasury be appropriated as a deficiency appropriation or the President sees fit to take the money from the $4,880,000,000 and then it would be taken from worthy causes perhaps for the promotion of emergency employment and relief.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. I just want to say that I shall vote for whatever the railroad employees want.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned my position on the resolution can be stated in a very few words. I am in favor of the continuance of the law authorizing the Coordinator of Railroads for another year in view of the present situation. The Coordinator and his staff have made very extensive studies of the railroad situation and have made a great many recommendations and suggested some bills for the consideration of Congress. No consideration has been given to those recommendations by the Congress at this session. Whose fault that is it is not necessary now to determine. It seems to me that the work of the Coordinator and his recommendations will go for naught largely unless his office is continued long enough to give the Congress an opportunity to make a thorough study of them and the bills that he has suggested. My understanding is that there is no considerable opposition to that feature of this legislation extending the life of the Coordinator. I think a great majority at least of the members of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee believes that under the circumstances the office of the Coordinator should be extended for another year.

The controversy in the committee arose over the second section of the bill, which provides for the assessment of $2 per mile upon the railroads to meet the expenses of the Coordinator's office. The majority of the committee voted to strike out the section containing that provision. Personally, I did not vote for the motion to strike out the section. I do not think that the section in itself has great significance, but the fact is that we are within 2 days of the time when the office of the Coordinator will expire by law; and unless this legislation is enacted promptly, there will be a hiatus there, and just what the effect of that would be I do not know.

I do not place as much significance as some upon the cost of the matter to the railroads. The $2-per-mile assessment, as I understand it, will amount to $530,000; and I understand that that is not a serious matter so far as the railroads are concerned, although, of course, it is an item. That is the way the cost of the Coordinator has been met up to date, and in view of the legislative situation I am in favor of continuing that provision and continuing the office of the Coordinator for another year.

The legislation means a great deal to railroad labor. I think others will discuss that feature of it more in detail, but the law provided that in making consolidations and other changes to bring about economies on the railroads, the number of employees on the railroads could not be reduced below what it was in 1933 except the normal reductions due to death, resignations, and natural retirement, which amount to about 5 percent of the total employment per year, so that now railroad labor under this law could be 10 percent less than it was in 1933, and, of course, as time goes on the reduction might be greater. The law does prevent the discharge of labor because of the consolidations and other changes, and for that reason railroad labor is very much in favor of the passage of the resolution.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. There have not been any consolidations up to date?

Mr. MAPES. No. That, however, is natural, because the Coordinator has had to make his study and to make his recommendations, and after he makes his recommendations, adjustments and agreements between the railroads have to be made in order to bring about the necessary changes to put into effect his recommendations.

Mr. MICHENER. I might say to the gentleman from Michigan that the Coordinator has been before the Committee on the Judiciary for weeks with a bill to amend the bankruptcy laws under which railroads are consolidated. As I understand from him, there has been no consolidation possible, and there will be no consolidations until they get additional legislation. I believe the committee will report something within the next couple of weeks.

Mr. MAPES. The statement of my colleague is as I understand the situation, and it seems to me to emphasize the necessity for prolonging the office of the Coordinator until adequate consideration can be given his recommendations by the Congress.

Mr. REECE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. REECE. It is not anticipated, is it, that there can be any consolidations or savings effected until the roads have gone into bankruptcy to avail themselves of the benefits of the law to which the member of the Committee on the Judiciary referred?

Mr. MAPES. I understand that the elimination of certain terminals and the use of joint facilities, and so forth, can be effected without any bankruptcy proceedings, and it is hoped that the perfectly solvent roads will make some economies of that kind.

Mr. WITHROW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. WITHROW. The resolution as it passed the Senate contains a provision that requires the railroad companies to contribute $2 per mile?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. WITHROW. If we adopt the committee amendment, it will mean that this measure will possibly have to go back to the Senate?

Mr. MAPES. It does not mean that it will possibly have to go back. It means that it will have to go back.

Mr. WITHROW. And it will probably have to be acted on again by the Senate?

Mr. MAPES. It will have to go back to the Senate and if the Senate should adjourn this afternoon over until Monday, it might be quite unfortunate.

I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD].

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, it is necessary, in my judgment, to keep in mind two important points in connection with this legislation. In the first place, it is necessary that we continue the functions of the Coordinator's office for at least a period of 1 year. An extension denied at this time will result in chaos. We would lose much of the valuable work accomplished by that agency created by the Congress only a short time ago. The extension therefore is vital and that is the purport of the resolution now before the committee.

During the next year or two vast changes will occur in the transportation agencies of the Nation. New legislation will be considered by Congress, which will embrace within the one department of government every phase of transportation. During that time we need this agency. Therefore the extension of the agency is of vast importance.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. No; not now. But an extension of the agency without funds would be futile, and therefore the Senate proposal which carries with it the money is as vital as the extension itself. When that amendment is offered I trust the House will give it the approval it merits. To provide for the extension of an agency and then to strangle it by lack of funds would in my judgment be a meaningless act, and one that does not merit the attention of this House. I hope the extension will be granted and that the funds necessary will likewise be made available. I hope, too, that the day will come when every major transportation agency will come under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission or some similar agency. It is unwise and unfair to expect the railroad companies of America to compete with other agencies which are not called upon to meet the requirements of local or Federal authority. [Applause.] Competition must be fair and justifiable and under Federal regulation.

We have too much at stake in the welfare and well-being of the Nation to allow the railroad companies to go along in the future as they have in the past, with new forms of transportation springing up, free of Federal regulation and control, taking away the very heart and profit of the business, much of which should go to the railroads. So you and I, in the course of the next year or two, will be called upon to give considerable thought and study to the great question of bringing the transportation facilities of the Nation within the scope of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and let us, during the interim, continue this agency with funds to carry on its work. [Applause.]

The Emergency Railroad Transportation Act of 1933 created the office of the Federal Coordinator of Transportation. During these 2 years the Coordinator has performed a valuable public service in studying our transportation facilities, in suggesting necessary economies, and in ascertaining wise legislative action for the future.

The Coordinator's investigations strengthened the opinion already held by many high Government officials, including the President, that a definite economic need exists for increased Federal regulation of all forms of transportation.

Particularly, in connection with the railroad industry, he found financial distress, duplication of services, wasteful practices, and a general need for reorganization and coordination of facilities.

The findings of the Coordinator were made public and are now reflected in several bills pending in this session of Congress, which call for expanded authority by the Interstate Commerce Commission in dealing with the problems of transportation.

With the necessary appropriation to carry out its provisions, this resolution, if passed, will make possible the continuation and achievement of an equitable Federal plan for the coordination and reorganization of our country's all-important but now chaotic transportation systems. The economic stability of the carriers, the welfare of the employees, and the provision for adequate public service, are all involved and dependent upon prompt and effective Federal guidance.

For these reasons, and additionally, in view of the recent fate of the Railroad Retirement Act, we must not neglect to study promptly means to preserve the morale of the employees and the efficiency of our industries. This resolution provides the means for obtaining expert judgment in determining future policy. To stop now, when so much good has been accomplished, would invite a national catastrophe of frightening dimensions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD] has expired.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce [Mr. RAYBURN] a question? After listening to the remarks of our colleague from New York [Mr. MEAD], I am under the impression that legislation affecting the railroads of this country and various other forms of transportation, so far as the regulation of rates is concerned, is not going to be acted upon at this session of the Congress; is that a correct statement by the gentleman from New York?

Mr. RAYBURN. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has never acted on rates. That was turned over to the Interstate Commerce Commission many years ago.

Mr. RICH. I was under the impression that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House was going to propose legislation at this session of the Congress whereby all forms of transportation—railroads, trucks, and water—would come under an act giving due consideration to the regulation of rates.

Mr. RAYBURN. In the first place, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce does not have jurisdiction over all that. The waterway end of it went to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. We do hope to pass before the session is over a bus and truck regulatory measure. As for aviation, I do not think we will reach it this session.

Mr. RICH. Then I am wrong in assuming from the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD] that this would lie over until another year before action would be had by your committee?

Mr. RAYBURN. The Interstate Commerce Commission recommended many times the regulation of busses and trucks before the Coordinator was ever thought of. In 1929 the House passed a bill to regulate busses, but it failed in the Senate.

Mr. RICH. Does the House expect to pass a bill on that subject at this session?

Mr. RAYBURN. It does.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. MILLARD. Did the committee hold hearings on this joint resolution?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. MILLARD. Since 1933?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. MILLARD. Did the majority of the committee vote to strike out section 2?

Mr. RAYBURN. They did.

Mr. MILLARD. We have not heard any explanation about this yet, at least I have not. In order that I may know how to vote, will the gentleman explain the situation?

Mr. RAYBURN. The only question involved is whether the railroads shall continue to pay $2 a mile, amounting to approximately $530,000 a year with which to defray the expenses of this agency, or whether they should be paid for by appropriation from the Treasury.

Section 2 of the bill is part of the law under which the Coordinator had been operating for the last 2 years.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. What does the committee expect to do with the bill, Senate 1629, commonly known as the "Wheeler bill", which has passed the Senate?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not know what the subject matter of the bill is just from hearing its number.

Mr. PIERCE. This bill deals with the regulation of trucks and busses.

Mr. RAYBURN. I will say to the House that that matter has been in the subcommittee for some time. They held extensive hearings and are about ready to report to the full committee. We expect to pass through the committee and through the House a bill for the regulation of busses and trucks. Whether or not it will be exactly like the Wheeler bill is another matter.

Mr. PIERCE. I am in favor of this bill, but I am not in favor of regulating the farmers' trucks for the benefit of the Wall Street bankers.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield.

Mr. WOOD. What was the reason for striking out the provision requiring the railroads to contribute on the basis of $2 per mile? Did not the committee feel the railroads should bear their portion of the expense of administering this act?

Mr. RAYBURN. I did not vote for it myself, but it was the majority view of the committee that it should not be continued. Furthermore, there was some doubt in the minds of a number of members of the committee as to whether we could make the railroads pay this $2 a mile if they resisted. They thought, therefore, the cost of administering this act should come out of the general revenues of the Government because it was a matter affecting commerce generally, and we pay the expenses of the operation of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. WOOD. Does not the gentleman believe the railroads would be willing to continue this payment in view of the fact they are the greatest beneficiaries of the law?

Mr. RAYBURN. The only man who spoke for the railroads spoke against the resolution.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. REECE].

Mr. REECE. Mr. Chairman, when the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act of 1933 was passed, it carried a provision that the railroads should make a contribution of $1.50 per mile to defray the expenses of its administration. The railroads, during the first year of the existence of this act, did contribute the $1.50 a mile. At the beginning of the second year it was requested that their contribution should be raised to $2 per mile. The railroads interposed no objection to raising the contribution. This gave the administration approximately $500,000 for the year 1933. The Federal Coordinator, who has had charge of the administration of the act, has made extensive studies and has reported to Congress his findings. The reports have not yet been acted upon by Congress. The bills having to do with carrying his reports into effect are now pending in the committees.

The more substantial part of the work of the Federal Coordinator as contemplated when the act was passed has been accomplished. The railroads have borne the expenses of administering the act, amounting to something like $800,000. This is the entire direct expense except that the Federal Coordinator was allotted something more than $350,000 from C. W. A. funds, which have been expended.

It was felt that the railroads should not be called upon to continue to bear the burden of administering this act if it is continued, for the continuance will be for the general benefit of the country, for commerce in general. Under the act as passed originally the railroads were called upon to make contribution to bear the entire administrative costs of the act. It was felt by the committee that it was unfair to call upon the railroads alone of all transportation agencies involved to bear the entire expense; and, as the chairman of the committee stated a while ago, a serious doubt existed as to their being any legal justification for placing this kind of burden exclusively upon the railroads, especially in view of the more recent decisions of the Supreme Court on questions where similar issues were involved. Out of these considerations the committee handling the matter felt that this amendment should be adopted and that the revenue required to bear the expenses of the Coordinator's office should come out of the general revenues. I do not feel there is any reason why the adoption of this amendment should disturb the enactment of the legislation because while it is true that it means the bill must be sent back to the other body, still it can readily be adopted by the other body so as to become law before the term of the Coordinator expires.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I yield two additional minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. REECE. Under the original act there is ample authorization for making available funds out of the general revenue with which to carry on the work of the Federal Coordinator.

Mr. MILLARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REECE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MILLARD. Does the gentleman feel that the overburdened taxpayers should pay between $500,000 and $600,000 out of the Federal Treasury to benefit the railroads mainly? The gentleman is in favor of striking out section 2?

Mr. REECE. The continuance of the Federal Coordinator is not for the benefit of the railroads. The railroads are opposed to the continuation of this office. It is being continued for the benefit of commerce in general, and if it has any effect it has that general effect. Why should one class of citizens, therefore, be called upon to make a contribution in order to bear the expense of one of the functions of an office for the benefit of the general public?

Mr. MILLARD. Have not the railroads willingly and gladly paid their share up to date?

Mr. REECE. They have paid it without objection up to date; yes.

Mr. WOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REECE. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. WOOD. The very name of this act indicates what the law intends to do. It is called the Railroad Transportation Act. The gentleman states that this is for the benefit of unified transportation. Does not the gentleman know that when they bring the busses and trucks under the supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission and under the Coordinator that the rates on busses and trucks, referring to passenger and freight rates, will have to rise, and that the traveling public and the shipping public will be paying more for transportation in order to save the railroads of this country?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. REECE. Mr. Chairman, the continuance of the office of Federal Coordinator of Transportation has no relation to legislation which is now pending to bring other forms of transportation under the Interstate Commerce Commission. The duties of the Federal Coordinator of Traffic have to do with all forms of transportation, and his recommendations deal with all forms of transportation. The railroads are the only transportation agencies which are called upon under the present act to share in the expense involved in the administration of that office.

Mr. WOOD. What other forms of transportation does the gentleman think are going to benefit by this legislation? It cannot be said that the busses and trucks will benefit, nor the water-transportation systems.

Mr. REECE. The busses, trucks, and water transportation, as well as all other forms of transportation, stand to benefit by the continuation of this office just as much as the railroads. The railroads doubt very seriously that the continuation of this act will benefit them. If its continuance is justified, it is justified only by the effect it may have upon commerce in general.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WITHROW].

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be very little, if any, open objection to the continuance of the Emergency Transportation Act for 1 more year; however, there is a controversy over whether or not the railroad companies should continue to contribute $2 a mile toward the administration of this act, which indeed is a nominal sum. This is an effort on the part of the secret enemies of this legislation to kill the bill by legislative complication.

In my opinion, if the committee amendment which strikes out that requirement is adopted, we would be killing this bill by indirection, because if the amendment is adopted, this resolution will have to go back to the Senate, and if by chance the Senate should adjourn over until Monday, the Emergency Transportation Act of 1933 would die automatically on Sunday, June 16. The other contingency is if by chance this amendment should be adopted, and if by chance the Senate should concur in the amendment, this would mean a request would come before this House for an appropriation of $500,000. It would no doubt be difficult to secure action on such an appropriation, and without the appropriation the act would be ineffective.

Mr. REECE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WITHROW. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. REECE. At one time there was made available $350,000 out of the P. W. A. fund for the administering of this act. Since the authority was contained in the original act for an expenditure out of the general revenues, an allotment of whatever amount might be necessary could be made for this purpose.

Mr. WITHROW. If we adopt this amendment, we will be led into a lot of difficulties. There are certain Members of this House who want to defeat the Emergency Transportation Act of 1933, and they cannot do it directly, so they are trying to do it indirectly.

Mr. Chairman, the Government and the railroad employees have been very kind to the railroads. Whenever the railroad companies have gone before the Interstate Commerce Commission for a revised rate structure the Commission has always been very sympathetic. Whenever the railroad companies have come to any of the Government financial agencies and asked for loans the Government has given them the money.

On the other hand, the employees have always been fair with the railroad companies. In 1932 the railroad employees throughout the United States voluntarily took a 10-percent cut in their wages. In addition to that, the contracts between the employees and the employers were liberalized.

The result of these concessions made by employees has been that they have suffered a reduction in income of at least 24 percent as compared with earnings of 1929. Figures prepared by the Federal Coordinator of Transportation show that 20 percent of all railroad employees in 1933 received less than $600 per year. More than 50 percent received less than $1,200 per year, and 80 percent received less than $1,800. I quote these figures to show that the cooperation of employees in accepting wage reductions has been at a real and personal sacrifice to the employees.

The railroad companies can well afford to pay the small amount of money which the unamended resolution would assess upon them. If the Emergency Transportation Act is permitted to expire, the result would probably be a ruthless series of consolidations without regard to the interests or welfare of the railroad employees, the public, or railroad stockholders.

It has long been apparent that the railroad executives, if left to their own devices, will complete the ruin of our transportation systems because of their short-sighted policies. It is of utmost importance that they be prevented from further contributing to the economic destruction of the entire country as well.

The railroad executives of today, instead of being operating officials and instead of going out and getting business as they should, have become "wizards" in financing and refinancing. That has become their specialty, at the expense of the employees, their stockholders, and at the expense of the general public.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WITHROW. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Does the gentleman know that today under the P. W. A. the Government holds actual title to over $1,000,000,000 worth of railroad rolling stock and equipment?

Mr. WITHROW. Yes.

Mr. GRISWOLD. And that under the R. F. C. they hold title to $285,000,000 worth of rolling stock and equipment that has been sold to the railroads on trust notes?

Mr. WITHROW. I do.

Mr. Chairman, I agree that there are some consolidations which should be made. I agree that there are some diversions of traffic which should be permitted. But those consolidations and diversions should be made only after a careful, impartial study of the transportation situation, which has not been completed as yet.

Now, if we do fail to pass this Emergency Transportation Act and allow the railroad managements to consolidate as they please, to divert traffic as they please, the result will be nothing short of chaos.

No unreasonable demand is made on railroad companies by this resolution as passed by the Senate. Any amendment will greatly complicate this matter and may perhaps delay action to such an extent as to permit the present act to expire.

In the interest of railroad employees, railroad stockholders, and the public in general I urge that all amendments be defeated and that this resolution be passed intact in the form in which it has been adopted by the Senate. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEITER] such time as he may desire to use.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, I am glad of this opportunity to recommend the passage of legislation which will continue the operations of the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act after June 16. After 2 years of operation, during which period many steps have been taken to improve conditions surrounding transportation, it is apparent that some form of authority is needed whereby carriers and their subsidiaries will be encouraged to promote action for more economical transportation service and prepare plans for joint use of terminal facilities and prevent unnecessary duplication of services.

The activities of the Federal Coordinator of Transportation along these lines, together with his regional coordinating committees, has contributed materially to the development and advancement of railroad transportation. Plans for consolidation and regulation, subject to review by the Interstate Commerce Commission, are being made and various surveys undertaken which will result in needed changes in existing conditions applicable to transportation agencies.

Labor conditions under the Transportation Act are more as they should be with respect to the relations existing between employer and employee and a further harmony may be expected if recommendations now in the process of being promulgated are carried out.

The members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce have proposed an amendment to the bill now pending which would eliminate section 2 providing for an assessment against each carrier of $2 for every mile of road operated by said carrier. I believe this provision of the bill is of vital importance and necessary to its proper execution and advocate that the reported amendment be rejected by the House.

If the railroad industry were not in dire financial straits due to various causes extension of the Emergency Transportation Act would in all probability not be in order at this time. Obviously, the situation which confronts the railroads, and incidentally some hundreds of thousands of employees, is one that requires continued support.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN].

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me there is just one question on the adoption or rejection of the committee amendment, and that is this: Is the Coordinator performing a governmental function? It is not a question of whether the railroads are being benefited. The fact of the matter is the railroads are being benefited, although they have not asked for this bill. Railroad labor is being benefited, the people who patronize the railroads are being, and, ultimately, the taxpayer is being benefited through the functions of this Coordinator. If they are not, we ought to do away with it.

If we are passing a law for the private benefit of the carriers as such, we are not performing a proper act for the Congress of the United States.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I am sorry, but I cannot yield in the brief time I have.

The Radio Commission does not especially benefit the radio companies. It benefits the public. Our Federal Trade Commission does the same thing for the public, and we do not ask the radio companies to bear the expense and we do not ask the people engaged in interstate commerce to bear the expense of the Federal Trade Commission, nor do we ask private activity to pay for purely governmental activity, the merchant marine, for example.

We are performing a necessary governmental function for the benefit of the people, for the benefit of the employees, and for the benefit of all of us, and it is an unheard-of precedent to put this burden on the railroads. I think the railroads can beat this if they want to go into court and try it out, but they do not want to do that, or, at least, they have not expressed any desire to do so.

I take second place to no man on this floor in being interested in railroad labor. I want to see the employees of the railroads taken care of, but you cannot do this by weakening the railroads that are now down on their knees. The railroads have borrowed $500,000,000 from the United States Government. They are in default to the extent of about $50,000,000 in their payments. In a short time we are going to have the railroads in our lap, whether we want them or not, unless they are able to come back, and we cannot bring the railroads back to benefit railroad labor, to benefit the people who patronize the railroads, to benefit the taxpayers who are going to have to pay whatever the railroads cannot repay on their loans, unless we give them a breathing spell, and this is an opportunity to do that very thing.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I am sorry; I wish I could yield, but in the time I have, it is impossible.

I am not disturbed by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WITHROW]. If this goes to the Senate and they should decide to put it over, a hiatus of a couple of days, I do not think, is going to wreck anything. I do not think Mr. Eastman is going to resign and I do not believe his employees are going to be discharged all at once. I do not believe we are going to have any national strike in a couple of days. It will not make a great deal of difference.

Mr. Chairman, the question before this House is whether or not we want this bill to function as a Government proposition or whether we want to call upon a group of our people and compel them to carry the expense of Government. This is all there is to it. There is no precedent for any such action, and in the final analysis, we are going to injure railroad labor by reducing the fund that the railroads may be able to use in taking care of their employees as we want them to be taken care of.

If this is a bill for the sole benefit of the railroads, Congress ought not to pass it; if it is for the benefit of the public, the railroads ought not be compelled to pay the cost.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I understand the Coordinator of Transportation has not been able to bring his work to completion. I have been watching it with a great deal of interest. I think he has established a valuable service, and I hope the work will continue, and that section 2 will be left in the bill.

It is my understanding the Coordinator of Transportation cannot enforce his orders as the Interstate Commerce Commission can enforce its orders or as the Radio Commission can enforce its orders. Perhaps I am mistaken, but I think I am correct. If I am correct in this, there is a vast difference between the Coordinator's powers and those of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Radio Commission. Primarily, the Coordinator is serving the railroads and their investors at this time. His orders are subject to review by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The Coordinator has made many recommendations to date which the railroads for some reason have not carried out. Many of the orders are of a very sweeping character, cannot be put into operation immediately, and necessarily involve far-reaching changes of the greatest moment. Many of them involve the highest policy and require time to be made effective. If the railroads will carry out many of the recommendations made by the Coordinator and change the nature of the equipment in use, modernize repair shops, speed up time consumed in transit, give terminal service which the shipping public demands and must have, arrange for pool carload shipments, provide interchangeable equipment, establish a modern rate classification and correct freight and passenger rates more in keeping with the demands of the day, then much tonnage in the form of both freight and passengers will be recovered from trucks, touring cars and even airplanes. This will create more jobs for railway workers, enable roads to earn greater returns for those who have money invested in railway securities, make the financing of rail transportation more practicable and rail securities more acceptable to the investing public, and thus preserve rail transportation. In the absence of this, other modes of transportation will take more and more tonnage away from railroads and finally lead to a genuine collapse of the whole railroad capital and road structure of the Nation.

Railroad-management foresight did not function quickly enough to meet changing conditions. No transportation service can succeed unless it meets the requirements of the shipping or traveling public. That is paramount. The surge of man in his progress upward and outward has never and will never be bound by a lagging transportation. The situation is not at all impossible for the railroads and their management. If the management fails in its initiative and operating efficiency, the employees of the roads and the shipping public are the ones who suffer. We must have railway service for the long hauls, and just as surely we must and will have trucks for the short hauls. One service is as important as the other. Tourists will not travel in automobiles to such a great extent if the railroads, through their management, will meet the service and rate requirements of the traveling public. Travel by rail is much safer than by automobile. From this great reservoir of traffic the railroads can recover much gross and net revenue. Faster trains, more comfortable equipment, and lower rates will without question prove very beneficial to railway management, the traveling public, railroad employees, and the investing public.

Railway management cannot do these things with the present equipment. They need many improvements, as the Coordinator has pointed out. I think the Coordinator has given us a most valuable piece of work. Furthermore, I think the work of the Coordinator has already been of direct benefit, in large measure, to the railroads, and therefore they should pay the $2 per mile to help continue this work. When the Coordinator takes on the powers of a commission, which we hope he will not have to do, then it will be more appropriate for his expenses to be provided for out of the general funds of the Federal Government, for then he will in whole be serving the entire transportation system of the Nation. We cannot permit a situation to be further aggravated or to become more complicated which will further result in more railway employees being thrown out of employment, or which will continue a public sentiment which permits more and more penalties being imposed against the salaries and wages of those employees, and all in the name of greater operating economy. Tonnage must be recovered, service must be given that will induce shippers to use the rails, and through this method the jobs of the railway employees maintained. If this all requires new and modern equipment in the form of rolling stock, machine shops, new rate structures, revised and modernized classifications, consolidations, pooling agreements, new laws which will permit such coordination of operations, and other changes, then let us proceed to get the facts and then make the necessary changes.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS].

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I am vitally interested in seeing this act extended. I think it is a most essential thing at this time. The Coordinator has been making a most valuable contribution of the transportation problem by studies he has instituted, with the assistance and cooperation of various committees of the railroads themselves on a voluntary basis, and with the aid of the State commissions in many cases. The benefits that would be derived by the general public, the shippers, and ultimately to the consumer, in the cost of articles that have to be shipped will so far exceed the cost involved that it becomes negligible.

Section 2 on the face of it looks unnecessary. It looks as if it is simply an assessment against the railroads in order to provide a lot of political jobs. As a matter of fact, this research must be continued, probably in a less degree than it has been in the past, but they will spend only so much as is necessary, and the balance will revert so that it is not unfair at all. The railroads are great beneficiaries of this research and there must be money to carry on the work. If the act is permitted to die by inaction on the part of the Congress we are very likely to face chaos in the railroad situation. The Coordinator, pursuant to this act, has recommended many pieces of legislation, which, taken as a whole, will give a complete reorganization of the transportation system.

The Congress has not had an opportunity to properly consider and act upon these legislative proposals and until that is done the office and functions of the Coordinator must be continued to preserve stability and order in the transportation field.

A great many employees are directly concerned. Conditions of employment are still critical. The failure to extend this act will very likely result in as many as 100,000 and perhaps more railroad employees being thrown out of work. They represent a highly specialized trade and profession and it is not easy to reabsorb such large numbers back into gainful employment in other fields.

Certainly the Coordinator's office should be continued pending permanent remedial legislation and nothing done that would permit more than the present allowed reduction in employment in the railroads.

I represent a very important railroad center, St. Paul, Minn., and I am familiar with the gravity of the situation. I earnestly plead that the House pass this very important resolution.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER].

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, there are many reasons why we should continue the Emergency Transportation Act for another year. Much work has been done by the Coordinator under the terms of the original Transportation Act. Many recommendations have been made. There is still much work to be done by the Coordinator before he shall have completed his task. We need all the assistance possible to bring about proper coordination in the railroad industry.

The terms of the Emergency Transportation Act have enabled the coordinator to harmonize the activities of the railroads to a remarkable degree. It is therefore unnecessary to argue to any extent for the continuance of the Emergency Transportation Act for 1 year.

The important question is whether or not we should adopt the committee amendment striking out section 2 of the Senate bill. I reintroduced my bill so as to make it correspond with the Senate wording of the bill because we were so near the time when the Emergency Transportation Act itself would expire that I wanted to make sure of the passage of the bill as it passed the Senate and enable the House to pass the bill, send it to the President for approval, and so assure the continuance of the act for another year. Having done that, the question is whether or not we shall adopt the committee amendment and send the bill back to the Senate.

Under the Transportation Act the railroads have heretofore paid $2 per mile toward defraying the expense of the Coordinator's office.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN] has undertaken to tell you that the Coordinator's office is of no benefit to the railroads of the country. I say that it benefits the railroads very much. Every aid to a proper coordination of the railroads, every provision for sound economy helps to increase the profits of the railroads. They should be the last to complain about this small $2-a-mile assessment for the upkeep of the Coordinator's office.

Mr. COLDEN. The report states:

Studies made by the Coordinator and his staff reveal large savings as possible to be realized by the railroads should their recommendations be adopted.

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. That is entirely correct.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. HARLAN. Is it not peculiar that the railroads should appear and even oppose this measure, and they never asked for it, if they are being benefited?

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. The railroads are not all opposed to it.

Mr. HARLAN. I merely have the statement of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. The official representative of the short lines of the country came before our committee and advocated passage of the bill.

Mr. HARLAN. The chairman said that.

Mr. TERRY. At a committee hearing held on this bill the president of the railroad association appeared and opposed the extension, the gentleman will remember.

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. That is correct.

Mr. TERRY. I will ask the gentleman whether he specifically opposed this contribution?

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. He made no reference to it. I do not think there was any reference made by any railroad officials to the method of paying for the upkeep of the Coordinator's office at all.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. If two or more railroads petitioned the Interstate Commerce Commission to consolidate, would the employees, under section 7 (b) of the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act, be protected who might be displaced through the consolidation?

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. If this law were not continued, they would not be protected.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. In the gentleman's opinion, they would be protected?

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. They would not be protected if the act is not extended.

Mr. REECE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. REECE. Does the gentleman feel that there is any constitutional authority for requiring the railroads to make this contribution?

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Oh, I think that a good argument can be made to establish such authority. Of course, lawyers could argue both ways.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the more important consideration is as to the possible effect that failure to enact this measure will have on the railway workers of the United States. Everybody knows that one of the great problems that has confronted the Government is reemployment. The failure to pass this bill would result in many persons losing their jobs. When this bill was passed 2 years ago a great deal of difficulty was experienced in arriving at some arrangement that would prevent the wholesale discharge of employees as a result of some of the changes that might be made under the plea of economy. It was finally agreed that the number of men in the employment of the railroads in May 1933 should not be reduced. The only exception made was that the places occupied by those who might retire, those who might die, and those who might resign, might be left vacant. That could amount to 50,000 a year. Therefore under the act as it stands, the railroads may reduce their total employment by 50,000. What would they do if there were no limitation? What would they do if this Emergency Transportation Act should be not continued in force for another year? No one knows. The president of the railway association was asked the question by the gentleman from Montana as to what their purpose would be with regard to laying off these men. He said they would not be disposed to continue them in service if they did not need them. The plain implication was that they were to be thrown out into the cold.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman considers it is vital to the employees of the railroads to have the Coordinator continued in this position?

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. I say no one can tell the number of men who will be thrown out of employment if this act is not continued for another year. I do not believe that the American people would approve anything of that kind. We must think in a broader way today. We must realize more fully the unity of creation, the brotherhood of man. If we ruthlessly disregard the rights and welfare of those who have woven their very lives into the railroad systems of the country, the consequences will be such as to cause some of those who sneeringly suggest such a course to whine and howl most loudly. Make no mistake, we cannot disregard the welfare of any number of our people without harming the whole of society. The principles of justice require the greatest consideration for every member of society. Justice is the constant aim of democracy and when we analyze it we see clearly that democracy is brotherhood. A clear understanding of the meaning "brotherhood" will enable us to realize that, in order to have civilization at all, each man must regard the welfare of all others as his own welfare. We must demonstrate the futility of dependence on tooth and claw for existence. We must abandon the abominable doctrine, "Everybody for himself and devil take the hindmost." Edwin Markham states the principle beautifully in the following lines:

The crest and crowning of all good,
Life's final star, is Brotherhood;
For it will bring again to Earth
Her long-lost Poesy and Mirth;
Will send new light on every face,
A kingly power upon the race.
And till it come, we men are slaves,
And travel downward to the dust of graves.

Come, clear the way, then, clear the way;
Blind creeds and kings have had their day,
Break the dead branches from the path;
Our hope is in the aftermath—
Our hope is in heroic men,
Star-led to build the world again.
To this Event the ages ran.
Make way for Brotherhood—make way for Man.

Mr. Chairman, let us vote down this amendment and pass the bill just as it passed the Senate. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, to the railroad workers of the United States the railroad retirement legislation is of the very greatest importance. As we all know, men employed in the railroad industry make of their work their life's business. They give their best efforts to the service and manifest a pride in their vocation that is not in evidence in some other fields of human endeavor. Many of them enter the service when they are mere youths and go on through their lives in the railway service, unless some unfortunate mishap prevents them from doing so. As is always the case when men take pride in their work and devote themselves enthusiastically to the same, a high order of ability is developed by them. Railroad workers therefore establish themselves in the community in such a favorable light that they command the respect of all who come in contact with them. They are influential in the social life of the community in which they live, and they always take a public-spirited interest in political matters and accordingly exert a corresponding influence in politics.

It is highly proper, therefore, that the Congress of the United States should give its most earnest consideration to legislation calculated to promote the welfare of the railroad workers of the United States; not only because it is the right thing to do from the standpoint of the men themselves, but also because of the important service these men render to the country as a whole. Transportation is one of the most essential factors in the development of commerce. The railroad systems of the United States are the greatest in the world. Their efficient operation depends to a very large extent indeed on the intelligence and fidelity of the railway employees themselves. It is very important, therefore, that the Congress of the United States consider legislation relating to the railroad workers, not only with full understanding, but with a sense of appreciation of the value of these men to the country as a whole. Railroad men are thoroughly attentive to their duties and as a matter of necessity, of course, must be and are almost universally punctual. It is a work which will not permit of any disregard of time in the most exact sense of the word. The welfare of the whole American people depends upon the promptness and thoroughness with which they do their work.

It is with pleasure, therefore, that I have twice sponsored legislation providing for the retirement of the railroad workers of the United States when they shall have reached a reasonable age. It is felt by those who have studied the subject long and carefully that it would be to the best interests of all concerned to have railroad workers retire at age of 65. This not only gives assurance that employees intrusted with the care of both life and property are in the very best of physical condition in the prime of life, and therefore fit to do their work to the best possible advantage, but it also gives an opportunity to faithful servants to spend the evening of their lives free from the strain of their work and also free from the worry about finding means to earn a livelihood during the closing days of their lives. The railroad retirement legislation will make it possible for every railway worker who shall have been in the service 30 years to retire with the assurance that he will never suffer distress from want in his old age. Such legislation will not only enable the men who have spent their lives in the employment of railroads to retire free from worry and enjoy the closing years of their lives without undue exertion, but at the same time it will make way for the younger men of America to satisfy their ambition to make the railroad service their life's work. In a word, not only will the retirement legislation assure the aged employees of the United States a measure of justice, happiness, and contentment in the sunset of life, but it will do much to abolish unemployment in the industry. With the establishment of this measure of justice for the railroad workers of the United States, we shall have established a precedent which other industries may follow. With such progress toward a more just economic system, I can see in the not distant future at least a partial realization of the dream which Robert Burns expressed in the closing stanza of his famous poem entitled "A Man's a Man for a' That", as follows:

Then let us pray that come it may,
As come it will for a' that,
That sense and worth, o'er a' the earth,
May bear the gree, and a' that.
For a' that, and a' that,
It's coming yet, for a' that,
That man to man, the warld o'er,
Shall brothers be for a' that!

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That title I of the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act, 1933, shall continue in full force and effect until June 17, 1936, but orders of the Coordinator or of the Commission made thereunder shall continue in effect until vacated by the Commission or set aside by other lawful authority, but notwithstanding the provisions of section 10, no such order shall operate to relieve any carrier from the effect of any State law or of any order of a State commission enacted or made after this title ceases to have effect.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of each carrier to pay into the fund provided for by section 14 of the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act, 1933, within 20 days after June 16, 1935, $2 for every mile of road operated by it on December 31, 1934, as reported to the Commission, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to collect such assessments.

With the following committee amendment:

Beginning in line 1, on page 2, strike out all of section 2.

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask the House to vote down this amendment. This is the amendment I was discussing a moment ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the resolution the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LEWIS of Colorado, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration House Joint Resolution 319, pursuant to House Resolution 258, he reported the same to the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAYBURN. Inasmuch as both the Senate and the House bills are the same, when would it be in order to ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may do so now if he wishes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate Joint Resolution 112, extending the effective period of the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act of 1933, and substitute the Senate joint resolution for the House joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House resolution (H. J. Res. 319) was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF NUISANCE TAXES

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee, from the Committee on Ways and Means, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 1227) to accompany House Joint Resolution 324, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed.

EXTENSION OF THE NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL RECOVERY ACT

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Speaker, since early in the session I have taken the position that any revision or extension of the National Industrial Recovery Act should provide for retention of its good features and elimination of the abuses. I believe that the social progress made through establishment of better relationships between capital and labor, elimination of child labor, and increased wages and purchasing power should be preserved. Similarly, the abuses which have become evident must be eliminated so far as possible to do so by legislative action.

The unfavorable Supreme Court decision set rather definite limits on legislation for continuation of the N. R. A., and the only proposal which has come before the House up to the present time is the stop-gap proposal, Senate Joint Resolution 113, continuing some of the present organization for the purpose of research and collection of information relative to industrial activity and trade practices.

This resolution provides also for continuation of the authority to make voluntary trade agreements and in its original form allowed business organizations making such codes or agreements to be exempted from the antitrust laws. I am firmly convinced that much of the dissatisfaction with the operation of the N. R. A. was due to the action of large business groups in taking advantage of the apparent legislative intent to waive the antitrust laws in the original act. Under the protection of the act, big business did not hesitate to impose its will upon the smaller independent concerns and individuals in business and there was no firm administrative action to prevent these abuses.

The Progressive group in the House attempted to make sure that monopolies and trusts would not make further raids upon legitimate independent business and would not gouge the consumer by unreasonable price-fixing practices. Under the terms of the amendment introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] we attempted to specifically repeal the section waiving the antitrust laws. Upon the refusal of a majority of the committee to adopt this amendment, I could not vote for continuation of the N. R. A., even in skeleton form, so long as its real enforcing powers were eliminated, and special privileges to monopolies might be granted without the safeguard of the antitrust laws to protect the great mass of our people.

When the resolution was returned to the Senate for further action, the liberal forces there forced favorable action on the Borah amendment, under which suspension of the antitrust laws is limited to those voluntary agreements and action thereunder which put into effect the requirements of section 7 (a), including minimum wages, maximum hours, and prohibition of child labor; and which prohibits unfair competitive practices which do not offend against existing laws, including the antitrust laws.

Mr. Speaker, this amendment, like the proposal we advanced in the House, prevents business combines from obtaining exemption from the antitrust laws through voluntary codes and agreements which they may draw up if they desire. In view of the fact that the Senate amendment is now a part of the resolution, I can now support the resolution for extension of the National Industrial Recovery Act. I believe, however, that this legislation must be further strengthened by passage of the Wagner-Connery labor-disputes bill, without which labor is now wholly unprotected by governmental collective-bargaining guaranties, and by further action to correct fundamental maladjustments in our economic system.

AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture may have until midnight tomorrow night to file a report on the A. A. A. amendment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, could not the gentleman submit the report by midnight tonight?

Mr. JONES. I do not see how it can be done.

Mr. O'CONNOR. We want to take it up tomorrow if possible.

Mr. JONES. The committee just ordered the bill reported, so it was filed only today.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it the gentleman's purpose to call up the bill tomorrow?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the House will be in session tomorrow.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, answering the gentleman, the first intimation of that nature I had was just a moment ago. I had not planned to do it. I do not know what plans may develop in the House. We are going to have great difficulty in getting our report ready by midnight tonight.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Monday after the reading of the Journal and the completion of business on the Speaker's desk I may address the House for 15 minutes to answer an attack upon an amendment I proposed to the Constitution made in the Washington Times of June 12 by Mr. James P. Williams, Jr.

The SPEAKER. Under the custom that prevails and the action of the Chair heretofore, the Chair cannot recognize the gentleman today to make a speech on Monday. The Chair hopes the gentleman will defer his request.

REAR ADMIRAL YATES STIRLING, JR.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia, Chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted an adverse report (Rept. No. 1228) on the resolution (H. Res. 247) directing the Secretary of the Navy to transmit to the House of Representatives information concerning the activities of Rear Admiral Yates Stirling, Jr., United States Navy.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the adverse report of the committee may be read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the adverse report, as follows:

[H. Rept. No. 1228, 74th Cong., 1st sess.]

DIRECTING THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY TO TRANSMIT TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, AT THE EARLIEST PRACTICABLE MOMENT, CERTAIN INFORMATION

Mr. VINSON of Georgia, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted the adverse report (to accompany H. Res. 247):

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the resolution (H. Res. 247) that the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to transmit to the House of Representatives, at the earliest practicable moment, certain information pertaining to a newspaper article by Rear Admiral Yates Stirling, Jr., having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House and recommend that the resolution do not pass.

The action of the committee is based upon the following letter to the chairman of the committee from the Secretary of the Navy:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, June 13, 1935.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: A copy of House Resolution 247 was brought to my office by Commander Bogart with the request that the Secretary of the Navy make recommendation in regard thereto.

The Secretary of the Navy is very glad to give the information requested in the first two questions of the resolution, and no information is necessary to obtain this information. The answers are as follows:

First. The newspaper article by Rear Admiral Yates Stirling, Jr., appearing in the Washington Herald, Sunday, June 9, 1935, was not authorized by the Secretary or by anyone delegated by him.

It is not necessary for a naval officer to obtain advance authority to publish an article.

For the information of your committee, I quote herewith article 113 of the Navy Regulations, bearing on this subject:

"(1) No person belonging to the Navy or employed under the Navy Department shall convey or disclose by oral or written communications, publications, or any other means, except as may be required by his official duties, any information whatever concerning the Naval or Military Establishment or forces, or any person, thing, plan, or measure pertaining thereto, when such information might be of possible assistance to a power in time of peace or to an enemy in time of war; or, except by proper naval authority, any information contained in the official records of the Government or otherwise acquired which, for reasons of public policy, should not be disclosed to persons not of the Naval or Military Establishments.

"(2) Officers and other persons in the naval service desiring to publish articles on professional, political, or international subjects shall cause their signature to appear, together with a statement to the effect that the opinion or assertions contained therein are the private ones of the writer and are not to be construed as official or reflecting the views of the Navy Department or the naval service at large. Immediately upon acceptance of such articles for publication, the writer will forward a complete copy thereof to the Secretary of the Navy for the files of the Navy Department."

Subject to the requirements of this and of paragraph (1) above, officers and others in the naval service are at liberty to publish articles without further permission from higher authority.

"(3) No person belonging to the Navy or employed under the Navy Department shall, other than in the discharge of his official duties, disclose any information whatever, whether confidential or nonconfidential, or whether obtained from official records or within the knowledge of the relator, which might be of aid or assistance in the prosecution or support of any claim against the United States. (See act of Mar. 4, 1909, sec. 109.)"

Second. Rear Admiral Yates Stirling, Jr., did not ask for nor did he receive the consent of any of his superior officers or the Secretary of the Navy to publish said article.

It should be stated here that it is not necessary for a naval officer to ask for and receive the consent of anyone before publishing an article.

The above quoted article 113 of the Navy Regulations gives you the entire information on the subject of publication of articles.

Third. Rear Admiral Stirling has been communicated with by telephone and has replied as follows:

A. "In writing similar articles for Hearst newspapers the usual compensation has been $150. I expect that compensation for the article of June 9 will be the same. Check has not yet been received for this article. Such total payment as I may receive will be from the King Features Syndicate, Inc. No payment will be received from any other source."

If, in view of the above, it is the sense of your committee this resolution should be favorably reported, the Secretary of the Navy interposes no objection.

Sincerely yours,

CLAUDE A. SWANSON.

THE CHAIRMAN, COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the letter from the Secretary of the Navy furnishes all the information requested in the resolution introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I have no quarrel at all with the action of the Committee on Naval Affairs; in fact, I want to take this opportunity to thank the committee for having obtained the information I requested.

However, I cannot let the letter from the Navy Department go by without making a criticism which I think it justly deserves. The article to which the Navy Department has referred is article 113 of the Navy Regulations. This article specifically states:

Officers and other persons in the naval service desiring to publish articles on professional, political, or international subjects shall cause their signature to appear, together with a statement to the effect that the opinion or assertions contained therein are the private ones of the writer and not to be construed as official or reflecting the views of the Navy Department or the Navy service at large.

I have here a copy of the newspaper article which is specified in my resolution of inquiry, and we find right underneath the title the statement:

By Rear Admiral Yates Stirling, Jr., commandant Brooklyn Navy Yard, formerly commander United States naval base, Pearl Harbor, Hawaii.

But not a single word to the effect that his statement was not to be construed as the official statement of the Navy Department, as required by Navy Regulation 113.

I submit that when this article was published in this form the admiral violated the Navy Regulation 113, to which the Department refers in its letter. Not a single word, however, in the Department letter to the effect that Admiral Stirling violated this regulation when he omitted the statement that his article did not reflect the views of the Navy Department.

While the article in and of itself at this time may not be important, and while the fact he received $150 may be perfectly legal and in order, nevertheless the Navy Department should not permit admirals of the United States to violate the regulations and go around making "jingoistic" statements advocating war with a friendly nation, a nation which we have recognized. I think the Navy Department should take action and discipline this admiral, otherwise we shall have set a vicious precedent. If it had been an enlisted man who had violated the regulations, he would have been disciplined, but in this case he happens to be a stuffed shirt, pompous, "jingoistic" admiral, who is trying to get the United States into a war by his statements. Hence, no disciplinary action. I submit, Mr. Chairman, it is high time that the Navy Department take disciplinary action against these "jingoistic" admirals. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The letter from the Secretary gives the Congress all the information called for in the gentleman's resolution.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Yes. I have no quarrel with that.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman has no apprehension that the Navy Department will not require the admirals as well as enlisted men to live up to its rules and regulations?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. They have to show me.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Well, suppose we cross that bridge when we come to it.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I am going to cross that bridge when I come to it, and the date is on Monday, because I am going to call on the Navy Department and see whether or not they have taken any disciplinary action in this matter.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that all of the information sought in the resolution has been furnished, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] to lay the resolution on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman withhold his request for just a moment?

Mr. RICH. I withhold by request.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business that would be in order on next Monday may be in order tomorrow.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am perfectly willing to have the bills on the Consent Calendar come up for consideration tomorrow, but I believe we ought to have an understanding as to whether there will be suspensions or not.

Mr. JONES. I cannot tell the gentleman. I take it my request would carry with it all suspensions that may be in order on Monday. I do not know what the plans are at this time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Can the Speaker give us any information on that matter?

The SPEAKER. The Chair may say to the gentleman that there will be at least one suspension offered tomorrow.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is the House going to consider the Private Calendar today?

The SPEAKER. The Private Calendar will be called just as soon as the House is ready to have it called.

Mr. TRUAX. May I ask the gentleman from Texas a question? What is the purpose in asking for the consideration of bills on the Consent Calendar tomorrow?

Mr. JONES. It is hoped that we may be able to bring before the House the A. A. A. amendments for consideration on Monday. If we started on them tomorrow we could not finish in any event.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the A. A. A. amendments be before the House on Monday?

Mr. JONES. The Committee expects to report them to the House at that time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] asks unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman upon what subject he desires to talk?

Mr. RICH. I desire to say a few things in reference to printing in the RECORD certain items by the Joint Committee on Printing. I told the Joint Committee on Printing I would mention the matter before the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I give notice now that it is now past 3 o'clock and we have been waiting here all afternoon to get to the Private Calendar. I shall therefore object to any further requests along this line.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no objection to the gentleman extending in the RECORD all of the data and material which he has prepared, but I think it is an injustice to ask us to wait until later in the afternoon before we take up consideration of the bills on the Private Calendar in which many Members are interested. We have been here prepared for 2 days, and it is now nearly a quarter after 3.

Mr. RICH. May I say to the gentleman that I acceded to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] and deferred my unanimous-consent request. I indulged him that courtesy, and I expect it to be reciprocated. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will not object to this request, and I think the information will be of interest to the Members of the House of Representatives and to the country.

Mr. TRUAX. It always is. I shall not object.

Mr. RICH. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the Members of the House to the action of the Joint Committee on Printing. I was notified about a week ago that Senator NORRIS, who had made an address in the Senate on June 3, asked that 27 maps be tabulated as a part of the RECORD. Not knowing what those maps or charts were, I objected, until I could see them before granting permission. The Joint Committee on Printing was called together. Senator FLETCHER, Senator HAYDEN, the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. LAMBETH, Chairman of the House Committee on Printing, and myself were present, and I like all of these gentlemen personally.

We had the 27 charts that were asked to be placed in the RECORD hung around the room. After we looked at all of these charts, every member of the joint committee who was present decided that if they were put in the RECORD about half of them would not be intelligible and no one would be able to read them; also several representatives from the Printing Office were of the same opinion. The Senators stated that because of the fact that Senator NORRIS had pointed to these charts during his speech they ought to be put in the RECORD, notwithstanding the fact they would be unintelligible and no one would be able to read them. I told them that if they would vote for a thing of that kind, to place charts in the RECORD that no one could read, I would bring it to the attention of the House, and they all agreed that I should, and I am now making good my promise. I try not to make promises I do not fulfill. Nor would I say something that I would not say before them in person.

I call your attention to pages 8491 to 8532 of the RECORD of Monday, June 3, 1935, and especially to pages 8494 to 8501 and 8508 to 8511 and 8517 to 8518 and 8521 to 8523, inclusive. I defy any Member of the House to read these 16 pages of the RECORD in their entirety. I know that the Senators, as young as they may be, cannot read them.

When we, as members of the Joint Committee on Printing, permit Members of the House or Members of the Senate to insert in the RECORD charts that are unintelligible, charts that are not understandable, or charts that are not readable, then I think as a Joint Committee on Printing we have not the backbone we should have; we have not the initiative to stop Members of Congress from placing in the RECORD things that cannot be read.

I like Senator FLETCHER and Senator HAYDEN and my colleague from North Carolina, Mr. LAMBETH, but we ought to have the backbone to tell the Members of the House and the Members of the Senate that we are not going to publish unreadable, illegible matter. What good is it but to spend taxpayers' money? I voted against its insertion in the RECORD.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. The gentleman is opposed to the Wheeler-Rayburn bill, is he not, and opposed to the subject matter included in these charts, rather than the way they are extended and placed in the RECORD?

Mr. RICH. No; I am not taking that into consideration. I want to tell the gentleman from Texas that when I oppose a thing I am not afraid to get up here and tell the Membership of the House just what I think about it, and I am not trying to beat around the bush or to go around Robin Hood's barn. Why print anything you cannot read?

Mr. McFARLANE. Is the gentleman for or against the Wheeler-Rayburn bill?

Mr. RICH. What bill is the gentleman talking about?

Mr. McFARLANE. The Wheeler-Rayburn bill. These charts were placed in the RECORD to fully illustrate and explain the splendid address Senator NORRIS made on this subject. You will note that the Senate passed this bill by a vote of 56 to 32 on June 11. I hope we will soon be able to discharge the House committee and bring this bill before the House.

Mr. RICH. That has nothing to do with the insertion of these charts here that cannot be read.

Mr. McFARLANE. It has a great deal to do with it.

Mr. RICH. It is not the subject I am discussing. You cannot read them.

Mr. McFARLANE. Yes; they can be read. I can read them. And the information contained in those charts helped pass this legislation, which, if and when adopted by the House, will go far toward saving the taxpayers many millions of dollars annually in lower light rates.

Mr. RICH. If you can read them, I will buy you a dinner.

Mr. McFARLANE. All right; buy the dinner. I can read them.

Mr. RICH. I will ask the gentleman to come down here in the well of the House, and if he can read any page that he may pick out that I have mentioned, I will buy a dinner for the whole House. [Applause.]

Mr. PARSONS. How much expense is involved in placing the matter in the RECORD?

Mr. RICH. About $800 or $900.

[Here the gavel fell.]

PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Private Calendar.

FIDELITY TRUST CO. AND OTHERS

The Clerk called the bill (S. 694) for the payment of the claims of the Fidelity Trust Co., of Baltimore, Md., and others.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

There being no further objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to receive, consider, and adjudicate claims for refund of the bankers' special tax paid under the acts of June 13, 1898, and October 22, 1914, in view of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. United States (259 U. S. 296), and United States v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. (266 U. S. 587), and in accordance with the agreement made March 3, 1925, between the Attorney General and the Secretary of the Treasury as a basis for settlement of such claims: Provided, That no claim shall be considered which is filed later than 6 months after the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to such claimants any amount due and allowed in the determination of any such claims which shall have been presented in accordance with this act.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, due to the confusion existing in the Chamber and the interruption of the gentlemen on the other side, I was not given an opportunity to object to this bill. I am opposed to the bill, and I think it should be passed over.

The SPEAKER. The objection comes too late. The Chair put the question two or three times, and the bill was then ordered to be read by the Clerk.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HARRY P. HOLLIDGE

The Clerk called the bill (S. 760) for the relief of Harry P. Hollidge.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McFARLANE and Mr. COSTELLO objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

GEORGE B. SPEARIN, DECEASED

The Clerk called the bill (S. 781) for the relief of the estate of George B. Spearin, deceased.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX and Mr. COSTELLO objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

FAIRMONT CREAMERY CO.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1008) for the relief of the Fairmont Creamery, of Omaha, Nebr.

Mr. McFARLANE and Mr. HOPE objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

DINO CARBONELL

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1325) for the relief of Dino Carbonell.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise apropriated, to Dino Carbonell, a resident of Italy, or his duly authorized representative, the sum of $500, representing the amount of a United States Treasury bond (3 percent Treasury bond of 1951–1955, serial no. 22346–F) deposited by him with the immigration authorities of the port of New York, N. Y., as security for a bond executed by him and conditioned upon his departure from the United States on or before June 15, 1932, such bond being subsequently forfeited, although such Dino Carbonell departed from the United States within the period fixed in such bond, as extended by such immigration authorities: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, strike out the word "representing" and insert "in full settlement of all claims against the United States for."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TERESA DE PREVOST

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1360, for the relief of Teresa de Prevost.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McFARLANE and Mr. TRUAX objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

MINNIE C. DE BACK

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1392) conferring upon the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, Southern Division, jurisdiction of the claim of Minnie C. de Back against the Alaska Railroad.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McFARLANE. I object.

The SPEAKER. It requires two objections. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, Southern Division, to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Minnie C. de Back, of San Francisco, Calif., against the Alaska Railroad for general and special damages by reason of personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by her on or about July 3, 1931, while a passenger aboard one of the trains operated by such railroad.

SEC. 2. In the determination of such claim the Alaska Railroad shall be held liable for any tort committed by any of its servants to the same extent as if it were a private person.

SEC. 3. Such claim may be instituted at any time within 1 year after the enactment of this act, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitation. Proceedings for the determination of such claim, and appeals from, and payment of, any judgment thereon shall be in the same manner as in the case of claims over which such court has jurisdiction under the first paragraph of paragraph 20 of section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MILES THOMAS BARRETT

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 546, a bill for the relief of Miles Thomas Barrett.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Miles Thomas Barrett, of Portland, Oreg, the sum of $109.85 for his services in the United States Army as a private in the Corps of Engineers for the period of May 7, 1918, to August 19, 1918, both dates inclusive: Provided, That his service in the United States Army during the period in question is hereby made honorable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GERMAINE M. FINLEY

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1809) for the relief of Germaine M. Finley.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Germaine M. Finley, widow of James G. Finley, late a Foreign Service officer of the United States at Havre, France, the sum of $2,750, being 1 year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while in the Foreign Service; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sufficient sum to carry out the purpose of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

GEORGE R. SLATE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4259) for the relief of George R. Slate.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, George R. Slate, who was a member of Company G, Third Regiment Virginia Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 2d day of July 1898, and notwithstanding any provisions to the contrary in the act relating to pensions approved April 26, 1898, as amended by the act approved May 11, 1908: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

RAYMOND C. BOGART

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 780) for the relief of Raymond C. Bogart.

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. TRUAX objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

HERBERT L. STAFFORD

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 845) for the relief of Herbert L. Stafford.

Mr. TRUAX and Mr. COSTELLO objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

DAVID SCHWARTZ

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 855) for the relief of David Schwartz.

Mr. McFARLANE and Mr. TRUAX objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

THOMAS T. GESSLER

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 1070) for the relief of Thomas T. Gessler.

Mr. McFARLANE and Mr. TRUAX objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

CARL A. BUTLER

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 1470) for the relief of Carl A. Butler.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Carl A. Butler, who was a member of the United States Marine Corps, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 31st day of March 1919: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

RUSSELL H. LINDSAY

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 1714) for the relief of Russell H. Lindsay.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection?

There was no further objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint Russell H. Lindsay, former ensign, United States Navy, in which grade he served honorably during the World War, an ensign in the United States Navy, and to retire him and place him on the retired list of the Navy as ensign, with retired pay of that grade as provided by law for officers retired by reason of physical disability incident to service.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

JOHN P. SEABROOK

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2118) for the relief of John P. Seabrook.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers and sailors John P. Seabrook, who was a member of the United States Marine Corps, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 20th day of September 1920: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ANTHONY PETER DE YOUNG

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2315) for the relief of Anthony Peter De Young.

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. TRUAX objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

SGT. MAJ. EDMUND S. SAYER

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2555) to extend to Sgt. Maj. Edmund S. Sayer, United States Marine Corps (retired), the benefits of the act of May 7, 1932, providing highest World War rank to retired enlisted men.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Sgt. Maj. Edmund S. Sayer, United States Marine Corps (retired), is hereby placed on the retired list of the United States Marine Corps with the rank of lieutenant colonel: Provided further, That no increase in active or retired pay or allowances shall result from the passage of this act over and above that now authorized under the act of June 6, 1924, to enlisted men on the retired list.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

JOHN E. FONDAHL

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2611, for the relief of John E. Fondahl.

There being no objection the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged marines John E. Fondahl, formerly private in the Forty-fourth Company, Third Regiment, United States Marine Corps, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States on September 14, 1921: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GEORGE FRANCIS GRUNDY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2710, for the relief of George Francis Grundy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York and Mr. HOPE objected, and the bill, under the rule, was recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

VICTOR OSCAR GOKEY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3366, for the relief of Victor Oscar Gokey.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. TRUAX objected, and the bill, under the rule, was recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

WILLIAM H. CLINTON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3604, to place William H. Clinton on the retired list of the Navy.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to appoint William H. Clinton, formerly a warrant gunner, United States Navy, and to retire him and place him on the retired list of the Navy as a warrant gunner, with the retired pay and allowance of that grade: Provided, That a duly constituted naval retiring board finds that the said William H. Clinton incurred physical disability incident to the service while on the active list of the Navy: Provided further, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance of any kind shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CAPT. ARTHUR L. BRISTOL, UNITED STATES NAVY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3760, for the relief of Capt. Arthur L. Bristol, United States Navy.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations, to hear and determine, in the same manner in which other claims of like nature coming within the statute of limitations are heard and determined by the Court of Claims, the claim of Capt. Arthur L. Bristol, United States Navy, for rental and subsistence allowances alleged to be due him as an officer with dependents (mother, for the years 1922 to 1925, inclusive). Any judgment which may be entered by the Court of Claims in favor of Captain Bristol will be certified to the Congress for payment in the usual manner.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ELZA BENNETT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4274, correcting date of enlistment of Elza Bennett in the United States Navy.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the laws relating to the Navy and the Naval Reserve Elza Bennett, of the United States Navy, shall for all purposes be held and considered to have reenlisted in the Navy on June 26, 1925: Provided, That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GEORGE BRACKETT CARGILL, DECEASED

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4623, for the relief of George Brackett Cargill, deceased.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Navy George Brackett Cargill, deceased, shall be held and considered to have been discharged under honorable conditions as a seaman, second class, United States Navy, on July 22, 1918: Provided, That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MICHAEL F. CALNAN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5100, for the relief of Michael F. Calnan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOTT and Mr. HOPE objected, and the bill, under the rule, was recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

FREDERICK L. CAUDLE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5782, providing for the advancement in rank of Frederick L. Caudle on the retired list of the United States Navy.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York, Mr. MOTT, and Mr. HOPE objected, and the bill, under the rule, was recommitteed to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

SYLVESTER T. MORIARTY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 966, for the relief of Sylvester T. Moriarty.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX and Mr. COSTELLO objected, and the bill, under the rule, was recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it shall be in order on Monday next for the Speaker to recognize Members for motions to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that it shall be in order on Monday next to recognize Members for the suspension of the rules.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand the request of the gentleman from North Carolina, it was for this one special bill; it did not mean there would be a general suspension day on Monday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New York that the Chair will only recognize some Member to move to suspend the rules on the bill which the Chair assumes the gentleman refers to.

Mr. SNELL. That is the tax bill; we might as well be perfectly frank about it.

The SPEAKER. That is the understanding.

Mr. SNELL. If it is simply for the purpose of taking care of that one bill, I think it is all right, for several Members have left the city with the understanding that the bill would not be taken up before Monday.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is why I am submitting this unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

BURTON BOWEN

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 778, for the relief of Burton Bowen.

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. McFARLANE objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

JOHN M. M'NULTY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2130, for the relief of John M. McNulty.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

There being no further objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint Lt. Comdr. John M. McNulty, United States Naval Reserve, a lieutenant commander on the Naval Reserve officers' retired list of the United States Navy, with the rank of lieutenant commander, with retired pay of that rank, as provided by law, for officers retired by reason of physical disability incident to service.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Costello: Page 1, after line 9, insert the following: "Provided, That no compensation, pay, back pay, pension, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOSEPH HORACE ALBION NORMANDIN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2333, to correct the naval record of Joseph Horace Albion Normandin.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute for the House bill a similar Senate bill, S. 885.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged sailors Joseph Horace Albion Normandin, formerly a seaman, United States Navy, shall be held and considered to have been discharged with an ordinary discharge under honorable conditions as of April 18, 1929, the date on which he was given a bad-conduct discharge from the Navy: Provided, That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, pension, or other benefits shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 2333) was laid on the table.

AUSTIN L. TIERNEY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3390, for the relief of Austin L. Tierney.

By unanimous consent, a similar Senate bill (S. 144) was substituted for the House bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Austin L. Tierney, who served as a fireman, third-class, United States Navy, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States as a fireman, third class, on April 25, 1918: Provided, That no compensation, retirement pay, back pay, or other benefits shall be held to have accrued, nor to accrue in the future, by reason of the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider and a House bill (H. R. 3390) were laid on the table.

W. B. FOUNTAIN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6697, for the relief of W. B. Fountain.

Mr. HOPE, Mr. HANCOCK of New York, and Mr. TRUAX objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ALBERT D. CASTLEBERRY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1583, for the relief of Albert D. Castleberry.

Mr. McFARLANE and Mr. TRUAX objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BERYL M. M'HAM

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6391, for the relief of Beryl M. McHam.

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. TRUAX objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

FRED M. MUNN

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 417, for the relief of Fred M. Munn.

Mr. McFARLANE and Mr. TRUAX objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

NELLIE T. FRANCIS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3574, for the relief of Nellie T. Francis.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Nellie T. Francis, widow of William T. Francis, late minister resident and consul general at Monrovia, Liberia, the sum of $5,000, equal to 1 year's salary of her deceased husband.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LILY M. MILLER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7254, for the relief of Lily M. Miller.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the relief of Lily M. Miller, widow of Ransford S. Miller, American consul general, the sum of $9,000, being 1 year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while in the Foreign Service.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

YVONNE HALE

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 799, for the relief of Yvonne Hale.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Yvonne Hale, widow of Bernard F. Hale, late American consul at Venice, Italy, the sum of $4,000, equal to 1 year's salary of her deceased husband: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JANE B. SMITH AND DORA D. SMITH

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 351, for the relief of Jane B. Smith and Dora D. Smith.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000 to Jane B. Smith, of Plattsburg, N. Y., and $2,500 to her daughter Dora D. Smith, in full settlement against the Government for all claims resulting from injuries sustained when struck by a United States War Department motor vehicle: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 5, strike out "$10,000" and insert "$7,500"; page 1, line 7, strike out "$2,500" and insert "$750."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GEORGE B. GATES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 670, conferring jurisdiction in the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of George B. Gates.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States, notwithstanding the lapse of time or the statute of limitation and the fact that George B. Gates was an employee of the United States as a draftsman at the Boston Navy Yard when he made his invention, and notwithstanding the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 25, 1910, and the amendatory act approved July 1, 1918, to hear, adjudicate, and render judgment on the claim of the said George B. Gates for compensation for the use and manufacture by or for the United States of an invention of said George B. Gates, described in and covered by Letters Patent No. 997616, issued by the Patent Office of the United States July 11, 1911. That the claim of George B. Gates now pending in the Court of Claims, no. 17320, pursuant to Senate resolution considered and agreed to February 9, 1920, be dismissed: Provided, however, That the testimony and exhibits heretofore adduced on behalf of claimant and the defendant constitute the record in the present claim for the decision by the Court of Claims.

SEC. 2. From any decision or judgment rendered under the authority of this act application for appellate review may be made by either party in conformity to the law applicable to suits in the Court of Claims by owners of patents under and by virtue of the statute of June 25, 1910, as amended by the act of July 1, 1918; and any judgment in favor of claimant for compensation for the use of his invention shall be paid in the same manner as other judgments for compensation rendered by the Court of Claims.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FRED EPPS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 810, for the relief of Fred Epps.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York, and Mr. HOPE objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

TEVIS MOTOR CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 971, for the relief of the Tevis Motor Co.

Mr. TRUAX and Mr. McFARLANE objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

LESTER I. CONRAD

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1540, for the relief of Lester I. Conrad.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 17 and 20 of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended (U. S. C., title 5, secs. 767 and 770), are hereby waived in favor of Lester I. Conrad, of Oakland, Calif., who sustained an injury while employed as a carpenter for the cold-storage and ice-making plant, American Expeditionary Forces, at Gievres, France, on January 30, 1918, which resulted in permanent physical disability, and his case is authorized to be considered and acted upon under the remaining provisions of such act, as amended, if he files a notice of such injury and claim for compensation with the United States Employees' Compensation Commission not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this act.

The term "injury", as used in this act, shall have the meaning assigned to such term in section 40 of such act of September 7, 1916, as amended (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 790).

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 9, after the word "who", insert the words "is alleged to have."

On page 2, line 7, after the word "act", insert "Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this act."

And strike out lines 9 to 12, inclusive.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ALLEGHENY FORGING CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3162, for the relief of the Allegheny Forging Co.

Mr. McFARLANE and Mr. TRUAX objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

JOHN L. ALCOCK

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3559, for the relief of John L. Alcock.

Mr. McFARLANE and Mr. TRUAX objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

FLOYD HULL

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4226, for the relief of Floyd Hull.

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. TRUAX objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

ANNA FARRUGGIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4406, for the relief of Anna Farruggia.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Anna Farruggia, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000 as reimbursement of cash bail deposited with former United States Commissioner Arthur G. Fisk, at San Francisco, Calif., and misappropriated by said official.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 6, strike out the words "as reimbursement of" and insert in lieu thereof "in full settlement of all claims against the United States for."

Page 1, line 10, insert the following:

"Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FLOYD HULL

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 351, the bill (H. R. 4226) for the relief of Floyd Hull.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Floyd Hull, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,500 in full settlement of all claims against the Government on account of the loss of his thumb on August 6, 1934, while in the performance of his duties with the North Carolina National Guard at Fort Bragg.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 6, strike out "$2,500" and insert "$1,500."

On page 1, at the end of line 9, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISBURSING OFFICERS OF THE ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4841, for the relief of certain disbursing officers of the Army of the United States and for the settlement of individual claims approved by the War Department.

Mr. HOPE and Mr. MOTT objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

GEORGE R. JONES CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4997, for the relief of the George R. Jones Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New Hampshire.

Mr. McFARLANE and Mr. COSTELLO objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

MOSES ISRAEL

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5393, for the relief of Moses Israel.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Moses Israel the sum of $3,500 for damages suffered by reason of being struck and injured by a Government automobile which was driven by an employee of the Post Office Department: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, after "$3,500", insert "in full settlement of all claims against the United States."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FRANK WILLIAMS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5521, for the relief of Frank Williams.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Frank Williams the sum of $2,500 in full settlement of all claims against the United States Government by reason of being struck and permanently injured by a Government automobile which was driven by an employee of the Post Office Department: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LUCILE A. ABBEY

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 43, for the relief of Lucile A. Abbey.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to consider and determine the claim of Lucile A. Abbey, in the same manner and to the same extent as if said Lucile A. Abbey had made application for the benefits of said act within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ESTATE OF MRS. DONNIE WRIGHT, DECEASED

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 148, for the relief of the estate of Donnie Wright.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of Donnie Wright, late of Vicksburg, Miss., the sum of $4,500, in full satisfaction of its claim against the United States on account of the death of said Donnie Wright, caused by injuries received by her in 1929 in an elevator in the post-office building at Vicksburg, Miss.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RALPH E. WOOLLEY

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 391, for the relief of Ralph E. Woolley.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $7,755.47 to Ralph E. Woolley, of Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States for damages on account of delay in the construction of certain buildings at the Naval Operating Base, Pearl Harbor, Territory of Hawaii, making necessary extra expenditures in connection with the installation, under contract no. 245, dated December 23, 1927, of plumbing, steam, oil distribution, and electrical systems in such buildings: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ALFRED W. KLIEFOTH

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 547, for the relief of Alfred W. Kliefoth.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Alfred W. Kliefoth the sum of $3,940.47 in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States to reimburse him for personal property lost in Russia in 1918 while in the performance of his duties as assistant military attaché at the American Embassy at Petrograd.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 10, insert: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WESTERN ELECTRIC CO., INC.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 560, for the relief of the Western Electric Co., Inc.

Mr. TRUAX and Mr. COSTELLO objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1051) for the relief of the Western Union Telegraph Co.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Western Union Telegraph Co. the sum of $1,155.32 in full and final settlement of all claims against the Government for expenses incurred in repairing a Western Union cable which was picked up and cut by the Coast Guard cutter Pequot, January 22, 1931, in grappling for a United States submarine cable between Knight Key Harbor and Sombrero Key, Fla.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

STEFANO TALANCO AND EDITH TALANCO

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1585) for the relief of Stefano Talanco and Edith Talanco.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Stefano Talanco and his minor daughter, Edith Talanco, both of Bexar County, Tex., the sum of $7,000 in full satisfaction of their claims against the United States for damages on account of personal injuries suffered on May 17, 1932, when a United States Army airplane, piloted by Lieut. E. T. Selzer, crashed into the automobile owned by said Stefano Talanco, which was parked on the Castroville Road, Bexar County, Tex., and in which said Stefano Talanco and Edith Talanco were sitting at the time of such collision, such sum representing (1) $2,000 for permanent personal injuries suffered by said Stefano Talanco, and (2) $5,000 for personal injuries suffered by said Edith Talanco: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 7, strike out "$9,500" and insert "$7,000"; page 2, line 5, strike out "$7,500" and insert "$5,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TAMPA MARINE CO.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1860) for the relief of the Tampa Marine Co.

Mr. TRUAX and Mr. COSTELLO objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

TRIFUNE KORAC

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1863) for the relief of Trifune Korac.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Trifune Korac, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000 representing the amount reimbursed by him to the American Employers' Insurance Co. upon the forfeiture of two immigration bonds executed by said company, upon security furnished by said Trifune Korac conditioned upon the appearance before the immigration authorities of Kirsto Temelkovich and Kosta Simonvich, aliens, who, after the forfeiture of said bonds and the payment of the amount thereof by the bonding company, were apprehended through the efforts of said Trifune Korac and subsequently deported: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 6, strike out the word "representing" and insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MARY SERO JOHNSON (NEE MARY SERO)

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6296) to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Mary Sero Johnson, nee Mary Sero.

Mr. TRUAX and Mr. McFARLANE objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

HORTON & HORTON

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6549) for the relief of Horton & Horton.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Horton & Horton, of Houston, Tex., the sum of $21,648.64 in full settlement of all claims against the Government for labor and materials furnished in connection with the proposed construction of three timber seaplane hangars, pavement, and beach at the naval air station, Galveston, Tex., in 1918.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$21,648.84" and insert "$19,361.30."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SHIPLEY SADDLERY & MERCANTILE CO.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2213) for the relief of Charles P. Shipley Saddlery & Mercantile Co.

Mr. McFARLANE and Mr. TRUAX objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on War Claims.

ERNST NUSSBAUM

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2989) for the relief of Ernst Nussbaum.

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. McFARLANE objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on War Claims.

FRED G. CLARK CO.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 281) for the relief of the Fred G. Clark Co.

Mr. McFARLANE and Mr. COSTELLO objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on War Claims.

SOUTHERN PRODUCTS CO.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 929) for the relief of the Southern Products Co.

Mr. McFARLANE and Mr. TRUAX objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on War Claims.

JOHN A. JUMER

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1363) for the relief of John A. Jumer.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Tresaury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John A. Jumer, of Two Harbors, Minn., the sum of $277, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for personal-property losses sustained by him in 1918 while serving as a captain, Dental Corps, United States Army, in the Argonne Forest, France: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

JOHN W. DADY

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6949) for the relief of John W. Dady.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will report a similar Senate bill, S. 2333.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of John W. Dady, superintendent and special disbursing agent of the Mission Indian Agency, Riverside, Calif., for payments aggregating $582.50, made to Thomas Lucas, an Indian, as mileage for travel performed by automobile while employed as subforeman in emergency conservation work.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 10, after the word "work", insert "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to and the bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 6949) was laid on the table.

SOUTHERN OVERALL CO.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 4408) for the relief of the Southern Overall Co.

Mr. HOPE and Mr. MOTT objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on War Claims.

THOMAS G. CARLIN

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 1759) for the relief of Thomas G. Carlin.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a similar Senate bill (S. 1410) will be substituted.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to summon Thomas G. Carlin, formerly captain in the Army of the United States, before a retiring board to inquire whether at the time of his resignation from the Regular Army he was incapacitated for active service, and whether such incapacity was a result of an incident of service, and if, as a result of such inquiry it is found that he was so incapacitated, the President is authorized to nominate said Thomas G. Carlin a captain in the Regular Army and place him immediately thereafter upon the retired list of the Army, with the same privileges and retired pay as are now or may hereafter be provided by law or regulation for officers of the Regular Army: Provided, That the said Thomas G. Carlin shall not be entitled to any back pay or allowance.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read a third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 1759) was laid on the table.

HARRY L. REAVES

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1390) for the relief of Harry L. Reaves.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York and Mr. MOTT objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HENRY C. ZELLER AND EDWARD G. ZELLER

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 781) for the relief of Henry C. Zeller and Edward G. Zeller with respect to the maintenance of suit against the United States for the recovery of any income tax paid to the United States for the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1916, and ending September 30, 1917, in excess of the amount of tax lawfully due for such period.

Mr. TRUAX and Mr. McFARLANE objected, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

JAMES P. WHALEN

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2325) for the relief of James P. Whalen.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 17 and 20 of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended (U. S. C., title 5, secs. 767 and 770), are hereby waived in favor of James P. Whalen, of Cambridge, Mass., who is alleged to have sustained an injury while employed in the Government arsenal at Watertown, Mass., in 1918 and 1919, which resulted in permanent physical disability, and his case is authorized to be considered and acted upon under the remaining provisions of such act, as amended, if he files a notice of such injury and claim for compensation with the United States Employees' Compensation Commission not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this act.

The term "injury", as used in this act, shall have the meaning assigned to such term in section 40 of such act of September 7, 1916, as amended (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 790).

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "who", insert "is alleged to have"; and on page 2, strike out all of lines 7, 8, and 9 and insert in lieu thereof "Any benefits awarded hereunder shall not accrue prior to the approval of this act."

The amendments were agreed to and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

THOMAS HARRIS M'LAUGHLIN

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2730) for the relief of Thomas Harris McLaughlin.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the employees' compensation fund to Thomas Harris McLaughlin during his natural life the sum of $25 per month, to date from the passage of this act, as compensation for injuries to his right wrist and arm on or about the 29th day of February 1932, in line of duty and while he was serving as an inmate of the United States Industrial Reformatory at Chillicothe, Ohio.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 11, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

MRS. L. B. GENTRY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3149, to confer jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas, Corpus Christi Division, to determine the claim of Mrs. L. B. Gentry.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is conferred upon the United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas, Corpus Christi Division, to hear and determine, and to render judgment, as if the United States were suable in tort, on the claim of Mrs. L. B. Gentry, Corpus Christi, Tex., to recover damages for the death of her husband, L. B. Gentry, resulting from injuries sustained when the automobile which the said L. B. Gentry was driving was struck by a United States Army truck near Alice, Tex., on or about September 3, 1931, if such suit is brought within 1 year after the enactment of this act.

SEC. 2. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to pay any judgment rendered by such court in such suit.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, strike out lines 5, 6, and 7, and insert:

"SEC. 2. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum sufficient to pay the judgment rendered against the United States, if any, as a result of suit hereunder."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ALLEGHENY FORGING CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3163, for the relief of the Allegheny Forging Co.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TRUAX, Mr. McFARLANE, and Mr. COSTELLO objected, and the bill, under the rule, was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

MRS. LAWRENCE CHLEBECK

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3575, for the relief of Mrs. Lawrence Chlebeck.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York and Mr. McFARLANE objected, and the bill, under the rule, was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

JAMES L. PARK

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3907, for the relief of James L. Park.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX and Mr. COSTELLO objected, and the bill, under the rule, was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

E. C. WEST

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4368, for the relief of E. C. West.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to E. C. West, of Dunn, N. C., the sum of $201.59 as reimbursement in full of substitute-clerk hire paid by him from December 31, 1921, to September 30, 1922, while acting as postmaster at Dunn, N. C.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 6, after the figures, strike out "as reimbursement in full of" and insert in lieu thereof "in full settlement of all claims against the United States for"; and in line 10, after the words "North Carolina", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A. BRUCE BIELASKI

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4816, for the relief of A. Bruce Bielaski.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. McFARLANE objected, and the bill, under the rule, was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

WARD J. LAWTON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4821, for the relief of Ward J. Lawton, special disbursing agent, Lighthouse Service, Department of Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. A similar Senate bill (S. 1656) will be substituted, without objection.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Ward J. Lawton, special disbursing agent, Lighthouse Service, Department of Commerce, the sum of $204 paid to the Liberty Brush Co., Philadelphia, Pa. (voucher no. 6660), May 17, 1932, which was later disallowed by the Comptroller General of the United States.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 4821) was laid on the table.

WASHINGTON POST CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4830, for the relief of the Washington Post Co.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a similar Senate bill (S. 1052) will be substituted for the House bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of the act of July 31, 1876, being "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes" (19 Stat. L. 105; U. S. C., title 44, sec. 321), the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Washington Post Co., Washington, D. C., the sum of $109.80 in full settlement and satisfaction of its claim for advertising services rendered the Veterans' Administration in advertising for proposals to furnish labor and materials for certain construction projects as the Veterans' Administration home, Leavenworth, Kans.; Veterans' Administration hospital, Columbia, S. C.; and Veterans' Administration home, Johnson City, Tenn.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: On page 2, line 18, after the figures, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate bill, as amended, was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 4830) was laid on the table.

CLAIMS OF MILITARY PERSONNEL

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4850, to authorize the settlement of individual claims of military personnel for damages to and loss of private property incident to the training, practice, operation, or maintenance of the Army.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the General Accounting Office be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the following claims of military personnel and civilian employees in the amounts shown, which have been approved and recommended for payment by the Secretary of War, for damages to and loss of private property of such personnel incident to the training, practice, operation, or maintenance of the Army, and that such payments be made from the present appropriation of the War Department, entitled "Claims for damages to and loss of private property": Edith Alward, wife of Staff Sergeant Henry J. Alward, $43.50; R. G. Ayers, captain, Infantry, $55.15; Miss G. M. Anderson, civilian employee, $22.30; Harrison B. Beavers, captain, Infantry, $14.85; James H. Blackwell, major, Medical Corps, $45; Clifford Bunting, sergeant, $7.30; Carl B. Byrd, captain, Cavalry, $21.50; Frank T. Balke, lieutenant, Infantry Reserve, $160; Michael J. Byrne, captain, Infantry, $32; Marion Budnick, civilian employee, $22.67; Jasper E. Brady, lieutenant, Infantry, $7.60; M. E. Barker, captain, Chemical Warfare Service, $37.75; Warren R. Carter, first lieutenant, Air Corps, $250; Paul J. Chesterton, sergeant, $146.50; Thomas E. Christ, civilian employee, $21.25; Harvey G. Clark, sergeant, $40; Robert M. Copeland, captain, Corps of Engineers, $3.85; W. A. Copthorne, major, Chemical Warfare Service, $50; James A. Corcoran, sergeant, $4; T. M. Chambliss, major, Infantry, $122.35; Floyd M. Crutchfield, technical sergeant, $17.10; Harvey T. Davis, private (first class), and Mrs. Davis, $108; Willie A. Dennis, staff sergeant, $6.43; Edward F. Durham, civilian employee, $15.70; John H. Daniels, sergeant, $39.75; Gust Ehen, civilian employee, $15.20; Timothy F. Foley, civilian employee, $43.25; Valentine P. Foster, captain, Coast Artillery Corps, $6; Gustav H. Franke, major, Field Artillery, $13.50; John M. Fray, captain, Field Artillery, $17; George Giebler, sergeant, $35.75; Burgo D. Gill, second lieutenant, Field Artillery, $54.75; Alexander O. Gorder, captain, Infantry, $27.30; Willian Grant, master sergeant, $17.64; Chris Gunther, civilian employee, $228.90; L. Perry Hammond, civilian employee, $26.17; Lee W. Haney, first lieutenant, Infantry, $20; Glenn W. Hanna, civilian employee, $30.25; David Heidler, private, $5.15; Francis W. Honeycutt, lieutenant colonel, Field Artillery, $19.10; L. P. Hudson, second lieutenant, Air Corps, $85; M. E. Jennings, first lieutenant, Chemical Warfare Service, $46; Joseph S. Johnson, captain, Infantry, $300; H. D. Jones, sergeant, $14.80; George W. Jones, sergeant, $18.75; Robert F. Keiper, civilian employee, $12.50; George A. Knight, civilian employee, $15; Lewis M. Krostag, private, $104.50; Frank L. Kopp; sergeant, $92.50; C. H. Larrabee, warrant officer, $38; Lyle R. Lappin, sergeant, $44.15; Joe D. Lunday, civilian employee, $71; the estate of Alexander W. Maish, late major, United States Army, retired, $37.95; B. G. Marchi, second lieutenant, Infantry Reserve, $64.50; Frank Monroe, sergeant, $4; Winfield R. McKay, captain, Infantry, $13; Harry J. Mills, private, $55; Timothy M. Montgomery, civilian employee, $11; W. F. O'Neill, civilian employee, $59; Walter E. Prosser, major, Signal Corps, $14; Hartley C. Powell, civilian employee, $139.55; Alexander Phillips, sergeant, $15; Basil H. Perry, captain, Field Artillery, $55.65; Robert K. Perrine, second lieutenant, Infantry, $49.95; J. C. Raaen, first lieutenant, Infantry, $8.75; William J. Ryan, chaplain, $225.75; William T. S. Roberts, first lieutenant, Infantry, $16; August A. Reekast, civilian employee, $17.50; B. L. Robinson, first lieutenant, Corps of Engineers, $10;

J. M. Harmon, first lieutenant, Corps of Engineers, $6.85; David W. Schueler, private, $35.35; A. D. Sanders, first lieutenant, Infantry, $41.05; B. R. Slater, second lieutenant, Infantry Reserve, $174.26; Charles M. Smith, first lieutenant, Infantry, $18.50; I. B. Smock, major, Medical Corps, $100; Allen R. Springer, second lieutenant, Air Corps, $50; Charles G. Stein, sergeant, $40; John A. Sterling, major, Infantry, $50; Robert E. Swab, captain, Infantry, $33.60; Roy J. Taylor, civilian employee, $188.75; John P. Temple, first lieutenant, Air Corps, $15; Willie Thompson, sergeant, $12; Arthur R. Trabold, warrant officer, $4.25; S. C. Vestal, colonel, Coast Artillery Corps, $27.35; P. A. Wakeman, first lieutenant, Signal Corps, $200; E. T. Williams, first lieutenant, Field Artillery, $47.50; Stella E. Williams, second lieutenant Army Nurse Corps, $82.10; Fremon Wright, private, $127.50; George H. Zautner, captain, Quartermaster Corps, $12.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 3, line 11, after the semicolon, insert "R. L. Harris, first lieutenant, Signal Reserve, $24.25"; on page 4, in line 8, after the semicolon, strike out "William J. Ryan, chaplain, $225.75"; on page 4, line 14, after the semicolon, insert "James H. Skinner, second lieutenant, Field Artillery, $38.20."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COSTELLO: Page 2, line 4, after the word "property", insert a comma and the words "in accord with conditions therein stated."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JUDSON STOKES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4860, for the relief of Judson Stokes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $2,500 to Judson Stokes for damages as the result of injuries suffered when the vehicle which he was operating collided with a United States mail truck on October 30, 1928, near Atlanta, Ga.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$2,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$50 per month for 50 months from and after the approval of this act."

Page 1, line 11, after the word "Georgia", insert the following: ": Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RABBI ISAAC LEVINE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4974, for the relief of Rabbi Isaac Levine.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000 to Rabbi Isaac Levine, of Knoxville, Tenn., on account of personal injuries sustained by him as a result of being struck by a truck being recklessly driven by an employee of the United States Government, said injury occurring in Knoxville, Tenn., on December 18, 1933:

With the following committee amendments:

In line 5, strike out the figures "$1,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$500."

In lines 6 and 7, strike out the words "on account of" and insert in lieu thereof the clause "in full settlement of all claims against the United States for."

At the end of the bill add:

": Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHARLES PINE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5971, for the relief of Charles Pine.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Charles Pine the sum of $5,000 for injuries sustained on or about December 24, 1929, by being struck by an automobile operated by an employee of the United States Government, to wit, an employee of the United States Veterans' Bureau.

With the following committee amendments:

In line 6, strike out the figures "$5,000" and insert the figures and words "$3,500, in full settlement of all claims against the United States."

Strike out all of line 8.

At the end of the bill add:

": Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BROOKER T. WILKINS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6177, for the relief of Brooker T. Wilkins.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $1,500 to Brooker T. Wilkins for injuries received as the result of a bullet fired from the rifle range at Fort McPherson, Ga., on February 15, 1926.

With the following committee amendments:

In line 4, strike out the word "funds" and insert the word "money."

In line 6, strike out the figures "$1,500" and insert the figures "$750."

At the end of the bill, add: ": Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MRS. CLARENCE J. M'CLARY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6825, for the relief of Mrs. Clarence J. McClary.

There being no objection the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. Clarence J. McClary, of Alexandria, Va., the sum of $10,000. Such sum shall be in full settlement of all claims against the United States on account of the death of Clarence J. McClary, the husband of the said Mrs. Clarence J. McClary, who, at the request of the officers of the Federal Government, accompanied them and assisted in the apprehension and arrest of one Tom Quesenberry, and the said Clarence J. McClary was slain in Loudoun County, Va., March 17, 1935, by the said Tom Quesenberry.

With the following committee amendments:

In line 6, strike out the figures "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures and words "$75 per month in an amount not to exceed $10,000."

At the end of the bill add:

"Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

VITO VALENTINO

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 314, for the relief of Vito Valentino.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Vito Valentino, of Providence, R. I., the sum of $50, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for damages for injury done to a stone wall owned by said Vito Valentino at 1171 Douglas Avenue, North Providence, R. I., when a United States mail truck ran into such wall on or about March 29, 1934.

With the following committee amendment:

At the end of the bill, add: ": Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

C. O. MEYER

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 537, for the relief of C. O. Meyer.

Mr. McFARLANE and Mr. COSTELLO objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

RUTH J. BARNES

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 920, for the relief of Ruth J. Barnes.

Mr. TRUAX and Mr. McFARLANE objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

MAJ. E. P. DUVAL

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 674, authorizing the President to order Maj. E. P. Duval before a retiring board for a hearing of his case, and upon the findings of such board determine whether or not he be placed on the retired list with the rank and pay held by him at the time of his resignation.

Mr. McFARLANE and Mr. TRUAX objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitteed to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DR. ERNEST B. DUNLAP

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6602, for the relief of Dr. Ernest B. Dunlap.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Dr. Ernest B. Dunlap, the sum of $2,806. Such sum shall be in full payment of the claim of the said Dunlap against the United States on account of professional services rendered by him between May 2, 1926, and June 30, 1930, inclusive, at the Kiowa Indian Hospital upon verbal authorization of the Superintendent of the Kiowa Indian Agency. Payment for such services was not made because sufficient individual Indian moneys have not been available for such purpose.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Dr. Ernest B. Dunlap, of Lawton, Okla., the sum of $2,806 in full settlement of his claim for professional services rendered by him to Indians between May 2, 1926, and June 30, 1930, inclusive, at the Kiowa Indian Hospital, Oklahoma, upon verbal authorization of the Superintendent of the Kiowa Indian Agency."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HEIRS OF JAMES TAYLOR

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7037, to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the heirs of James Taylor, deceased Cherokee Indian, for the value of certain lands now held by the United States, and for other purposes.

By unanimous consent, a similar Senate bill (S. 2306) was substituted for the House bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims, both legal and equitable, notwithstanding any statutes of limitations, to hear, determine, and render final judgment upon the claim of the heirs of James Taylor, a deceased Cherokee Indian, named in his last will and testament dated the 7th day of October 1905 (codicil dated Jan. 7, 1907), as recorded in the office of the clerk of the Superior Court of Cherokee County, State of North Carolina, in Book of Wills, page 139 and the following, against the United States for the value of certain lands including the value of all timber and other property taken therefrom and appropriated to the use and benefit of the United States since the 15th day of March 1869, and for the value of the use of such lands and other property by the United States since said date, March 15, 1869, and for attorney's fees. The lands referred to are in the State of North Carolina, and were the subject matter in Congressional Case No. 1344, James Taylor v. The United States (H. Doc. 187, 64th Cong., 1st sess.), described in a letter to the Secretary of the Interior dated May 5, 1933, signed by H. A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture (S. Rep. No. 875, 73d Cong., 2d sess., p. 6), and are now under administration by the United States as a part of the Nantahala National Forest.

SEC. 2. The Court of Claims shall consider the findings of fact reported to the House of Representatives, as found by said court in Congressional Case No. 1344, James Taylor v. The United States (H. Doc. 187, 64th Cong., 1st sess.), as evidence in any suit filed and prosecuted hereunder; but additional evidence and testimony may be submitted by the claimant heirs or by the United States. Records, deeds, correspondence, or other papers recorded or on file in any Department of the United States Government or of the State of North Carolina, or certified copies thereof, may be used as evidence; and the departments of the Government shall give access to any permit inspection of any such records, deeds, correspondence, or other papers, by the claimant heirs of James Taylor or by their attorney in the preparation and prosecution of any suit filed under the authority of this act. It is the intention of this act that the said claim of the heirs of James Taylor against the United States shall be heard and finally determined on its merits and on the basis of justice and equity to both parties, and the Court of Claims is hereby authorized and directed to exercise unrestricted discretion to that end.

SEC. 3. Any suit filed hereunder shall make the heirs of James Taylor party plaintiff and the United States party defendant, and the petition shall be verified by one of the heirs named in the will mentioned in section 1 of this act, or by the attorney representing said heirs, or representing one of them for and on behalf of all of them, and no other verification shall be necessary.

Petition hereunder shall be filed within 1 year from the date of approval of this act with right of amendment at any time before final judgment. The case shall be advanced on the court's docket for hearing; and the court shall have full authority by proper orders and process to bring in and make parties to such suit any or all persons or corporations deemed by it necessary or proper to the final determination of all questions and matters involved.

SEC. 4. Upon the final determination of any suit filed hereunder the Court of Claims is authorized to allow attorney's fees in an amount not to exceed 10 percent on the total amount of the judgment which may be rendered in favor of plaintiff, if any, to be paid by the United States in addition thereto, and the same shall be made a part of the court's decree.

SEC. 5. In the event judgment shall be rendered in favor of the plaintiff heirs of James Taylor, and when the money shall have been appropriated to pay the same, it shall be paid to the said heirs, respectively, or to their respective legal representatives, or to the duly appointed and then acting administrator or executor of the estate of James Taylor, deceased, such payment to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, however, That before making such payment the Secretary of the Treasury shall have delivered to him by the said heirs, or by a duly appointed and acting administrator or executor of the estate of James Taylor, deceased, a conveyance to the United States of all the right, title, and interest of said heirs in and to the lands referred to in this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 7037) was laid on the table.

WILLIAM P. BRADY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 417, for the relief of William P. Brady.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

There being no further objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers William P. Brady, who was a member of Company —, Eleventh Regiment United States Volunteer Signal Corps, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a corporal of that organization on the 25th day of February 1899: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MARGARET G. BALDWIN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7340, for the relief of Margaret G. Baldwin.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a similar Senate bill (S. 2371) will be substituted for the House bill.

There being no objection the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Margaret G. Baldwin, widow of Frederick W. Baldwin, late consul, Habana, Cuba, the sum of $3,500, being 1 year's salary of her deceased husband, who died while in the Foreign Service; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated a sufficient sum to carry out the purposes of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 7340) was laid on the table.

IRENE DE BRUYN ROBBINS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7561, for the relief of Irene de Bruyn Robbins.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill (S. 2597) may be substituted for the House bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Irene de Bruyn Robbins, widow of Warren Delano Robbins, late American Minister to Canada, the sum of $10,000, equal to 1 year's salary of her deceased husband.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 7561) was laid on the table.

ELSIE SEGAR

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2218, for the relief of Elsie Segar.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Elsie Segar, administratrix of C. M. A. Sorensen, the sum of $1,200 for loss on September 1, 1924, of a boathouse, engine parts, tools, electric fittings, marine supplies, and clothing belonging to C. M. A. Sorensen, at Bayou St. John, city of New Orleans, La., while said boathouse was being used by and in the sole occupancy of Government prohibition agents, pursuant to rental privileges granted by C. M. A. Sorensen to prohibition agents of the United States Government, at New Orleans, La.; and to Holger E. Sorensen, the son of C. M. A. Sorensen, the sum of $800 for loss to Holger E. Sorensen of personal property and belongings in the said boathouse at the time of said boathouse destruction: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 9, after the word "appropriated", insert "and in full settlement of all claims against the United States."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NAVAL CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTS

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I do not particularly believe in post mortems, but I feel that one is in order on the Navy bill that passed this House on Wednesday of this week. I refer to H. R. 5730, to amend section 3 (b) of an act entitled "An act to establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties; to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels; and for other purposes", approved March 27, 1934.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, contains three provisions. The first one exempted bonding companies from responsibility for the payment of profits in excess of 10 percent on contracts awarded by the Government to naval construction companies. The second was a little more involved. When the Vinson Navy bill was passed the Tobey amendment limiting profit on any contract to 10 percent was added to the bill. The amendment that carried Wednesday allows profits and losses to be determined over the period of 1 taxable year. If there is a net profit to the company over 10 percent during the year, with excess profit, it goes back to the Government. If there is a net loss to the contractor, he will be allowed to offset that loss against his profits, if any, of next year.

The third provision is the most vicious of the three. It exempts entirely from the operation of the Tobey amendment the manufacturers of scientific apparatus used on naval vessels and airplanes.

The House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill. According to the rules, 2 hours of general debate were permitted. All debate was confined to the subject matter of the bill and the time should have been equally divided between those for and against the bill.

Actually control of the time was placed in the hands of Chairman VINSON, who favored the bill, and in the hands of the ranking minority member, DARROW, who was even more in favor of it. Seventy-one minutes were consumed by those favoring the bill. The opposition received 49 minutes, 9 minutes in addition to what had been granted, because Mr. DARROW, the last speaker did not grant it to anyone else. Mr. MCFARLANE demanded recognition and received it from the Chairman [Mr. WILCOX].

During the course of the debate considerable information was brought out for the information of the Members present. I think that most of those on the floor at the time paid close attention to what was being said and were in a position to vote intelligently on the bill at final passage. It is on this feature that I wish to conduct this post mortem.

I send a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to the various high school and junior college libraries in my district. These RECORDS are used by pupils and students alike in the study of political science, history, economics, and sociology. In addition to these groups, there are various other organizations in my district that use the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as source material in their discussion of political science.

For their edification and guidance I want to give them a short lesson in the mechanics of government. The textbooks very often speak of the theory of legislative procedure but omit actual practice.

After the bill had been discussed for 2 hours in the Committee of the Whole House, Mr. MCFARLANE, of Texas, offered a preferential amendment to strike out the enacting clause. Had this motion carried, the bill would have been killed. The question was taken, and on a vive voce vote the amendment carried. On a division, demanded by Mr. VINSON of Georgia, there were—ayes 56, noes 71. Mr. MCFARLANE demanded tellers. The Committee again divided and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 66, noes 76; so the motion was rejected. Let me call attention here to the fact that here are 435 Members of the House, but on the first vote 127 were present and voted. Let me also call attention to the fact that in the Committee 100 constitutes a quorum. When the division was ordered 15 Members had been brought in from some place and 142 votes were cast. It is a very unusual event when there are more than 100 Members present listening to debate in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Some place on the hill were 300 other Members. These 300 Members had not listened to the discussion of the bill and, as far as an intelligent vote is concerned, were not qualified to cast their votes on this bill.

When Mr. MCFARLANE's amendment was rejected the committee amendment was put and agreed to without division or tellers. The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union then arose and reported the bill with the committee amendment to the House with the recommendation that the bill as amended do pass. Mr. VINSON moved the previous question, which would automatically close debate on the amendment; the previous question was ordered; the amendment was agreed to; the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read a third time.

Mr. MCFARLANE then moved to recommit the bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs. Had this motion prevailed the bill would have been dead for the present and would have been sent back to the Naval Affairs Committee for further consideration. Mr. VINSON moved the previous question on the motion to recommit. This motion made it impossible to explain the bill to the House. The previous question was ordered and on a division demanded by Mr. MARCANTONIO and Mr. MCFARLANE, there were ayes 59 and noes 88. From some place 8 more Members arrived and voted. In the House 218 are necessary to constitute a quorum. No business can be transacted except in the presence of a quorum. One hundred and forty-seven having voted on the motion to recommit, Mr. MARCANTONIO objected to the vote on the ground that a quorum was not present. This forced an automatic roll call. Again it was impossible to explain the bill. On the roll call there were ayes 130, noes 208. That meant that 191 Members who had not been present at all during the discussion of the bill, came in and cast their votes on this measure. It meant that 211 who were not present on the initial motion to strike out the enacting clause, voted on the bill at final passage. At no time, because of the rules of the House, was it possible to explain the effect of the bill to Members who had been absent during debate.

When a roll call such as the one described above takes place in the House, the Sergeant at Arms rings a bell. That is a signal for all absent Members to rush to the floor to cast their votes. They are met at the door by the Doorkeeper who simply says, "The vote is on a motion to recommit." Now a motion to recommit is generally opposed by the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill. The common practice on the part of these absentees is to vote with the chairman. Therefore, when the Doorkeeper says "The vote is on a motion to recommit", these absentee Members usually vote "no" without ever finding out what the bill is about. It is only fair to state here that there are a few notable exceptions to this rule.

In addition to the Doorkeeper, friends and foes of the bill alike station themselves at the door in an attempt to win those absentees to their side of the argument. The most weighty argument that can be made is "vote no and sustain the committee."

I happened to be standing in the hall when the roll call was being made. A Member of this House, in whom I had formerly had considerable confidence, walked up to the Doorkeeper and the following conversation took place:

The MEMBER. Now that I have voted on this bill, would you mind telling me what the bill provided for?

The DOORKEEPER. Oh, I don't know; it was some Navy bill.

The MEMBER. Oh, well, I don't know anything about the Navy anyhow, so I voted with the committee.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, that I may be doing an unorthodox thing to tell this story. I do it for two reasons. In the first place, I have seen this thing happen so many times and it has made my blood boil every time it does. When a bill as important as this one comes before the House, I do not feel that it is right for Members to vote on it without even knowing what the bill provides for. It is not fair to the country, it is not fair to the people they represent. In this case it is not fair to the taxpayers who are going to suffer. I realize that Members are busy. I am. But when an important bill like this comes on the floor, I think they should learn as much as possible about the bill before they attempt to vote.

In the second place, having been a school teacher for 10 years, I suppose that I just could not pass up the chance to instruct the thousands of people who use this RECORD as a textbook on the practical side of legislative procedure.

TAMPA MARINE CO.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar 364, the bill (S. 1860) for the relief of the Tampa Marine Co.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Tampa Marine Co., a corporation, of Tampa, Fla., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,130, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for a penalty imposed upon said company in connection with a contract made between said company and the Government, dated August 15, 1928, for certain work and repairs on the U. S. lightship tender Ivy: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ALBERT D. CASTLEBERRY

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar 337, the bill (H. R. 1583) for the relief of Albert D. Castleberry.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Albert D. Castleberry, who was a member of Company I, Forty-fourth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, Philippine Insurrection, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of that organization on the 20th day of May 1901: Provided, That no bounty, back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. OLIVER (at the request of Mr. HILL of Alabama), on account of illness.

To Mr. STEGALL (at the request of Mr. HILL of Alabama), on account of illness in family.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 1578. An act for the relief of Beryl M. McHam; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 2073. An act to provide for the preservation of historic American sites, buildings, objects, and antiquities of national significance, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 2074. An act to create a National Park Trust Fund Board, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 2756. An act authorizing the Tlingit and Haida Indians of Alaska to bring suit in the United States Court of Claims, and conferring jurisdiction upon said court to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment upon any and all claims which said Indians may have, or claim to have, against the United States, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 6836. An act to provide for the printing and distribution of Government publications to The National Archives.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolutions of the Senate of the following titles:

S. J. Res. 112. Joint resolution extending the effective period of the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act, 1933; and

S. J. Res. 113. Joint resolution to extend until April 1, 1936, certain provisions of title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Saturday, June 15, 1935, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS

(Saturday, June 15, 10:30 a. m.)

Committee will hold hearings for consideration of various bills.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

385. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to provide relief for and to adjust certain accounts of John L. Summers, former disbursing clerk, Treasury Department, and Frank White, G. F. Allen, H. T. Tate, and W. O. Woods, former Treasurers of the United States; to the Committee on Claims.

386. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting draft of a proposed bill authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept gifts and bequests for the benefit of the Office of Naval Records and Library, Navy Department; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII.

Mr. SCHAEFER: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 4332. A bill to provide for the commemoration of the Battle of Blackstock; with amendment (Rept. No. 1220). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SCHAEFER: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 4331. A bill to provide for the commemoration of the Battle of Musgrove's Mill; with amendment (Rept. No. 1221). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MERRITT of New York: Committee on Military Affairs. S. 634. An act to authorize the sale of a portion of the Fort Smith National Cemetery Reservation, Ark., and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 1222). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana: Committee on Flood Control. H. R. 8455. A bill authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 1223). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LAMBETH: Committee on Printing. H. R. 8473. A bill to provide for the compiling and publishing of the Official Register of the United States; without amendment (Rept. No. 1226). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DOUGHTON: Committee on Ways and Means. House Joint Resolution 324. Joint resolution to provide revenue, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 1227). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SCHAEFER: Committee on Military Affairs. S. 363. An act to increase the efficiency of the Veterinary Corps of the Regular Army; without amendment (Rept. No. 1229). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. THOMASON: Committee on Military Affairs. S. 2326. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to sell to the Eagle Pass & Piedras Negras Bridge Co. a portion of the Eagle Pass Military Reservation, Tex., and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 1230). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SCHAEFER: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 4309. A bill to provide for the commemoration of the Battle of Big Dry Wash, in the State of Arizona; with amendment (Rept. No. 1232). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DIETRICH: Committee on the Territories. H. R. 7882. A bill to authorize the incorporated city of Anchorage, Alaska, to construct a municipal building and purchase and install a modern telephone exchange, and for such purposes to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $75,000; and to authorize said city to accept grants of money to aid it in financing any public works; without amendment (Rept. No. 1233). Referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. RYAN: Committee on Claims. H. R. 2935. A bill for the relief of A. N. Ross; without amendment (Rept. No. 1201). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SOUTH: Committee on Claims. H. R. 3839. A bill for the relief of Rene Hooge; with amendment (Rept. No. 1202). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. GWYNNE: Committee on Claims. H. R. 3913. A bill for the relief of Edith M. Powell; with amendment (Rept. No. 1203). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SOUTH: Committee on Claims. H. R. 4570. A bill for the relief of Amy McLaurin; with amendment (Rept. No. 1204). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SOUTH: Committee on Claims. H. R. 5415. A bill to confer jurisdiction on the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of North Carolina, to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of the Pamlico Timber Corporation against the United States; with amendment (Rept. No. 1205). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SMITH of Washington: Committee on Claims. H. R. 5523. A bill for the relief of A. H. Sphar; with amendment (Rept. No. 1206). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. DALY: Committee on Claims. H. R. 5654. A bill to authorize the Court of Claims of the United States to hear and determine the claim of Samuel W. Carter; without amendment (Rept. No. 1207). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. RYAN: Committee on Claims. H. R. 5811. A bill for the relief of Michael A. McHugh; with amendment (Rept. No. 1208). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN: Committee on Claims. H. R. 5870. A bill for the relief of K. S. Szymanski; without amendment (Rept. No. 1209). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. CARLSON: Committee on Claims. H. R. 6267. A bill for the relief of Wint Rowland; with amendment (Rept. No. 1210). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. CARLSON: Committee on Claims. H. R. 6268. A bill for the relief of W. C. Wright; with amendment (Rept. No. 1211). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. CARLSON: Committee on Claims. H. R. 6269. A bill for the relief of W. H. Keyes; with amendment (Rept. No. 1212). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. PITTENGER: Committee on Claims. H. R. 6944. A bill for the relief of Maj. Thomas J. Berry; with amendment (Rept. No. 1213). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SMITH of Washington: Committee on Claims. H. R. 7076. A bill for the relief of the heirs of John Schrodl; with amendment (Rept. No. 1214). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. DALY: Committee on Claims. H. R. 7093. A bill for the relief of Joseph M. Clagett, Sr.; with amendment (Rept. No. 1215). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. DALY: Committee on Claims. H. R. 7140. A bill for the relief of the Bell Oil & Gas Co.; with amendment (Rept. No. 1216). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. RYAN: Committee on Claims. H. R. 996. A bill for the relief of Joe Reno; with amendment (Rept. No. 1217). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. HOUSTON: Committee on Claims. H. R. 1871. A bill for the relief of the Medical College of Virginia, and others, of Richmond, Va.; with amendment (Rept. No. 1218). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. EVANS: Committee on Claims. H. R. 2148. A bill to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of the Italian Star Line, Inc., against the United States; with amendment (Rept. No. 1219). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. PLUMLEY: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 5558. A bill for the relief of Clarence F. Jobson; without amendment (Rept. No. 1224). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mrs. O'DAY: Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. S. 447. An act conferring jurisdiction on the United States District Court for the District of Oregon to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the suit in equity of Rakha Singh Gherwal against the United States; without amendment (Rept. No. 1225). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 1371. A bill to provide for the retirement of Maude L. Dally (Petty), disabled former Army nurse; without amendment (Rept. No. 1231). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

ADVERSE REPORTS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. VINSON of Georgia: Committee on Naval Affairs. House Resolution 247. Resolution directing the Secretary of the Navy to transmit to the House of Representatives information concerning activities of Real Admiral Yates Stirling, Jr., of the United States Navy. (Rept. No. 1228.) Ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES: A bill (H. R. 8492) to amend the Agriculture Adjustment Act, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. CELLER: A bill (H. R. 8493) to restore the 2-cent rate of postage on first-class mail matter; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ANDREWS of New York: A bill (H. R. 8494) to release veterans from the liability to pay interest on loans secured by adjusted-service certificates, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BUCK: A bill (H. R. 8495) to amend certain plant-quarantine laws; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. GEARHART: A bill (H. R. 8496) to repatriate native-born women who have heretofore lost their citizenship by marriage to an alien, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 8497) to amend section 584 of title 20 of the Code of the District of Columbia relative to retirement allowance for total disability, age retirement, and pensions to widows and orphans of retired members of the police and fire departments of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. KRAMER: A bill (H. R. 8498) to provide that pensioners advocating the overthrow of the Government by force or other unlawful means shall forfeit rights to pension; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

By Mr. LORD: A bill (H. R. 8499) to require statistics with respect to salaries, bonuses, and wages paid by certain persons subject to the provisions of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mrs. NORTON: A bill (H. R. 8500) to provide for the erection of a building to be used exclusively for the recorder of deeds; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. KELLER: Resolution (H. Res. 259) amending clause 41 of rule X of the House of Representatives; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. DUNCAN: Resolution (H. Res. 260) providing for an investigation of the liquor industry; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. DOUGHTON: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 324) to provide revenue, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BRUNNER: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 325) making June 14, commonly known as "Flag Day", a legal national holiday; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CARTER: A bill (H. R. 8501) granting a pension to Clara A. Arbogast; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CHRISTIANSON: A bill (H. R. 8502) for the relief of Theresa Link, Wencel Link, Edward Block, and John Meyers; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KELLER: A bill (H. R. 8503) for the relief of the estate of the late Mary E. Stebbins; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KINZER: A bill (H. R. 8504) for the relief of Jessie Alonzo Dillon; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. McLAUGHLIN: A bill (H. R. 8505) directing the Court of Claims to reopen the case of John W. Parish, trustee (John H. Baxten, substituted), against the United States (no. 34,450), and to correct the errors therein, if any, by an additional judgment against the United States; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PETERSON of Florida: A bill (H. R. 8506) for the relief of Oliver Faulkner; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PEYSER: A bill (H. R. 8507) granting a pension to Catherine O'Hare; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma (by departmental request): A bill (H. R. 8508) for the relief of Constantin Gilia; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also (by departmental request), a bill (H. R. 8509) for the relief of C. R. Whitlock; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. TARVER: A bill (H. R. 8510) for the relief of John Hurston; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

8837. By Mr. BLAND: Petition of 34 citizens of Northampton County, Va., requesting relief from the Federal gasoline tax and requesting that Congress allow the Federal gasoline tax to expire on June 30, 1935, never to be levied again; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

8838. By Mr. DRISCOLL: Petition of C. J. Meyers, of Sharon, Pa., and members of the Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks and others, advocating passage of House Joint Resolution 219; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

8839. By Mr. FORD of California: Resolution of the Board of Supervisors of Los Angeles County, memorializing the President of the United States to make ample provision in the Federal works plan for the employment of "white collar" workers; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

8840. Also, resolution of the Ocean Park-Santa Monica Business Men's Association, the Public Affairs Association of Santa Monica Bay District, and the Women's University Club of Los Angeles, urging Congress to enact House bill 5359, for the creation of a national civil academy to train qualified young men and women for public service; to the Committee on Education.

8841. By Mr. GOODWIN: Resolution unanimously adopted by the Navy Post, No. 16, of the American Legion, New York, N. Y., providing that the team representing the United States at the Olympic Games in Germany in 1936 should travel to and from those games in ships of United States registry, manned by American officers and crews, etc.; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

8842. By Mr. HART: Petition of the New Jersey Taxpayers Association, insisting that the Federal Congress in appropriating funds for either State aid or unemployment relief or Federal grants shall desist from efforts to induce increased expenditures for any purpose by the respective State legislatures or municipalities; and that in the distribution of Federal funds and in the allotment to the several States, due consideration be given to the contribution of such States to the Federal Treasury; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

8843. By Mr. HILDEBRANDT: Petition of the Board of County Commissioners of Bennett County, S. Dak., to prevent the establishing and construction of Federal game refuge along Lacreek, closing the same to the general public; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

8844. By Mr. MEAD: Petition of the Manufacturing Chemists' Association of the United States, requesting that Congress delete the provisions of title II of the pending banking bill; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

8845. Also, petition of the Manufacturing Chemists' Association of the United States, requesting that Congress oppose the enactment of the Wagner labor-relations bill; to the Committee on Labor.

8846. By Mr. MERRITT of New York: Petition of the Brotherhood of Railway and Steamship Clerks, Utica Lodge, No. 116, Utica, N. Y., urging Congress to extend the Emergency Transportation Act for 1 year; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

8847. Also, resolution of the general committee of immigrant aid at Ellis Island and New York Harbor, urging Congress to speedily enact into law House bill 8163, designed to authorize the deportation of habitual criminals, to guard against the separation from their families of aliens of the noncriminal class, to provide for legalizing the residence in the United States of a certain class of aliens, etc.; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

8848. By Mr. PFEIFER: Petition of John F. Green, of Glendale, with reference to the excise tax on cosmetics; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

8849. By Mr. RUDD: Petition of 25 citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring the Higgins of Massachusetts-Borah resolutions, concerning the Mexican situation; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

8850. By Mr. TRUAX: Petition of W. F. Grimm and numerous others of Akron, Ohio, urging support of House Joint Resolution 219, which provides for extension of the Emergency Railway Labor Act, which automatically expires June 16, 1935; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

8851. Also, petition of Hardrubber Workers' Local Union No. 18395, Akron, Ohio, by their secretary, Paul Langbein, urging support of the Wagner labor-disputes bill; to the Committee on Labor.

8852. Also, petition of Local Union No. 156, United Association of Journeymen Plumbers and Steam Fitters, Akron, Ohio, by their recording secretary, Leo H. Samples, urging support of the Wagner-Connery labor-disputes bill; to the Committee on Labor.

8853. Also, petition of the New York Progressive Club, New York City, by their secretary, Herman H. Heinzer, urging support of the Wagner labor-disputes bill; to the Committee on Labor.

8854. Also, petition of National Inventors Congress, Hotel Sherman, Chicago, Ill., by their president, Albert G. Burns, urging passage of legislation establishing an inventors' loan fund, as there has been a heavy accumulation of inventions that have not been given to the world because their creators have not been financially able to have them patented; to the Committee on Patents.

8855. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the County of Los Angeles Board of Supervisors; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

8856. Also, petition of the Manufacturing Chemists' Association; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

8857. Also, petition of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers, Division No. 37; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE

SATURDAY, JUNE 15, 1935

(Legislative day of Monday, May 13, 1935)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar days Wednesday, June 12, and Friday, June 14, 1935, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. CAP R. CARDEN, late a Representative from the State of Kentucky, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The message also announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the following bills of the Senate:

S. 43. An act for the relief of Lucile A. Abbey;

S. 144. An act for the relief of Austin L. Tierney;

S. 148. An act for the relief of the estate of Donnie Wright;

S. 391. An act for the relief of Ralph E. Woolley;

S. 546. An act for the relief of Miles Thomas Barrett;

S. 694. An act for the payment of the claims of the Fidelity Trust Co. of Baltimore, Md., and others;

S. 799. An act for the relief of Yvonne Hale;

S. 885. An act to correct the naval record of Joseph Horace Albion Normandin;

S. 1051. An act for the relief of the Western Union Telegraph Co.;

S. 1363. An act for the relief of John A. Jumer;

S. 1392. An act conferring upon the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, Southern Division, jurisdiction of the claim of Minnie C. de Back against the Alaska Railroad;

S. 1410. An act for the relief of Thomas G. Carlin;

S. 1656. An act for the relief of Ward J. Lawton;

S. 1809. An act for the relief of Germaine M. Finley;

S. 1860. An act for the relief of the Tampa Marine Co.;

S. 2306. An act to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the heirs of James Taylor, deceased Cherokee Indian, for the value of certain lands now held by the United States, and for other purposes;

S. 2371. An act for the relief of Margaret G. Baldwin; and

S. 2597. An act for the relief of Irene de Bruyn Robbins.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate, severally with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 314. An act for the relief of Vito Valentino;

S. 547. An act for the relief of Alfred W. Kliefoth;

S. 1052. An act for the relief of the Washington Post Co.;

S. 1325. An act for the relief of Dino Carbonell;

S. 1863. An act for the relief of Trifune Korac;

S. 2218. An act for the relief of Elsie Segar; and

S. 2333. An act for the relief of John W. Dady.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1585) for the relief of Stefano Talanco and Edith Talanco, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 351. An act for the relief of Jane B. Smith and Dora D. Smith;

H. R. 417. An act for the relief of William P. Brady;

H. R. 670. An act conferring jurisdiction in the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of George B. Gates;

H. R. 1470. An act for the relief of Carl A. Butler;

H. R. 1540. An act for the relief of Lester I. Conrad;

H. R. 1583. An act for the relief of Albert D. Castleberry;

H. R. 1714. An act for the relief of Russell H. Lindsay;

H. R. 2118. An act for the relief of John P. Seabrook;

H. R. 2130. An act for the relief of John M. McNulty;

H. R. 2325. An act for the relief of James P. Whalen;

H. R. 2555. An act to extend to Sgt. Maj. Edmund S. Sayer, United States Marine Corps (retired), the benefits of the act of May 7, 1932, providing highest World War rank to retired enlisted men;

H. R. 2611. An act for the relief of John E. Fondahl;

H. R. 2730. An act for the relief of Thomas Harris McLaughlin;

H. R. 3149. An act to confer jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas, Corpus Christi Division, to determine the claim of Mrs. L. B. Gentry;

H. R. 3574. An act for the relief of Nellie T. Francis;

H. R. 3604. An act to place William H. Clinton on the retired list of the Navy;

H. R. 3760. An act for the relief of Capt. Arthur L. Bristol, United States Navy;

H. R. 4226. An act for the relief of Floyd Hull;

H. R. 4259. An act for the relief of George R. Slate;

H. R. 4274. An act correcting date of enlistment of Elza Bennett in the United States Navy;

H. R. 4368. An act for the relief of E. C. West;

H. R. 4406. An act for the relief of Anna Farruggia;

H. R. 4623. An act for the relief of George Brackett Cargill, deceased;

H. R. 4850. An act to authorize the settlement of individual claims of military personnel for damages to and loss of private property incident to the training, practice, operation, or maintenance of the Army;

H. R. 4860. An act for the relief of Judson Stokes;

H. R. 4974. An act for the relief of Rabbi Isaac Levine;

H. R. 5393. An act for the relief of Moses Israel;

H. R. 5521. An act for the relief of Frank Williams;

H. R. 5971. An act for the relief of Charles Pine;

H. R. 6177. An act for the relief of Brooker T. Wilkins;

H. R. 6549. An act for the relief of Horton & Horton;

H. R. 6602. An act for the relief of Dr. Ernest B. Dunlap;

H. R. 6825. An act for the relief of Mrs. Clarence J. McClary; and

H. R. 7254. An act for the relief of Lily M. Miller.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. LEWIS. I note the absence of a quorum and ask for a roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Coolidge	La Follette	Radcliffe
Ashurst	Copeland	Lewis	Reynolds
Austin	Costigan	Lonergan	Robinson
Bachman	Couzens	Long	Russell
Bailey	Davis	McAdoo	Schall
Bankhead	Dickinson	McCarran	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Donahey	McGill	Sheppard
Black	Duffy	McKellar	Shipstead
Bone	Fletcher	McNary	Smith
Borah	Frazier	Maloney	Steiwer
Brown	George	Minton	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	Gerry	Moore	Trammell
Bulow	Gibson	Murphy	Vandenberg
Burke	Gore	Murray	Van Nuys
Byrd	Hale	Neely	Wagner
Byrnes	Harrison	Norbeck	Walsh
Capper	Hastings	Norris	Wheeler
Caraway	Hatch	O'Mahoney	White
Chavez	Hayden	Overton
Clark	Johnson	Pittman
Connally	King	Pope

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of my colleague the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], who are necessarily detained from the Senate; the absence of the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] who is detained because of important public business, and the absence of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] because of illness in his family.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BLACK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 298) for the relief of Jack Page, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 890) thereon.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2175) to grant to the State of California a retrocession of jurisdiction over certain rights-of-way granted to the State of California over certain roads about to be constructed in the Presidio of San Francisco Military Reservation and Fort Baker Military Reservation, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 891) thereon.

Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 17) providing for the disposition of certain obsolete Government publications stored in the folding rooms of Congress, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 892) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 3059) to authorize the acquisition of land on McNeil Island; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HARRISON:

A bill (S. 3060) to amend section 6 of title I of the act entitled "An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government", approved March 20, 1933; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. RUSSELL:

A bill (S. 3061) for the relief of John R. Allgood; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3062) authorizing the appointment of George L. Brittingham as a second lieutenant of Cavalry, United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ADAMS:

A bill (S. 3063) granting a pension to Fred B. Johnson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MOORE and Mr. BARBOUR:

A bill (S. 3064) to authorize the Commissioner of Education in the Department of the Interior to conduct a study and disseminate his findings and recommendations regarding suitable aviation instruction courses for the public schools, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 351. An act for the relief of Jane B. Smith and Dora D. Smith;

H. R. 670. An act conferring jurisdiction in the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of George B. Gates;

H. R. 1540. An act for the relief of Lester I. Conrad;

H. R. 2325. An act for the relief of James P. Whalen;

H. R. 2730. An act for the relief of Thomas Harris McLaughlin;

H. R. 3149. An act to confer jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Southern District of Texas, Corpus Christi Division, to determine the claim of Mrs. L. B. Gentry;

H. R. 4226. An act for the relief of Floyd Hull;

H. R. 4368. An act for the relief of E. C. West;

H. R. 4406. An act for the relief of Anna Farruggia;

H. R. 4850. An act to authorize the settlement of individual claims of military personnel for damages to and loss of private property incident to the training, practice, operation, or maintenance of the Army;

H. R. 4860. An act for the relief of Judson Stokes;

H. R. 4974. An act for the relief of Rabbi Isaac Levine;

H. R. 5393. An act for the relief of Moses Israel;

H. R. 5521. An act for the relief of Frank Williams;

H. R. 5971. An act for the relief of Charles Pine;

H. R. 6177. An act for the relief of Brooker T. Wilkins;

H. R. 6549. An act for the relief of Horton & Horton; and

H. R. 6825. An act for the relief of Mrs. Clarence J. McClary; to the Committee on Claims.

H. R. 417. An act for the relief of William P. Brady;

H. R. 1470. An act for the relief of Carl A. Butler;

H. R. 1583. An act for the relief of Albert D. Castleberry; and

H. R. 4259. An act for the relief of George R. Slate; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

H. R. 1714. An act for the relief of Russell H. Lindsay;

H. R. 2118. An act for the relief of John P. Seabrook;

H. R. 2130. An act for the relief of John M. McNulty;

H. R. 2555. An act to extend to Sgt. Maj. Edmund S. Sayer, United States Marine Corps (retired), the benefits of the act of May 7, 1932, providing highest World War rank to retired enlisted men;

H. R. 2611. An act for the relief of John E. Fondahl;

H. R. 3604. An act to place William H. Clinton on the retired list of the Navy;

H. R. 3760. An act for the relief of Capt. Arthur L. Bristol, United States Navy;

H. R. 4274. An act correcting date of enlistment of Elza Bennett in the United States Navy; and

H. R. 4623. An act for the relief of George Brackett Cargill, deceased; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

H. R. 3574. An act for the relief of Nellie T. Francis; and

H. R. 7254. An act for the relief of Lily M. Miller; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

H. R. 6602. An act for the relief of Dr. Ernest B. Dunlap; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO SOCIAL-SECURITY BILL

Mr. VANDENBERG submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7260, the so-called "Social Security Act", which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

APPOINTMENT AND CONFIRMATION OF CERTAIN FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I offer a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. I do not think it will take any time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 152) was read as follows:

Resolved, That the Comptroller General is hereby directed to submit to the Senate a report showing the names, residence, and annual rate of compensation of all persons who have been appointed or employed under any act of Congress who receive compensation at a rate of $4,000 or more per annum and indicating those who are required by existing law to be appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who have not been so confirmed and also those who are not required by existing law to be so confirmed; and further indicating in each case the date of the appointment or employment and under what act or by what authority such person was appointed or employed.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I wish to understand correctly just what the resolution provides. It calls on what agency of the Government?

Mr. GORE. The Comptroller General.

Mr. HARRISON. To give the names of all employees and officers who receive salaries of $4,000 or more?

Mr. GORE. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I shall have to ask that the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go over under the rule.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that on June 14, 1935, the President approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

S. 38. An act for the relief of Winifred Meagher;

S. 654. An act authorizing the exchange of the lands reserved for the Seminole Indians in Florida for other lands;

S. 1386. An act to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim, or claims, of Duke E. Stubbs and Elizabeth S. Stubbs, both of McKinley Park, Alaska;

S. 2146. An act for the relief of certain Indians of the Flathead Reservation killed or injured en route to dedication ceremonies of the Going-to-the-Sun Highway, Glacier National Park;

S. 2241. An act to authorize an appropriation to carry out the provisions of the act of May 3, 1928 (45 Stat. L. 484);

S. 2530. An act to protect American and Philippine labor and to preserve an essential industry, and for other purposes;

S. J. Res. 112. Joint resolution extending the effective period of the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act, 1933;

S. J. Res. 113. Joint resolution to extend until April 1, 1936, certain provisions of title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 130. Joint resolution making immediately available the appropriation for the fiscal year 1936 for the construction, repair, and maintenance of Indian-reservation roads.

SOCIAL SECURITY

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 7260) to provide for the general welfare by establishing a system of Federal old-age benefits, and by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for aged persons, dependent and crippled children, maternal and child welfare, public health, and the administration of their unemployment-compensation laws; to establish a Social Security Board; to raise revenue; and for other purposes.

THE NEED OF INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION TO REMOVE GRIEVANCES AGAINST NATIONS AND RESPECT RIGHTS OF NEUTRAL NATIONS

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I make bold to address the Senate for a few moments on a subject in connection with our status today in foreign complications. I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that here we have before us a bill which we have defined as the social-security bill. If this bill shall be passed it will require a very large sum of money to carry out the purposes of the measure.

Necessarily every step that can be rightfully taken to obtain the money by a just tax or collection of debts due our people should be entered upon by the Government. But, Mr. President, there are other matters to be taken in view which interfere or influence the right I demand and this is of a very serious import.

The Senate must behold the world and see the picture etched by the inflamed declarations of European statesmen. On day before yesterday the spokesman of the Government of Russia told a congregation of officials that war as he saw the situation seemed inevitable. He reiterated that "there are certain nations of Europe which have decreed conflict", and from the point of view of that spokesman, Litvinoff, it is but a matter of days when some outbreak may indicate the beginning of the hostilities.

At the same time, Mr. President, the great personality of Italy, Mussolini, demands the right to proceed along whatever course had been previously adopted as to Ethiopia, indifferent to what the committee of the League of Nations have suggested. The Italian duce expressed with great freedom his defiance of England, thus because the English statesmen had in public address beseeching peace deprecated the warlike utterance of the master of Italy.

Yesterday Germany informed us through her ministers there are four nations of Europe banded together to assail Germany. At the same moment Germany has a communication with Japan in which Germany refuses to deprecate, much less to condemn, the movement of Japan upon China. This is cited by Russia to prove a new rapprochement between Germany and Japan.

Without entering, sir, at all into the virtues of these impeachments, we deeply deplore the fact of their existence. The threats which are thus heralded are given to civilization to their fright. This fact is equally disturbing to America, when we are on the eve of passing a home security bill. It all, sirs, breaks upon us with very serious import. If these conflicts shall open as they now threaten, the United States in the very nature of things would desire and demand to avail itself of its general rights under the treaties with foreign countries—those I name particularly—treaties often cited during the war between ourselves and Germany and previous to our unhappily entering that conflict under which our trade privileges are defined and accorded. We have alluded to the treaty which first was made in the name of Prussia, and then the general treaty of the rights of trade on the part of any neutral nation, and particularly the treaties made with the United States. These in declarations authorize and affirm the privilege of the United States to deal in all commerce with countries in conflict—exempting contraband—that is, articles forbidden, such as munitions or ammunitions.

Mr. President, at that particular time there was something of a conceded definition of what was "neutral." To these treaties there was a further special treaty added, in which this honorable body but a short time ago made a slight amendment forbidding munitions to be sent to nations engaged in combat.

We admire England in the effort and here express our admiration that apparently she is doing what she can to avoid what she fears is surely a result just ahead—a conflict which involves both Asia and Europe. But, Senators, if against all effort to avoid the thing we fear shall come, the very first move on the part of the United States should be to avail herself of her privilege under her treaties to trade with whatever nation she chooses. It is now, Mr. President, I wish to impress upon you, and there is today no definition as to what is "neutral." I observe before me, complimenting me with his attention, the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. He, with others of his committee, has been industrious in the matter of properly guarding the movement of manufactured munitions and to define the relation of this land to such industry. There is now no law which defines specifically what is "munitions" within the meaning of the relations of warring countries, or that which is called "neutral."

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Did the United States accept the British verdict that cotton is a contraband of war?

Mr. LEWIS. I go further and say that one agreement is now of little point in the present unformed state of what is contraband. It is to that I am addressing myself specifically. I answer the Senator that it has been decided by the committee, which held an informal session at the League in Geneva deploring the possibility of conflict, that anything which affords aid to the conflicting forces or strengthens the power of the fighting forces of soldiers, becomes at once, under present construction, "munitions." Therefore, I say to my friend from Louisiana that I do not know how far, as to all nations, cotton is termed "contraband", or if England has so defined in the last announcement. I know it was regarded as an agency or supply of munitions by the nations engaged in the World War.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. As I understand the definition, it has now been extended to include anything which might be even nourishment not only to the people who are actually engaged in conflict, but the civilian population. It all might come under the definition of contraband.

Mr. LEWIS. I am compelled to answer my friend from Louisiana in this manner: Anything from bread to bullets, chemicals for nurses, that which strengthens the soldier in the conflict, is unhappily treated as munitions. Therefore I must come to the point that there is now no definition, and therefore America may sell to any country any commodity which can be promptly treated by one or both or all combatants as "munitions", that which strengthens a soldier in conflict, and thus affords and gives sustenance to a nation engaged in the combat.

Mr. President, it is for this reason I invite the attention of the Senate——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one more question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Therefore, any agency which might undertake to prevent the spreading of germs and disease among the countries engaged in war could be held to be munitions or contraband articles?

Mr. LEWIS. I would reply to say that since it is now indicated that there is developed a process by which germs and disease may be dropped down by way of aerial bombs to scatter upon cities, it could be easily charged that anything which would intercept it would be interpreted as a legitimate form of assault on the product of those who were guiding it.

My purpose of discussing for a moment, I wish to say, is the necessity for this honorable body and our civilization in America pausing a moment to consider the situation which surrounds us today and see if this is not an hour when the great security to which we allude in this bill should not be extended further, and if we should not also consider what would be security generally in this hour to ourselves. We should ask whether something should not be done that looks to defining somewhere, so far as America is concerned, what is "neutral", what are "munitions", that we might, if possible, escape being involved in an embroglio similar to that in which we were caught in the World War, and that for no other reason beyond furnishing supplies, these, it will be recalled, being shipped on the vessel called the Lusitania.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I ask for order around the Senate. We want to hear the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Those in the rear of the Chamber will kindly be in order.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I deplore to say that some day a very great calamity shall come upon the Senate. It will be reported to the world at large; it will be noted that Senators listened to some Senator making a speech! [Laughter.] I am warned by those around me that I need not fear such a prospect. There are those about me listening to my utterance who inform me I need not fear this horrible anticipation, that there is nothing in the present that justifies the fear of any such catastrophe in the future. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator form Louisiana?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I merely wish to say to the Senator from Illinois that he is the moving cause of that already happened calamity. He is opening a discussion that holds the attention of Senators.

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the genial Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. President, I move to a more serious phase. Have we not reached the point in government where we would blunder if we should wait until an embarrassment arises upon the Republic? Have we learned no lesson from what happened to us just preceding our entrance into the World War, when all the voices of authority were announcing that under no circumstances would we be in the war, when before we could understand it events transpired which suddenly thrust us in the conflict? We, having made no preparation to avoid nor indulged in guardianship anticipating it, were all at once enduring hardships and more than that a calamity and what subsequently transpired resulting in a curse and affliction upon this Republic.

Therefore, Mr. President, these words of mine are to this object: America must not cowardly dillydally, as has been intimated in many official sources, and the intimation coming from certain officials of my own Government. It is said that in the event of conflict of nations we are to make no effort to indulge in trade; that, to use the words of one of the spokesmen, we must stay home, lock our door, and make no effort to go outside taking our material to sell or urge upon any our interests in the war zone. That I deplore as a confession of cowardice and weakness against which I must protest.

I insist that America's right under the treaties to dispose of her goods to any country that has demand for them is her righteous privilege. It is for this reason the United States should provide now, or as early as she can, such steps and such ways and means as will enable her to enjoy her full trade, participate under the treaty as a neutral country, and, instead of withdrawing from an enjoyment of her rights, insist upon them.

I say, Mr. President, in order that she may insist upon them, there should be some step taken by which this, our Government, should know what is a neutral country within the meaning of these lands at peace. There should be one other step taken, to define what are munitions in the sense of these new amendments by that honorable body of peace negotiations spoken of as the committee of the League of Nations. These definitions are essential that we may know, sir, where there are limitations, if there are to be such to be put upon us, or where there are privileges, if there are those to be granted to us.

Mr. President, for that purpose I note that the President of the United States, in his speech before the graduating class in the Military Academy but a day or so ago, told the graduating class, and those in command, of his earnest desire that they may never participate in any conflict save that which shall be a necessary one; that every step should be taken that may anticipate these unhappy tragedies by something that prepares for peace, and assures it not only to our Government but to the world. Yet, sir, we are doing nothing to that object, and it is to that object I address these remarks; that the hour has come, first, when we must remove the grievances of any other country now held against the United States, particularly, sir, when they are not founded on any fact but largely either upon their imaginations or inherited as an aftermath of the World War.

There are two grievances now pending. We cannot close our eyes to the effect of what may follow. One of these is the debts still due to us; and on this morning we are informed by the international press that Poland has joined England and France and Italy in the announcement to the United States that they will not pay, because, as they say, they cannot. But Poland enters upon a field of more adjustment and what may be said to be more of justification. She says, since England refuses to pay, and Italy will not pay, and France defies this country to make her pay, why should Poland pay?—in which there is much merit upon the basis of what is called consistency. But that is a grievance of debtor nations to be greatly considered, sir, as existing.

The other is the proposed series of treaties called "trade treaties." There is just now before this body the proposition that if one nation shall have accorded to it a privilege in the form of a treaty of trade with the United States in the way of concessions, every other nation, without regard to how they treat this Government, either as a debtor to us or discriminating against us, may have the same privilege, and enter into no agreement in turn for any privilege whatever to us. This, Mr. President and Senators, as you recall, is under what is known as the "most-favored-nation clause." There are those, of whom I am one, who utterly oppose the theory, and feel that only those nations who treat us with justice are we under any obligation of comity to treat with favor. This controversy, sir, necessarily produces another form of grievance.

Now, sir, I take the liberty to suggest, to whatever course the suggestion may reach, that the time is upon us when something should be done to summon the representatives of the nations who claim to have grievances against us to state those grievances, and, either separately, in conference, or in any other manner, produce those grievances and the causes of them. If they can be composed by mutual concessions and by the forbearance of a generous nature, we shall rid ourselves of them. When this shall be done with one nation after the other, we will be in the position of a people well known, as our Nation is, as a people, asking no territory, seeking no conquest, and pursuing no indemnities. Here we are, having no wrong to be charged to us, nor charging offense against any other people. After the adoption of the United States as a good friend we could then be accepted as one who could rightfully intervene and utter the voice of warning or of guidance to the nations that now threaten conflict with each other, which in its manifestations or operations may bring us into it.

Mr. President, for that reason I feel that the hour has come upon us for very serious consideration as to this very unhappy situation, this menacing attitude surrounding us, as I see it, in the threatened cloud of tragedy.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield gladly to my able friend from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I noticed in the press recently a suggestion coming from high authority in Great Britain that there be something in the nature of a special alliance, a special cooperative program between Great Britain and the United States, and it seemed to meet with favor in this country. I should like the Senator's view upon that subject.

Mr. LEWIS. I will say to my able friend I was attracted by the fact that Mr. Eden, one of the officers of the English Government, lately appointed to be in charge of the foreign department, made such a suggestion as that to which my able friend from Idaho correctly alludes. It was by him declared, as states the press, that what is necessary is an understanding between the United States and Great Britain. Mr. Stanley Baldwin, who lately has come into the premiership, has announced lately, as the Senator from Idaho intimates, that if the United States and Britain will join together, these two of themselves are sufficient to enforce peace upon the world. I take it that the able Senator from Idaho, former Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, alludes to that particular declaration.

As for myself, I oppose now and I shall oppose, wherever my voice can reach, this Government entering into any partnership or marriage ceremony with any foreign land, to undertake by obligation with such foreign land to control the other nations of the world, or interfere in their proceedings where they do not touch us. Should foreign nations engage us to join them in any protest against wrong, and a provision in some form looking to peace and harmony of nations, upon the general basis of the brotherhood of nations and the theory of the religion of our ancestors and that which we of the present generation feel to be our duty to God for peace on earth and good will to men, to that I should gladly subscribe. But I answer my able friend, I could not agree, from my point of view, to enter into any partnership with foreign nations upon any basis that simply allies us as the direct, partial friend of one, and the direct opponent and enemy of the other.

Mr. President, I had not intended to delay the Senate so long with these observations. I feel that this is the moment when some action should be taken. We are waiting too long. The threats from abroad, the dangers that hover over us like a cloud filled with storm, whose edges already squirm in the fire of conflict, should warn us that we can wait too long. This is the time when all political parties of our country, all interests of Amerca—both industrial, financial, and might I add again, sir, local, geographical and general—should get behind the President, and give to him aid and support in carrying out the suggestion he made in his speech before the graduating military class at West Point but a day past, looking to America leading some movement that will quell conflict and establish, sir, the peace of the world. This to the end that we may enjoy prosperity of nations and the blessings of God on earth.

I thank the Senate for allowing me to break into the debate upon the security bill at this moment and to express views such as I have made bold to do with the privilege of the Senate for the audience on which, from the Senate, I extend again my sense of appreciation.

DEVELOPMENT OF AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION WORK

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7160) to provide for research into basic laws and principles relating to agriculture and to provide for the further development of cooperative agricultural extension work and the more complete endowment and support of land-grant colleges, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. SMITH, Mr. WHEELER, and Mr. NORRIS conferees on the part of the Senate.

STEFANO TALANCO AND EDITH TALANCO

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1585) for the relief of Stefano Talanco and Edith Talanco, which were, on page 1, line 7, to strike out "$9,500" and insert "$7,000", and on page 2, line 4, to strike out "$7,500" and insert "$5,000."

Mr. CONNALLY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

ALFRED W. KLIEFOTH

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 547) for the relief of Alfred W. Kliefoth, which was, on page 1, line 10, after the name "Petrograd", to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

CONCRETE ENGINEERING CO.—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 69)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Senate:

I return herewith without my approval S. 931, an act for the relief of the Concrete Engineering Co.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the Concrete Engineering Co., of Houston, Tex., the sum of $4,304.61 or so much thereof as will refund certain amounts assessed and collected as duties on imported steel building forms between the dates of February 23, 1926, and September 30, 1927. These amounts were not refunded under the ordinary procedure applicable to such cases because the importers failed to comply with the provisions of section 514, Tariff Act of 1922 (U. S. C., title 19, sec. 398), which made the collector's decision final and conclusive on all persons if written protest was not filed within 60 days thereafter.

In the absence of special circumstances giving merit to the claim, I think that an importer who fails to protect his rights in the manner provided by law should not be given preferential treatment over other importers who find themselves in the same position. I believe that a reasonable limitation upon the time within which protest may be filed is necessary to the orderly conduct of customs business and that the field of special legislation should not be opened to relieve importers from compliance with such provision.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 14, 1935.

SOCIAL SECURITY

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 7260) to provide for the general welfare by establishing a system of Federal old-age benefits, and by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for aged persons, dependent and crippled children, maternal and child welfare, public health, and the administration of their unemployment compensation laws; to establish a Social Security Board; to raise revenue; and for other purposes.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, in the Washington Daily News of June 14, 1935, appeared an editorial which merits consideration. It is entitled "Twenty Years Late." The concluding paragraph reads as follows:

The United States is 20 years or more behind advanced industrial countries in adopting a national social-security system. Further delay would only add to relief burdens, economic unbalance, and human fears.

The editorial, as a whole, will appeal to men and women who are devoted to wisely progressive legislation, and I ask that, in its entirety it may be incorporated in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TWENTY YEARS LATE

By order of the American people the Senate today considers the administration's economic-security bill, designed to cushion some 27,000,000 families against "the major hazards and vicissitudes of life."

The House speedily passed this important measure, 372 to 33. The Senate would be wise to act with equal dispatch. For none of President Roosevelt's "must" measures is more sorely needed, or more popular.

The Senate committee's bill is a decided improvement on the one passed by the House. It attacks the social problems of indigent old age, unemployment, blindness, illness, and childhood dependency.

To help the present generation of aged poor, it offers out of the Federal Treasury a subsidy to States of as much as $15 monthly for each pensioned person past 65. To provide a self-liquidating old-age security system for the future, it proposes a Federal reserve fund into which employers and workers would contribute pay-roll taxes to support industry's retired veterans. Finally, it offers to others the opportunity to buy cheap Government annuities. These provisions should help to close the doors of poorhouses, which are so costly to the public and so unsatisfactory to the unfortunate inmates.

The unemployment insurance section is frankly an experiment in Federal-State cooperation. To encourage the States to enact unemployment insurance laws, it provides a Federal pay-roll tax, of which 90 percent would be remitted to States with jobless insurance systems. States are given wide latitude to try out plans that fit the regional or industrial needs of each.

The bill would benefit thousands of needy blind through Federal subsidies to States. It triples Federal appropriations for public health. It revives the infant-maternity care provisions of the now lapsed Sheppard-Towner Act, provides funds for rehabilitating crippled children, and increases a hundredfold Federal contributions for child welfare.

The bill has many defects. Some are due to the need for economy, others to the Supreme Court's rigid limits on Federal powers. The measure does not guarantee security to every family, but it will soften the blows of economic adversity.

It is the product of a year's sincere and expert effort. Its imperfections can be ironed out later, as other countries have improved similar measures.

The United States is 20 years or more behind advanced industrial countries in adopting a national social-security system. Further delay would only add to relief burdens, economic unbalance, and human fears.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, if there is no Senator who desires to speak on the bill, I should like to have the Senate proceed to the consideration of the committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first amendment of the Committee on Finance.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 1, line 7, after the word "financial", to strike out "assistance assuring, as far as practicable under the conditions in such State, a reasonable subsistence compatible with decency and health to aged individuals without such subsistence" and insert "assistance, as far as practicable under the conditions in such State, to aged needy individuals", so as to make the section read:

SECTION 1. For the purpose of enabling each State to furnish financial assistance, as far as practicable under the conditions in such State, to aged needy individuals, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $49,750,000, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year thereafter a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of this title. The sums made available under this section shall be used for making payments to States which have submitted and had approved by the Social Security Board established by title VII (hereinafter referred to as the "Board") State plans for old-age assistance.

Mr. AUSTIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Coolidge	La Follette	Radcliffe
Ashurst	Copeland	Lewis	Reynolds
Austin	Costigan	Lonergan	Robinson
Bachman	Couzens	Long	Russell
Bailey	Davis	McAdoo	Schall
Bankhead	Dickinson	McCarran	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Donahey	McGill	Sheppard
Black	Duffy	McKellar	Shipstead
Bone	Fletcher	McNary	Smith
Borah	Frazier	Maloney	Steiwer
Brown	George	Minton	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	Gerry	Moore	Trammell
Bulow	Gibson	Murphy	Vandenberg
Burke	Gore	Murray	Van Nuys
Byrd	Hale	Neely	Wagner
Byrnes	Harrison	Norbeck	Walsh
Capper	Hastings	Norris	Wheeler
Caraway	Hatch	O'Mahoney	White
Chavez	Hayden	Overton
Clark	Johnson	Pittman
Connally	King	Pope

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 1, line 7.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Operation of State plans", on page 6, line 14, before the word "notice", to insert "reasonable", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. In the case of any State plan for old-age assistance which has been approved by the board, if the board, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of such plan, finds—

(1) That the plan has been so changed as to impose any age, residence, or citizenship requirement prohibited by section 2 (b), or that in the administration of the plan any such prohibited requirement is imposed, with the knowledge of such State agency, in a substantial number of cases; or

(2) That in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with any provision required by section 2 (a) to be included in the plan; the board shall notify such State agency that further payments will not be made to the State until the board is satisfied that such prohibited requirement is no longer so imposed, and that there is no longer any such failure to comply. Until it is so satisfied it shall make no further certification to the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Old-age benefit payments", on page 10, after line 21, to insert the following:

(d) Whenever the board finds that any qualified individual has received wages with respect to regular employment after he attained the age of 65, the old-age benefit payable to such individual shall be reduced, for each calendar month in any part of which such regular employment occurred, by an amount equal to 1 month's benefit. Such reduction shall be made, under regulations prescribed by the board, by deductions from one or more payments of old-age benefit to such individual.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Definitions", on page 15, line 2, after the word "United", to strike out "States by" and insert "States, or as an officer or member of the crew of a vessel documented under the laws of the United States, by"; after line 9, to strike out "(4) Service performed as an officer or member of the crew of a vessel documented under the laws of the United States or of any foreign country"; in line 13, before the word "service", to strike out "(5)" and insert "(4)"; in line 16, before the word "service", to strike out "(6)" and insert "(5)"; in line 19, before the word "service", to strike out "(7)" and insert "(6)"; and in line 22, after the word "purposes", to insert "or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals", so as to read:

SEC. 210. When used in this title—

(a) The term "wages" means all remuneration for employment, including the cash value of all remuneration paid in any medium other than cash; except that such term shall not include that part of the remuneration which, after remuneration equal to $3,000 has been paid to an individual by an employer with respect to employment during any calendar year, is paid to such individual by such employer with respect to employment during such calendar year.

(b) The term "employment" means any service, of whatever nature, performed within the United States, or as an officer or member of the crew of a vessel documented under the laws of the United States, by an employee for his employer, except—

(1) Agricultural labor;

(2) Domestic service in a private home;

(3) Casual labor not in the course of the employer's trade or business;

(4) Service performed in the employ of the United States Government or of an instrumentality of the United States;

(5) Service performed in the employ of a State, a political subdivision thereof, or an instrumentality of one or more States or political subdivisions;

(6) Service performed in the employ of a corporation, community chest, fund, or foundation, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Provisions of State laws", on page 18, line 7, after the word "compensation", to strike out "solely", and in the same line, after the word "State", to insert a comma and "to the extent that such offices exist and are designated by the State for the purpose", so as to read:

SEC. 303. (a) The board shall make no certification for payment to any State unless it finds that the law of such State, approved by the board under title IX, includes provisions for—

(1) Such methods of administration (other than those relating to selection, tenure of office, and compensation of personnel) as are found by the board to be reasonably calculated to insure full payment of unemployment compensation when due; and

(2) Payment of unemployment compensation through public employment offices in the State, to the extent that such offices exist and are designated by the State for the purpose; and

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 10, before the word "notice", to insert "reasonable", so as to read:

(b) Whenever the board, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency charged with the administration of the State law, finds that in the administration of the law there is—

(1) a denial, in a substantial number of cases, of unemployment compensation to individuals entitled thereto under such law; or

(2) a failure to comply substantially with any provision specified in subsection (a)

the board shall notify such State agency that further payments will not be made to the State until the board is satisfied that there is no longer any such denial or failure to comply. Until it is so satisfied it shall make no further certification to the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title IV—Grants to States for aid to dependent children—Appropriation", on page 20, line 5, after the word "financial", to strike out "assistance assuring, as far as practicable under the conditions in such State, a reasonable subsistence compatible with decency and health to dependent children without such subsistence" and insert "assistance, as far as practicable under the conditions in such State, to needy dependent children,", and in line 16, after the word "the", to strike out "board" and insert "Chief of the Children's Bureau", so as to make the section read:

SECTION 401. For the purpose of enabling each State to furnish financial assistance, as far as practicable under the conditions in such State, to needy dependent children, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $24,750,000, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year thereafter a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of this title. The sums made available under this section shall be used for making payments to States which have submitted, and had approved by the Chief of the Children's Bureau, State plans for aid to dependent children.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "State plans for aid to dependent children", on page 21, line 9, after the words "by the", to strike out "board" and insert "Chief of Children's Bureau"; in line 13, after the word "the", to strike out "board" and insert "Secretary of Labor"; and in line 14, after the word "as", to strike out "the board" and insert "he", so as to read:

SEC. 402 (a) A State plan for aid to dependent children must (1) provide that it shall be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State, and, if administered by them, be mandatory upon them; (2) provide for financial participation by the State; (3) either provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to administer the plan, or provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to supervise the administration of the plan; (4) provide for granting to any individual, whose claim with respect to aid to a dependent child is denied, an opportunity for a fair hearing before such State agency; (5) provide such methods of administration (other than those relating to selection, tenure of office, and compensation of personnel) as are found by the Chief of the Children's Bureau to be necessary for the efficient operation of the plan; and (6) provide that the State agency will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Secretary of Labor may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as he may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and vertification of such reports.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 17, after the word "The", to strike out "board" and insert "Chief of the Children's Bureau"; in line 19, after the word "that", to strike out "it" and insert "he"; and on page 22, line 2, after the word "application", to insert a comma and "if its mother has resided in the State for 1 year immediately preceding the birth", so as to read:

(b) The Chief of the Children's Bureau shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a), except that he shall not approve any plan which imposes as a condition of eligibility for aid to dependent children, a residence requirement which denies aid with respect to any child residing in the State (1) who has resided in the State for 1 year immediately preceding the application for such aid, or (2) who was born within the State within 1 year immediately preceding the application, if its mother has resided in the State for 1 year immediately preceding the birth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Payment to States", on page 22, line 20, after the word "The", to strike out "board" and insert "Secretary of Labor", and on page 23, line 9, after the word "the", to strike out "board" and insert "Secretary of Labor", so as to read:

SEC. 403. (a) From the sums appropriated therefor the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan for aid to dependent children, for each quarter, beginning with the quarter commencing July 1, 1935, an amount, which shall be used exclusively for carrying out the State plan, equal to one-third of the total of the sums expended during such quarter under such plan, not counting so much of such expenditure with respect to any dependent child for any month as exceeds $18, or if there is more than one dependent child in the same home, as exceeds $18 for any month with respect to one such dependent child and $12 for such month with respect to each of the other dependent children.

(b) The method of computing and paying such amounts shall be as follows:

(1) The Secretary of Labor shall, prior to the beginning of each quarter, estimate the amount to be paid to the State for such quarter under the provisions of subsection (a), such estimate to be based on (A) a report filed by the State containing its estimate of the total sum to be expended in such quarter in accordance with the provisions of such subsection and stating the amount appropriated or made available by the State and its political subdivisions for such expenditures in such quarter, and if such amount is less than two-thirds of the total sum of such estimated expenditures, the source or sources from which the difference is expected to be derived, (B) records showing the number of dependent children in the State, and (C) such other investigation as the Secretary of Labor may find necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 11, after the word "the", to strike out "board" and insert "Secretary of Labor"; in line 13, after the word "the", to strike out

"board" and insert "Secretary of Labor"; in line 15, after the word "which", to strike out "it" and insert "he"; in the same line, after the word "that", to strike out "its" and insert "his"; and in line 20, after the words "by the", to strike out "board" and insert "Secretary of Labor", so as to read:

(2) The Secretary of Labor shall then certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount so estimated by the Secretary of Labor, reduced or increased, as the case may be, by any sum by which he finds that his estimate for any prior quarter was greater or less than the amount which should have been paid to the State for such quarter, except to the extent that such sum has been applied to make the amount certified for any prior quarter greater or less than the amount estimated by the Secretary of Labor for such prior quarter.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 1, after the words "by the", to strike out "board" and insert "Secretary of Labor", so as to read:

(3) The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon, through the Division of Disbursement of the Treasury Department and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, pay to the State, at the time or times fixed by the Secretary of Labor, the amount so certified.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Operation of State plans", on page 24, line 5, after the word "the", to strike out "board" and insert "Chief of the Children's Bureau"; in line 6, after the words "if the", to strike out "board" and insert "Secretary of Labor"; and in line 7, before the word "notice", to insert "reasonable"; in line 19, after the word "the", to strike out "board" and insert "Secretary of Labor"; in line 21, after the word "until", to strike out "the board" and insert "he"; in line 23, after the word "Until", to strike out "it" and insert "he"; and in the same line, before the word "shall", to strike out "it" and insert "he", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 404. In the case of any State plan for aid to dependent children which has been approved by the Chief of the Children's Bureau, if the Secretary of Labor, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of such plan, finds—

(1) That the plan has been so changed as to impose any residence requirement prohibited by section 402 (b), or that in the administration of the plan any such prohibited requirement is imposed, with the knowledge of such State agency, in a substantial number of cases; or

(2) That in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with any provision required by section 402 (a) to be included in the plan; the Secretary of Labor shall notify such State agency that further payments will not be made to the State until he is satisfied that such prohibited requirement is no longer so imposed, and that there is no longer any such failure to comply. Until he is so satisfied he shall make no further certification to the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Administration", on page 25, line 4, after the word "the", to strike out "board" and insert "Children's Bureau", so as to read:

SEC. 405. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $250,000 for all necessary expenses of the Children's Bureau in administering the provisions of this title.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Definitions", on page 25, line 9, after the word "sixteen", to insert "who has been deprived of parental support or care by reason of the death, continued absence from the home, or physical or mental incapacity of a parent, and"; and in line 14, before the word "residence", to insert "place of", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 406. When used in this title—

(a) The term "dependent child" means a child under the age of 16 who has been deprived of parental support or care by reason of the death, continued absence from the home, or physical or mental incapacity of a parent, and who is living with his father, mother, grandfather, grandmother, brother, sister, stepfather, stepmother, stepbrother, stepsister, uncle, or aunt, in a place of residence maintained by one or more of such relatives as his or their own home;

(b) The term "aid to dependent children" means money payments with respect to a dependent child or dependent children.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Allotments to States"; on page 26, line 13, after the word "State", to strike out "bears" and insert "bore", and in line 14, after the name "United States", to insert a comma and "in the latest calendar year for which the Bureau of the Census has available statistics", so as to read:

SEC. 502. (a) Out of the sums appropriated pursuant to section 501 for each fiscal year the Secretary of Labor shall allot to each State $20,000, and such part of $1,800,000 as he finds that the number of live births in such State bore to the total number of live births in the United States, in the latest calendar year for which the Bureau of the Census has available statistics.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Approval of State plans", on page 27, line 11, after the word "plan", to insert "by the State health agency", and in line 15, after the word "are", to strike out "found by the Chief of the Children's Bureau to be", so as to read:

SEC. 503. (a) A State plan for maternal and child-health services must (1) provide for financial participation by the State; (2) provide for the administration of the plan by the State health agency or the supervision of the administration of the plan by the State health agency; (3) provide such methods of administration (other than those relating to selection, tenure of office, and compensation of personnel) as are necessary for the efficient operation of the plan; (4) provide that the State health agency will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Secretary of Labor may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as he may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports; (5) provide for the extension and improvement of local, maternal, and child-health services administered by local child-health units; (6) provide for cooperation with medical, nursing, and welfare groups and organizations; and (7) provide for the development of demonstration services in needy areas and among groups in special need.

(b) The Chief of the Children's Bureau shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a) and shall thereupon notify the Secretary of Labor and the State health agency of his approval.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Payment to States", on page 28, line 12, after the word "beginning", to insert "with the quarter commencing", so as to read:

SEC. 504. (a) From the sums appropriated therefor and the allotments available under section 502 (a), the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan for maternal and child-health services, for each quarter, beginning with the quarter commencing July 1, 1935, an amount, which shall be used exclusively for carrying out the State plan, equal to one-half of the total sum expended during such quarter for carrying out such plan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Operation of State Plans", on page 30, line 12, before the word "notice" to insert "reasonable"; so as to read:

SEC. 505. In the case of any State plan for maternal and child-health services which has been approved by the Chief of the Children's Bureau, if the Secretary of Labor, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of such plan, finds that in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with any provision required by section 503 to be included in the plan, he shall notify such State agency that further payments will not be made to the State until he is satisfied that there is no longer any such failure to comply. Until he is so satisfied he shall make no further certification to the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Approval of State Plans", on page 32, line 9, after the word "plan" to insert "by a State agency", and in line 13, after the word "are" to strike out "found by the Chief of the Children's Bureau to be"; so as to read:

SEC. 513. (a) A State plan for services for crippled children must (1) provide for financial participation by the State; (2) provide for the administration of the plan by a State agency or the supervision of the administration of the plan by a State agency; (3) provide such methods of administration (other than those relating to selection, tenure of office, and compensation of personnel) as are necessary for the efficient operation of the plan; (4) provide that the State agency will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Secretary of Labor may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as he may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports; (5) provide for carrying out the purposes specified in section 511; and (6) provide for cooperation with medical, health, nursing, and welfare groups and organizations and with any agency in such State charged with administering State laws providing for vocational rehabilitation of physically handicapped children.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Payment to States", on page 33, line 10, after the word "beginning" to insert "with the quarter commencing"; so as to read:

SEC. 514. (a) From the sums appropriated therefor and the allotments available under section 512, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan for services for crippled children, for each quarter, beginning with the quarter commencing July 1, 1935, an amount, which shall be used exclusively for carrying out the State plan, equal to one-half of the total sum expended during such quarter for carrying out such plan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Operation of State plans", on page 34, line 25, before the word "notice", to insert "reasonable", so as to read:

SEC. 515. In the case of any State plan for services for crippled children which has been approved by the Chief of the Children's Bureau, if the Secretary of Labor, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of such plan, finds that in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with any provision required by section 513 to be included in the plan, he shall notify such State agency that further payments will not be made to the State until he is satisfied that there is no longer any such failure to comply. Until he is so satisfied he shall make no further certification to the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Part 3—Child-welfare services", on page 35, after line 10, to strike out:

SEC. 521. For the purpose of enabling the United States, through the Children's Bureau, to cooperate with State public-welfare agencies in establishing, extending, and strengthening, in rural areas, public-welfare services for the protection and care of homeless, dependent, and neglected children, and children in danger of becoming delinquent, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $1,500,000. Such amount shall be allotted for use by cooperating State public-welfare agencies, to each State, $10,000, and such part of the balance as the rural population of such State bears to the total rural population of the United States. The amount so allotted shall be expended for payment of part of the costs of county and local child-welfare services in rural areas. The amount of any allotment to a State under this section for any fiscal year remaining unpaid to such State at the end of such fiscal year shall be available for payment to such State under this section until the end of the second succeeding fiscal year. No payment to a State under this section shall be made out of its allotment for any fiscal year until its allotment for the preceding fiscal year has been exhausted or has ceased to be available.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 521. (a) For the purpose of enabling the United States, through the Children's Bureau, to cooperate with State public-welfare agencies in establishing, extending, and strengthening, especially in predominantly rural areas, public-welfare services for the care of homeless or neglected children, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $1,500,000. Such amount shall be allotted by the Secretary of Labor for use by cooperating State public-welfare agencies on the basis of plans developed jointly by the State agency and the Children's Bureau, to each State, $10,000, and the remainder to each State on the basis of such plans, not to exceed such part of the remainder as the rural population of such State bears to the total rural population of the United States. The amount so allotted shall be expended for payment of part of the cost of district, county, or other local child-welfare services in areas predominantly rural, and for developing State services for the encouragement and assistance of adequate methods of community child-welfare organization in areas predominantly rural and other areas of special need. The amount of any allotment to a State under this section for any fiscal year remaining unpaid to such State at the end of such fiscal year shall be available for payment to such State under this section until the end of the second succeeding fiscal year. No payment to a State under this section shall be made out of its allotment for any fiscal year until its allotment for the preceding fiscal year has been exhausted or has ceased to be available.

(b) From the sums appropriated therefor and the allotments available under subsection (a) the Secretary of Labor shall from time to time certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amounts to be paid to the States, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall, through the Division of Disbursement of the Treasury Department and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, make payments of such amounts from such allotments at the time or times specified by the Secretary of Labor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Part 4—Vocational rehabilitation", on page 38, line 19, after the word "the", to strike out "Federal agency authorized to administer it" and insert "Office of Education in the Department of the Interior," so as to read:

(b) For the administration of such act of June 2, 1920, as amended, by the Office of Education in the Department of the Interior, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1936, and June 30, 1937, the sum of $22,000 for each such fiscal year in addition to the amount of the existing authorization, and for each fiscal year thereafter the sum of $102,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Part 5—Administration", on page 39, line 5, after the word "title", to insert a comma and "except section 531", and in line 9, after the word "title", to insert a comma and "except section 531", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 541. (a) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $425,000 for all necessary expenses of the Children's Bureau in administering the provisions of this title, except section 531.

(b) The Children's Bureau shall make such studies and investigations as will promote the efficient administration of this title, except section 531.

(c) The Secretary of Labor shall include in his annual report to Congress a full account of the administration of this title, except section 531.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "State and local public health services", on page 40, line 20, after the word "regulations", to insert "previously", so as to read:

(c) Prior to the beginning of each quarter of the fiscal year the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service shall, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, determine, in accordance with rules and regulations previously prescribed by such Surgeon General after consultation with a conference of the State and Territorial health authorities, the amount to be paid to each State for such quarter from the allotment to such State, and shall certify the amount so determined to the Secretary of the Treasury. Upon receipt of such certification, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, through the Division of Disbursement of the Treasury Department, and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, pay in accordance with such certification.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title VII—Social Security Board—Establishment", on page 42, line 13, after the word "established", to insert "in the Department of Labor"; and in line 17, after the word "Senate" to insert "During his term of membership on the board, no member shall engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. Not more than two of the members of the board shall be members of the same political party", so as to read:

SEC. 701. There is hereby established in the Department of Labor a Social Security Board (in this act referred to as the "Board") to be composed of three members to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. During his term of membership on the Board, no member shall engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. Not more than two of the members of the Board shall be members of the same political party. Each member shall receive a salary at the rate of $10,000 a year and shall hold office for a term of 6 years, except that (1) any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed, shall be appointed for the remainder of such term; and (2) the terms of office of the members first taking office after the date of the enactment of this act shall expire, as designated by the President at the time of appointment, one at the end of 2 years, one at the end of 4 years, and one at the end of 6 years, after the date of the enactment of this act. The President shall designate one of the members as the chairman of the Board.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Expenses of the Board", on page 43, line 22, after the word "act" to insert "Appointments of attorneys and experts may be made without regard to the civil-service laws."; so as to read:

SEC. 703. The Board is authorized to appoint and fix the compensation of such officers and employees, and to make such expenditures, as may be necessary for carrying out its functions under this act. Appointments of attorneys and experts may be made without regard to the civil-service laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Reports" on page 44, line 2, after the word "The" to strike out

"Board" and insert "Board, through the Secretary of Labor,"; so as to read:

SEC. 704. The Board, through the Secretary of Labor, shall make a full report to Congress, at the beginning of each regular session, of the administration of the functions with which it is charged.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Deduction of tax from wages", on page 45, line 14, after the words "shall be", to strike out "made in" and insert "made, without interest, in"; so as to read:

(b) If more or less than the correct amount of tax imposed by section 801 is paid with respect to any wage payment, then, under regulations made under this title, proper adjustments, with respect both to the tax and the amount to be deducted, shall be made, without interest, in connection with subsequent wage payments to the same individual by the same employer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Adjustment of Employers' Tax", on page 46, line 24, after the words "shall be", to strike out "made in" and insert "made, without interest, in", so as to read:

SEC. 805. If more or less than the correct amount of tax imposed by section 804 is paid with respect to any wage payment, then, under regulations made under this title, proper adjustments with respect to the tax shall be made, without interest, in connection with subsequent wage payments to the same individual by the same employer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Collection and payment of taxes", on page 47, line 18, after the word "collections", to insert "If the tax is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax interest (except in the case of adjustments made in accordance with the provisions of sections 802 (b) and 805) at the rate of one-half per cent per month from the date the tax became due until paid", so as to read:

SEC. 807. (a) The taxes imposed by this title shall be collected by the Bureau of Internal Revenue under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury and shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as internal-revenue collections. If the tax is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax interest (except in the case of adjustments made in accordance with the provisions of sections 802 (b) and 805) at the rate of one-half percent per month from the date the tax became due until paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Definitions", on page 51, line 7, after the word "United", to strike out "States by" and insert "States, or as an officer or member of the crew of a vessel documented under the laws of the United States, by"; after line 14, to strike out:

(4) Service performed by an individual who has attained the age of 65.

After line 16, to strike out:

(5) Service performed as an officer or member of the crew of a vessel documented under the laws of the United States or of any foreign country.

In line 20, before the word "Service", to strike out "(6)" and insert "(4)"; in line 23, before the word "Service", to strike out "(7)" and insert "(5)"; on page 52, line 1, before the word "Service", to strike out "(8)" and insert "(6)"; and in line 4, after the word "purposes", to insert "or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals", so as to read:

SEC. 811. When used in this title—

(a) The term "wages" means all remuneration for employment, including the cash value of all remuneration paid in any medium other than cash; except that such term shall not include that part of the remuneration which, after remuneration equal to $3,000 has been paid to an individual by an employer with respect to employment during any calendar year, is paid to such individual by such employer with respect to employment during such calendar year.

(b) The term "employment" means any service, of whatever nature, performed within the United States or as an officer or member of the crew of a vessel documented under the laws of the United States, by an employee for his employer, except—

(1) Agricultural labor;

(2) Domestic service in a private home;

(3) Casual labor not in the course of the employer's trade or business;

(4) Service performed in the employ of the United States Government or of an instrumentality of the United States;

(5) Service performed in the employ of a State, a political subdivision thereof, or an instrumentality of one or more States or political subdivisions;

(6) Service performed in the employ of a corporation, community chest, fund, or foundation, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 8, before the words "or more", to strike out "ten" and insert "four", so as to make the heading read:

Title IX—Tax on employers of four or more.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Certification of State Laws", on page 53, line 18, before the word "is", to strike out "all compensation" and insert "compensation", and in line 19, after the word "State", to insert a comma and "to the extent that such offices exist and are designated by the State for the purpose", so as to read:

SEC. 903. (a) The Social Security Board shall approve any State law submitted to it, within 30 days of such submission, which it finds provides that—

(1) Compensation is to be paid through public employment offices in the State, to the extent that such offices exist and are designated by the State for the purpose;

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 6, before the word "notice", to insert "reasonable"; so as to read:

(b) On December 31 in each taxable year the Board shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury each State whose law it has previously approved, except that it shall not certify any State which, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency, the Board finds has changed its law so that it no longer contains the provisions specified in subsection (a) or has with respect to such taxable year failed to comply substantially with any such provision.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Administration, Refunds, and Penalties", on page 58, line 3, after the word "collections" and the period, to insert "If the tax is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax interest at the rate of one-half of 1 percent per month from the date the tax became due until paid"; so as to read:

SEC. 905. (a) The tax imposed by this title shall be collected by the Bureau of Internal Revenue under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury and shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as internal-revenue collections. If the tax is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax interest at the rate of one-half of 1 percent per month from the date the tax became due until paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Definitions", on page 60, line 19, after the word "some", to strike out "twenty" and insert "thirteen"; and in line 23, after the word "was", to strike out "ten" and insert "four"; so as to read:

SEC. 907. When used in this title—

(a) The term "employer" does not include any person unless on each of some 13 days during the taxable year, each day being in a different calendar week, the total number of individuals who were in his employ for some portion of the day (whether or not at the same moment of time) was four or more.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 22, after the word "purposes", to insert "or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals"; so as to read:

(7) Service performed in the employ of a corporation, community chest, fund, or foundation, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 6, after the word "compensation" to strike out the comma and insert "all the assets of which are mingled and undivided, and in which no separate account is maintained with respect to any person"; so as to read:

(e) The term "unemployment fund" means a special fund, established under a State law and administered by a State agency, for the payment of compensation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 21, after the word "sections", to strike out "903 and 904" and insert "903, 904, and 910", so as to read:

RULES AND REGULATIONS

SEC. 908. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall make and publish rules and regulations for the enforcement of this title, except sections 903, 904, and 910.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 62, after line 21, to insert:

ALLOWANCE OF ADDITIONAL CREDIT

SEC. 909. (a) In addition to the credit allowed under section 902, a taxpayer may, subject to the conditions imposed by section 910, credit against the tax imposed by section 901 for any taxable year after the taxable year 1937, an amount, with respect to each State law, equal to the amount, if any, by which the contributions, with respect to employment in such taxable year, actually paid by the taxpayer under such law before the date of filing his return for such taxable year, is exceeded by whichever the following is the lesser—

(1) The amount of contributions which he would have been required to pay under such law for such taxable year if he had been subject to the highest rate applicable from time to time throughout such year to any employer under such law; or

(2) Two and seven-tenths per centum of the wages payable by him with respect to employment with respect to which contributions for such year were required under such law.

(b) If the amount of the contributions actually so paid by the taxpayer is less than the amount which he should have paid under the State law, the additional credit under subsection (a) shall be reduced proportionately.

(c) The total credits allowed to a taxpayer under this title shall not exceed 90 percent of the tax against which such credits are taken.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 64, to insert:

CONDITIONS OF ADDITIONAL CREDIT ALLOWANCE

SEC. 910. (a) A taxpayer shall be allowed the additional credit under section 909, with respect to his contribution rate under a State law being lower, for any taxable year, than that of another employer subject to such law, only if the Board finds that under such law—

(1) Such lower rate, with respect to contributions to a pooled fund, is permitted on the basis of not less than 3 years of compensation experience;

(2) Such lower rate, with respect to contributions to a guaranteed employment account, is permitted only when his guaranty of employment was fulfilled in the preceding calendar year, and such guaranteed employment account amounts to not less than 7½ percent of the total wages payable by him, in accordance with such guaranty, with respect to employment in such State in the preceding calendar year;

(3) Such lower rate, with respect to contributions to a separate reserve account, is permitted only when (A) compensation has been payable from such account throughout the preceding calendar year, and (B) such account amounts to not less than five times the largest amount of compensation paid from such account within any one of the three preceding calendar years, and (C) such account amounts to not less than 7½ percent of the total wages payable by him (plus the total wages payable by any other employers who may be contributing to such account) with respect to employment in such State in the preceding calendar year.

(b) Such additional credit shall be reduced, if any contributions under such law are made by such taxpayer at a lower rate under conditions not fulfilling the requirements of subsection (a), by the amount bearing the same ratio to such additional credit as the amount of contributions made at such lower rate bears to the total of his contributions paid for such year under such law.

(c) As used in this section—

(1) The term "reserve account" means a separate account in an unemployment fund, with respect to an employer or group of employers, from which compensation is payable only with respect to the unemployment of individuals who were in the employ of such employer or of one of the employers comprising the group.

(2) The term "pooled fund" means an unemployment fund or any part thereof in which all contributions are mingled and undivided, and from which compensation is payable to all eligible individuals, except that to individuals last employed by employers with respect to whom reserve accounts are maintained by the State agency, it is payable only when such accounts are exhausted.

(3) The term "guaranteed employment account" means a separate account in an unemployment fund of contributions paid by an employer (or group of employers) who

(A) guarantees in advance 30 hours of wages for each of 40 calendar weeks (or more, with 1 weekly hour deducted for each added week guaranteed) in 12 months to all the individuals in his employ in one or more distinct establishments, except that any such individual's guaranty may commence after a probationary period (included within 12 or less consecutive calendar weeks); and

(B) gives security or assurance, satisfactory to the State agency, for the fulfillment of such guaranties, from which account compensation shall be payable with respect to the unemployment of any such individual whose guaranty is not fulfilled or renewed and who is otherwise eligible for compensation under the State law.

(4) The term "year of compensation experience", as applied to an employer, means any calendar year throughout which compensation was payable with respect to any individual in his employ who became unemployed and was eligible for compensation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in connection with the committee amendment on page 62 and following pages, I think it would be well if I were to ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point an explanation of that amendment, with which I had intended to acquaint the Senate in case any questions should be asked about it. I ask unanimous consent to have the statement printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

THE CASE FOR PERMITTING STATES TO ADOPT THE SEPARATE RESERVE ACCOUNT TYPE OF UNEMPLOYMENT-COMPENSATION LAW AND FOR GIVING CREDIT TO EMPLOYERS WHO HAVE REGULARIZED EMPLOYMENT

INTRODUCTORY STATEMENT

There are two principal types of unemployment-compensation laws: The pooled unemployment-insurance fund type and the separate reserve account type. In the pooled unemployment-insurance law all contributions are commingled, and payments of compensation are made from this common fund regardless of the particular employer for whom the unemployed workmen may have worked. In the reserve account type of unemployment-compensation law the contributions of each employer are kept separate for accounting purposes and each employer's account is charged only with the compensation payable to his own employees.

Except for accounting purposes the funds under both types of laws will be handled in exactly the same manner. The employers will pay their contributions to the State and the State will, under the Social Security Act, deposit these contributions in the United States Treasury, the Federal Reserve bank, or a bank designated to receive these deposits by the United States Treasury. The moneys in either case would be kept in an unemployment trust fund in the United States Treasury to the credit of the State and will be invested and liquidated as directed by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury will keep one account only with each State. If the separate reserve account type of law, however, is permitted, the State will keep accounts with each employer, crediting him with his contributions and charging him with the payments made to his own employees.

The original economic security bill, following the recommendations of the Committee on Economic Security, permitted freedom to the States to determine the kind of unemployment-compensation law they wished to enact. It also provided that where employers have built up adequate reserves or have had a very favorable unemployment experience, the States might permit them, while they maintain such favorable employment record, to make contributions at a lower rate than that required from other employers, and that in that event an additional credit against the Federal tax for unemployment-compensation purposes shall be allowed such employers equal to the credit granted under the State law. A similar provision occurred also in the Wagner-Lewis bill of the Seventy-third Congress.

The House Ways and Means Committee voted to eliminate from the bill the permission to States to have a separate reserve account type of compensation law. Consistently with this action, it also struck out of the bill all provisions relating to credits for employers who have regularized their employment. The House bill as it came to the Senate provides that only States which have unemployment-compensation laws of the pooled type shall be recognized for purposes of credit against the Federal tax, thus in effect compelling all States to adopt this particular type of unemployment-compensation law. It also contained no provisions for any encouragement to employers to regularize their employment.

The amendment proposed by the Senate Finance Committee to section 907 (7) (e), restores permission to States to establish any type of unemployment-compensation law they wish. The new sections 909 and 910 provide for credits to employers who have regularized their employment, subject to conditions stated in section 910.

EXPLANATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS AND OF OTHER GENERAL PURPOSES

The amendment to section 907 (7) (e) strikes from the House bill the provision that an unemployment fund established under a State law, to be recognized for purposes of credit against the Federal tax imposed in title IX, must provide that all assets are mingled and undivided and without separate accounts with respect to any employer. Under the House bill all States would be required to have pooled unemployment funds. With the amendments of the Finance Committee the States will be free to determine the type of unemployment-compensation law they wish to adopt, and whatever type they adopt will be recognized for purposes of credit against the Federal tax. This change does not compel the States to adopt the separate reserve account type of law but permits them to do so if they wish.

The new sections, 909 and 910, deal with what is called in the bill "the allowance of additional credit." Section 901 imposes an excise tax measured by pay rolls (beginning at 1 percent and increasing to an ultimate 3 percent) upon all employers of 10 or more employees, with stated exceptions.

Section 902 provides for a credit not exceeding 90 percent of the tax for payments made to State unemployment-compensation funds which meet the conditions prescribed in section 903.

The new section 909 provides for an additional credit to employers who have had a favorable unemployment experience. This additional credit is the amount by which they have been permitted to reduce their contributions under the State unemployment-compensation law. (As an illustration, if the State law permits an employer who has regularized his employment to reduce his rate of contribution to 2 percent, he will be entitled to credit against the Federal tax not of the 2 percent he has actually paid during the taxable year but of 2.7 percent—90 percent of 3 percent—which is the maximum credit that he can ever get, since all employers must always pay at least 10 percent of the Federal tax.) The additional credit permitted under this section may be granted under a pooled type of unemployment-compensation law as well as under the separate reserve account type of law.

The allowance of additional credit is hedged in with conditions which are set forth in section 910 and which are designed to prevent a reduction in the rate of contribution when employers have not genuinely regularized their employment. Three different types of provisions are distinguished, under which employers may be permitted a reduction in their rates of contribution:

(1) Reduced rates of contribution under pooled unemployment-compensation laws.

(2) Reduced rates of contribution under separate reserve account unemployment-compensation laws.

(3) Reduced rates of contribution where employers provide guaranteed employment.

The condition prescribed by the reduction of rates of contribution of pooled unemployment-insurance laws is that no reduction may be made until after 3 years of compensation experience. The condition applicable to the separate reserve account type of unemployment-compensation law is that the employer must have built up a reserve equal to at least five times the largest amount of compensation which has been paid from his account within any one of the three preceding calendar years or equal to at least 7.5 percent of his total pay roll during the preceding calendar year, whichever is the larger.

The conditions under which reduced rates of contribution are recognized, where permitted by the State law, to an employer who has guaranteed employment to all or some of his employees are:

(1) The period of guaranteed employment is at least 40 weeks during the year with not less than 30 hours of work during any week. (If the guaranty is for more than 40 weeks during the years, the hours per week may be reduced by the same number as the number of weeks of guaranteed work is increased—i. e., if the guaranty is for 42 weeks, only 28 hours of work need be given.)

(2) The employer must have actually fulfilled his guarantee.

(3) The employer must have built up a reserve of not less than 7.5 percent of his pay roll in the preceding year, from which compensation is payable to employees in the event the guarantee is not fulfilled or not renewed, and the employee, in consequence, becomes unemployed and is unable to find other work.

WHY STATES SHOULD BE PERMITTED FREEDOM OF CHOICE WITH RESPECT TO THE TYPE OF UNEMPLOYMENT-COMPENSATION LAW THEY WISH TO ADOPT

(1) Freedom of choice or permission to the States to determine for themselves what type of unemployment-compensation law they wish to adopt is in accord with the entire theory of the Social Security Act. The Social Security Act contemplates not dictation by the Federal Government but assistance to the States in developing measures of social security. In both Houses of the Congress there has been overwhelming sentiment against provisions giving anyone in Washington authority to tell the States what they must do. Many standards included in the original bill were eliminated for this reason. In this particular case, however, the House deprived the States of freedom of choice. In substantially all other respects the States are free to determine what sort of unemployment-compensation law they wish. The conditions prescribed in section 902 for the approval of State unemployment-compensation laws are not restrictions but merely standards to make certain that the State laws are genuine unemployment-insurance laws and not mere relief measures. The States are left free to determine whether they wish to have employee contributions or not, what waiting period there shall be, what the rate of benefit shall be, the duration of benefits, and every other feature of a compensation law except the general type of law they wish to have. Under the House bill they must have a pooled unemployment-insurance fund, though practically all other provisions can be determined as they see fit. This is utterly illogical.

(2) While there are advantages in a pooled-fund type of law, there are also advantages in a separate reserve account type of law, and at this stage there is no good reason why the States should not be permitted to have the type of unemployment-compensation law they wish. In arguing for freedom of choice for the States with respect to the type of unemployment-compensation law they desire, it is not necessary to detract from the pooled-fund type of law. Good arguments can be made in behalf of this type of law, but there are also valid arguments in favor of the other type.

The principal arguments in favor of separate reserve accounts are the following:

(a) Separate reserve accounts furnish a stronger incentive to employers to regularize their employment. Where an employer is charged with the cost of compensation payable to workmen he lays off, he naturally will make greater efforts to avoid having to lay off anyone than under a system where discharges cost him nothing. Employers cannot prevent all unemployment, but there is little doubt that many employers can do very much more than they are doing through reduced hours of labor when business slackens, and other methods.

(b) A separate reserve account type of unemployment-compensation law is stronger constitutionally than a pooled type of law. In the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the Railroad Retirement Board v. The Alton Railroad Co., the majority of the Supreme Court laid considerable stress upon the fact that under the Railroad Retirement Act all funds were pooled and all railroads were required to make contributions at the same rate regardless of the age composition of their employee group. The majority of the Court held that a system of this kind violated the due process clause of the Constitution—amounting to the taking of the property of some railroads for the benefit of the employees of other railroads. This particular part of the decision of the majority of the Supreme Court in this case is not necessarily conclusive upon the constitutionality of pooled unemployment-insurance funds, but does cast doubt upon the constitutionality of such funds unless provision is made for varying rates in accordance with the risk and experience of the individual employer. Under the separate reserve account type of law, each employer pays only for unemployment among his own employees. This completely meets the objection of the majority of the Supreme Court to the Railroad Retirement Act.

(c) A separate reserve account type of unemployment-compensation law in actual practice is very likely to provide just as adequate protection to unemployed workmen as a pooled-fund type of law. The major argument in behalf of the pooled funds is that they avoid the difficulty of a separate reserve account which may become exhausted, and, in consequence, the employees receive nothing when they become unemployed. This must be admitted as a possibility, but there is no guaranty that pooled funds will not become exhausted. When pooled funds become exhausted, not only will the employees in industries which have a vast amount of unemployment get nothing, but the employees in industries which have had very little will likewise get nothing.

Under the separate reserve account system, employees in establishments which regularize their employment, or which have low unemployment rates for any other reason, are almost sure to get full compensation when they become unemployed. But if there is a pooled fund, employees in such establishments and industries may get nothing because the employees in less regular establishments and industries have used up all of the fund.

Pooled unemployment-insurance funds are advantageous to industries and employees which have a great deal of unemployment but are disadvantageous to employees in plants and industries which have a minimum of unemployment, and the reverse of these statements applies to separate reserve accounts.

(3) The provision of the House bill requiring all States to have the pooled unemployment-insurance type of compensation law will bar 3 of the 5 unemployment-compensation laws that have already been enacted and compel all progressive employers who have voluntarily set up unemployment-compensation systems to abandon their plans. Of the five unemployment-compensation laws which have been passed to date, those of New York and Washington provide for pooled unemployment-insurance funds without any provisions for separate reserve accounts. On the other hand, the Utah and Wisconsin laws provide for separate employer reserves in all cases. The New Hampshire law provides for a pooled fund from which all payments of compensation are made but also provides that separate accounts shall be kept with each employer. These separate accounts are for the purpose of determining the rates of contribution to be paid by the employer in future years, the New Hampshire law providing that the rates of contribution shall be reduced after 3 years where employers have had a favorable experience and shall be increased if they have had a poor record. The House bill bars this New Hampshire plan, no less than the Utah and Wisconsin separate reserve account type of law.

The Wisconsin law is the only one now in actual operation. It was passed in 1932 and became effective, with regard to the collection of contributions, on July 1, 1934. Since then more than $5,000,000 have been collected under the Wisconsin law and set aside in separate reserve accounts for the payment of compensation to the unemployed workmen of employers to whom these accounts belong. Under the Wisconsin law these payments of compensation are to begin on July 1 of this year, and more than $5,000,000 will be available at that time for the payment of claims of workmen who may thereafter become unemployed. If the Social Security Act should become law in the form in which it passed the House, Wisconsin, as well as Utah and New Hampshire, will have to scrap its unemployment compensation act and begin all over again. The separate reserves under the Wisconsin law are the property of the employers, and the money already collected will have to be returned to the employers, the employees in the State losing the advantages of the funds which have already been accumulated.

The House bill penalizes the progressive employers and the States which have pioneered. This is done on the assumption that separate reserve accounts are inferior to pooled unemployment-insurance funds. Such assumption is not based on any actual experience, but rests entirely upon theoretical grounds. For Congress to penalize those who have pioneered because, forsooth, what they have done does not please some theorists, is a gross injustice and would have a most retarding effect upon all pioneering toward social progress.

WHY THE FINANCE COMMITTEE AMENDMENT ON ADDITIONAL CREDITS TO EMPLOYERS WHO HAVE REGULARIZED THEIR EMPLOYMENT SHOULD BE ADOPTED

(1) Prevention of unemployment is very much more important than compensation for unemployment. Unemployment compensation can give unemployed workers only a partial wage and for a limited period. None of the unemployment compensation laws enacted to date gives compensation of more than 50 percent of the prior wages, and in all of them the duration of payments is strictly limited. Unemployment compensation is distinctly better than nothing, but so long as at least half-time work is provided the employees are better off if they are retained in employment than if they are laid off. (Most employees actually prefer earning less money and being kept on the pay roll than being severed therefrom and drawing slightly more compensation for a limited period.)

(2) Under the Finance Committee amendment, unemployment compensation will tend to stimulate the regularization of employment, without which the reverse effect may result. While employers must pay the same rate of contributions, whether they have much or little unemployment, there is no incentive at all to reduce unemployment. When orders slacken, the natural thing for them to do is to discharge employees who are no longer needed. Where employers can save money, on the other hand, through regularizing their employment, they may be expected to do everything that they can to reduce their costs. When orders slacken, instead of discharging some employees, they will have a strong incentive to reduce hours of labor and to spread their work among all of their employees so that they do not have to pay compensation from their own accounts to some of these employees. Likewise, they will try to eliminate seasonal and other irregularities as best they can. The extent to which they can do so will vary with different industries, but under the stimulus of the possibility of reducing rates of contribution, it is to be expected that employers will do very much more toward regularizing employment than they have done heretofore.

(3) These provisions carry out the oft-expressed wish of the President that unemployment compensation should promote the regularization of employment. Upon this point the President stated in his message of January 17, 1935, which dealt exclusively with the subject of social security: "An unemployment-compensation system should be constructed in such a way as to afford every practicable aid and incentive toward the larger purpose of employment stabilization. This can be helped by the intelligent planning of both public and private employment. * * * Moreover, in order to encourage the stabilization of private employment, Federal legislation should not foreclose the States from establishing means for inducing industries to afford an even greater stabilization of employment."

The same thought was reiterated by the President in his fireside address on May 5. The views of the President on this subject are in accord with sound public policy and accurately reflect the sentiment of the country.

(4) These provisions relating to additional credit, it is believed, will strengthen the constitutionality of title IX. Title IX is believed to be fairly safe against attack on constitutional grounds, because the offset provision is modeled directly after the corresponding provision in the Federal estates tax law, under which a credit is allowed (up to 80 percent of the tax) for payments made under State inheritance tax laws. This provision of the Federal estates tax law was sustained as constitutional in a unanimous decision of the United States Supreme Court in a suit brought by the State of Florida. Nevertheless, the change proposed in the Finance Committee amendments will be distinctly helpful in this respect. It will make it clear to the Court that contribution rates can be adjusted in accordance with the risk and experience of each particular employer. This renders impossible the application of the doctrine of the Railroad Retirement Act case to title IX.

(5) Section 911 provides ample safeguards against possible abuse of the additional credit provision. As noted above in the explanation of this provision, additional credits are possible under any type of compensation law. In each case, however, these credits are hedged in to prevent States from arbitrarily reducing contribution rates to favor particular employers.

Under the pooled-fund type of law, contribution rates may not be reduced for 3 years and must then be made on the basis of actual experience. Under the reserve type of law, contributions cannot be reduced until adequate reserves have been built up. These reserves must be at least equal to five times the maximum amount of compensation that has been payable in any one of the three preceding years. (In other words, an employer must have a reserve which would enable him to pay five times the compensation he has paid in any recent year.) Such reserves in no case may be less than 7.5 percent of his annual pay roll. With a 3-percent contribution rate, it is impossible for employers to build up a reserve of this size in less than 3 years, even if they have no unemployment.

Similarly, guaranteed employment is hedged in with adequate conditions. Guaranteed employment in effect amounts to putting ordinary workmen on an annual salary basis, which is the best possible guaranty against unemployment. If everyone were guaranteed an annual salary there would be no need for unemployment compensation. Under section 910 the guaranty must be a substantial one and must be fulfilled before the employer can get any credit because of such guaranty. Workmen must be guaranteed 40 weeks of employment during the year, and if the guaranty is not fulfilled or renewed, and they become unemployed, the employer must pay unemployment compensation to them on the same basis as to other employees. To make certain that he will have funds to do so, he must have in his reserve account at least 7.5 percent of his annual pay roll before his rate of contribution to the unemployment fund may be reduced.

With these safeguards, it is rendered certain that the additional credit provision cannot be manipulated to give employers reduced rates unless they have in effect regularized their employment. It is only when they have fulfilled all of the conditions and only when the State law permits them to reduce their rates of contribution that they are entitled to any additional credits against the Federal tax.

The next amendment was, on page 67, after line 2, to insert:

TITLE X—GRANTS TO STATES FOR AID TO THE BLIND

APPROPRIATION

SECTION 1001. For the purpose of enabling each State to furnish financial assistance, as far as practicable under the conditions in such State, to needy individuals who are permanently blind, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $3,000,000, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year thereafter a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of this title. The sums made available under this section shall be used for making payments to States which have submitted, and had approved by the Social Security Board, State plans for aid to the blind.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, after line 16, to insert:

STATE PLANS FOR AID TO THE BLIND

SEC. 1002. (a) A State plan for aid to the blind must (1) provide that it shall be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State, and, if administered by them, be mandatory upon them; (2) provide for financial participation by the State; (3) either provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to administer the plan, or provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to supervise the administration of the plan; (4) provide for granting to any individual, whose claim for aid is denied, an opportunity for a fair hearing before such State agency; (5) provide such methods of administration (other than those relating to selection, tenure of office, and compensation of personnel) as are found by the Board to be necessary for the efficient operation of the plan; (6) provide that the State agency will make such reports, in such form and containing such information as the Board may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as the Board may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports; and (7) provide that no aid will be furnished any individual under the plan with respect to any period with respect to which he is receiving old-age assistance under the State plan approved under section 2 of this act.

(b) The Board shall approve any plan which fulfills the conditions specified in subsection (a), except that it shall not approve any plan which imposes, as a condition of eligibility for aid to the blind under the plan—

(1) Any residence requirement which excludes any resident of the State who has resided therein 5 years during the 9 years immediately preceding the application for aid and has resided therein continuously for 1 year immediately preceding the application; or

(2) Any citizenship requirement which excludes any citizen of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 69, to insert:

PAYMENT TO STATES

SEC. 1003. (a) From the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan for aid to the blind, for each quarter, beginning with the quarter commencing July 1, 1935, (1) an amount, which shall be used exclusively as aid to the blind, equal to one-half of the total of the sums expended during such quarter as aid to the blind under the State plan with respect to each individual who is permanently blind and is not an inmate of a public institution, not counting so much of such expenditure with respect to any individual for any month as exceeds $30, and (2) 5 percent of such amount, which shall be used for paying the costs of administering the State plan or for aid to the blind, or both, and for no other purpose.

(b) The method of computing and paying such amounts shall be as follows:

(1) The Board shall, prior to the beginning of each quarter, estimate the amount to be paid to the State for such quarter under the provisions of clause (1) of subsection (a), such estimate to be based on (A) a report filed by the State containing its estimate of the total sum to be expended in such quarter in accordance with the provisions of such clause, and stating the amount appropriated or made available by the State and its political subdivisions for such expenditures in such quarter, and if such amount is less than one-half of the total sum of such estimated expenditures, the source or sources from which the difference is expected to be derived, (B) records showing the number of permanently blind individuals in the State, and (C) such other investigation as the Board may find necessary.

(2) The Board shall then certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount so estimated by the Board, reduced or increased, as the case may be, by any sum by which it finds that its estimate for any prior quarter was greater or less than the amount which should have been paid to the State under clause (1) of subsection (a) for such quarter, except to the extent that such sum has been applied to make the amount certified for any prior quarter greater or less than the amount estimated by the Board for such prior quarter.

(3) The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon, through the Division of Disbursement of the Treasury Department and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, pay to the State at the time or times fixed by the Board, the amount so certified, increased by 5 percent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 71, to insert:

OPERATION OF STATE PLANS

SEC. 1004. In the case of any State plan for aid to the blind which has been approved by the Board, if the Board, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of such plan, finds—

(1) that the plan has been so changed as to impose any residence or citizenship requirement prohibited by section 1002 (b), or that in the administration of the plan any such prohibited requirement is imposed, with the knowledge of such State agency, in a substantial number of cases; or

(2) that in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with any provision required by section 1002 (a) to be included in the plan—

the Board shall notify such State agency that further payments will not be made to the State until the Board is satisfied that such prohibited requirement is no longer so imposed, and that there is no longer any such failure to comply. Until it is so satisfied it shall make no further certification to the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, after line 21, to insert:

ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 1005. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $30,000 for all necessary expenses of the Board in administering the provisions of this title.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, after line 2, to insert:

DEFINITION

SEC. 1006. When used in this title, the term "aid to the blind" means money payments to permanently blind individuals.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the amendment beginning on page 72, after line 6, being title XI.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. LONERGAN] is interested in this matter, and I have agreed to let that amendment go over. I ask that that amendment be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask to which amendment the Senator refers.

Mr. HARRISON. The amendment on page 72, beginning with line 7. I refer to all of title XI, with reference to annuity bonds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator ask that the entire title shall be passed over?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; the entire title with reference to annuity bonds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 80, line 5, after the word "title", to strike out "X" and insert "XII", so as to make the heading read:

Title XII—General Provisions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, line 7, after the word "section", to strike "1001" and insert "1201", so as to read:

SEC. 1201. (a) When used in this act—

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Rules and Regulations", on page 81, line 18, to change the section number from 1002 to 1202.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Separability", on page 82, line 2, to change the section number from 1003 to 1203.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Reservation of Power", on page 82, line 8, to change the section number from 1004 to 1204.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Short Title", on page 82, line 11, after the word "Sec.", to strike out "1005" and insert "1205", so as to read:

SEC. 1205. This act may be cited as the "Social Security Act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I told several Senators that we should complete consideration of the committee amendments today. I wonder if any Senator desires to speak on the bill. I notice the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] is not in the Chamber at the moment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, is the offering of other amendments in order at this time?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] has an amendment with reference to those who are blind, to which amendment personally I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from New York send his amendment to the desk?

Mr. WAGNER. Will the Chair indulge me for a moment?

PARDONS AND PAROLES

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I read with interest an article appearing in the Baltimore Sun of its issue of June 13, 1935, by Mr. Frank R. Kent, one of the able writers of the present day. In fact, his comments on current public events are so trenchant that we might call him a modern Ambrose Bierce. He is not prodigal with his praise, but he has an article respecting parole abuse to which some attention should be directed.

The article by Frank R. Kent begins as follows:

There are other things besides politics in this country, and once in a while it pays to get excited about them. As to some, such as the stern attitude of the authorities toward habitual criminals, nearly all decent citizens find themselves in accord.

For example, however strongly one may feel about the new deal generally and the conflict of Mr. Roosevelt's policies with the Constitution in particular, few persons will fail to applaud—if they notice it—the trenchant telegram sent by the President to his Attorney General on the subject of the prisoner parole system. It hit the nail right on the head.

In that telegram Mr. Roosevelt accurately sensed and vigorously expressed the feeling of a great many people who had read with shocked indignation that both the confirmed criminals involved in the Weyerhaeuser kidnaping case had been paroled by State boards of parole, judges, and governors—one of them twice.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I call the attention of the Senator from Arizona, in the same connection, to the fact that John Dillinger was paroled in May 1933, when he was serving a 1- to 30-year sentence, and was on parole when he perpetrated his entire conspiracy of crime upon the American people.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I merely desire to put a little word in the RECORD since there is such general public and Senatorial condemnation of paroles. In my State we have paroled, I think, 1,500 persons from the penitentiary, and out of the 1,500 we had one who committed an alleged infraction of the law, and that one alleged infraction could not be proved.

I wish to say further, for the benefit of the wise scribes who write in the newspapers, with respect to this public condemnation of paroles, that the penitentiaries are now finding themselves with from two to three times the number of occupants they had in normal times. It is a crime in this country to break and enter into in the nighttime in most States. It is a crime to break and enter. A man who puts his hand through a glass show case and takes some candy out of the case, or a loaf of bread out of the case, is guilty of a penitentiary offense in nearly all the States. There has been such an increase of those convicted of such offenses that whereas in Louisiana there were 1,500 convicts in the penitentiary when I became Governor of that State, when I left the governorship there were 3,000 convicts. There were added that many convicts in 4 years' time.

When I became Governor of Louisiana I had the idea that we were going to rigidly, with fire and water, enforce the law and let nobody get out of the penitentiary by means of parole, but after a while we found that something had to be done about the situation. Some of the students who speak against paroles might look into conditions and see what has become of those who are kept in the penitentiary for 10 years. If a man shows the elements of reform in him, it is a great deal better to let him out in a year's time or in a few months' time than to keep him in the penitentiary for 10 years and make a sure criminal out of him. At some time I will devote a few minutes to giving some of the results of my personal studies into this question.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the able Senator said at some time he will devote some moments to making a study of this question.

Mr. LONG. No; to giving what I have learned from a study of this question.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not quite know how to interpret the Senator's remarks. I do not wish to be understood as taking the attitude of a ferocious person who wishes men imprisoned for long terms for slight offenses. I ask, however, can any Senator be oblivious to the fact that society is now engaged in a desperate warfare against gangland and the underworld? Mr. Kent's article, when it shall be read in full tomorrow, will show that he himself is not in favor of the cruel or brutal enforcement of any law or the imprisonment of any man about whose criminal record and guilt there can be any doubt; but surely my able friend from Louisiana must know—he has too pungent an intellect to fail to know—that the ordinary criminal does not fear conviction. The criminal thinks that, with the aid of what we call the "sob sisters", those who send flowers to the criminal instead of to the surviving relatives of the deceased whom he slew, he will escape just punishment. So I submit that there should be commendation of Mr. Kent's idea that the President is correct when he points out that there has been a laxity and slackness in enforcing the criminal laws, and that many, if not most, of gangland's members are paroled or pardoned ex-convicts.

I believe in the reclamation of persons. I do not want to have the Senator derive the idea that I am at all ferocious about this matter, but he ought to recognize that this country has on its hands a war as desperate as any that could be fought to try to subdue gangsters and kidnapers. In view of the debate, I ask that the entire article by Mr. Kent be printed at this point in the RECORD if I may secure such permission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From the Baltimore Sun of June 13, 1935]

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By Frank R. Kent

THE PAROLE ABUSE

WASHINGTON, June 12.—There are other things besides politics in this country, and once in a while it pays to get excited about them. As to some, such as the stern attitude of the authorities toward habitual criminals, nearly all decent citizens find themselves in accord.

For example, however strongly one may feel about the new deal generally and the conflict of Mr. Roosevelt's policies with the Constitution in particular, few persons will fail to applaud—if they notice it—the trenchant telegram sent by the President to his Attorney General on the subject of the prisoner-parole system. It hit the nail right on the head.

In that telegram Mr. Roosevelt accurately sensed and vigorously expressed the feeling of a great many people who had read with shocked indignation that both the confirmed criminals involved in the Weyerhaeuser kidnaping case had been paroled by State boards of parole, judges and governors—one of them twice. The theory of the parole system is that it can be mercifully used to release, provisionally, prisoners with good records, incarcerated for the less serious crimes, and who can be reasonably expected to go straight. It was never intended to give freedom to the incorrigibly vicious or provide opportunity for the irredeemably bad to commit further criminal acts.

The unfortunate fact is that it has not worked out according to theory. On the contrary, a perfectly amazing proportion of the murders, kidnapings, hold-ups, and more violent and detestable crimes are committed by paroled prisoners. Students of the facts agree that the most depraved and desperate of the gang leaders and racketeers in the larger cities have at one time or another been released on paroles. Some of them have remarkable records of crimes, convictions, short terms of imprisonment, and consistent paroles in State after State. Admittedly, the system has operated for the benefit of criminals in a way far from the intention of its sponsors.

The explanation lies in a combination of soft-headed welfare workers, crooked criminal lawyers, and venal politicians. In some States lucky enough to have a first-grade man as Governor the parole commissioner or board is also first grade and the abuse of the system is kept at a minimum. In others, where the gubernatorial material is low grade, the parole authorities are purely political, the abuse is terrific, and the danger to the community great. In such States as soon as a man with gang affiliations is convicted his lawyer starts working for parole. A certain amount of attention is paid to the "build up" so as to forestall inconvenient opposition from the uplifters. Doctors' certificates as to the failing health of the convict are procured. Staged performances of the starving wife, mother, and children are rehearsed. The deep repentance of the prisoner is portrayed.

Sometimes this heart-throb stuff can be entirely dispensed with and the lawyer gain his parole wholly through political pressure and a little money spent in the right place. Sometimes the synthetic pathos is an essential part of the game. In any event, with the right lawyer and a little cash, paroles in many States are as easy to get as a bad cold. The pregnant fact is that often they are easier for the habitual criminal with outside gang connections than for the first offender, who has made one mistake and would likely not make another if given a "break."

The former has the advantage of the crooked lawyer, who knows the tricks. In an incredibly short time such a lawyer can get his man "sprung" and a potential murderer or kidnaper is loose in the land. That sort of thing is happening in State after State, day after day, and it is not easy to exaggerate the evil thereof. It was at the abuse of the system and not at the system that President Roosevelt struck in his telegram. As he said, every decent citizen is interested in a humane parole system, but the extent to which an alliance between the crooked lawyer and the crooked politician, aided by sappish social workers, have stretched it, constitutes a public menace. In placing himself forcefully behind the drive of the Department of Justice to stiffen the parole officials, the President has done a fine thing. The hope is that he will not let the impetus he has given the movement slacken short of results.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I merely wish to say to my friend from Arizona that I am very mindful of his comprehensive knowledge of this question, and also of his good intentions and his good-heartedness; but, since so much is being said by my friend from Michigan and the Senator from Arizona, I want to say that I cannot help but have a charity for people in the penitentiary when I know so many others who ought to be in the penitentiary in this day and time, when I know that most of those who have observed the ordinary course of government feel as John Wesley felt, who, when they were carrying some man through the streets to hang him, said, "But for the grace of God, there goes John Wesley."

Mr. ASHURST. Was not that John Bunyan?

Mr. LONG. No.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It was John Wesley.

Mr. LONG. Now both Senators are in argument, but that is all right.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. Just a moment. Those of us who have observed law enforcement since prohibition and since it has been repealed have come to find out that the matter of law, I regret to say, is, to a large extent, who you are and where you are and how you are. If I may do so, I will at a later time take up many provisions of the Constitution and the laws of this country, and I will show open and admitted violation of the criminal statutes, while men are held in the penitentiaries for minor infractions of some law and are pointed out as despicable characters, threatening the safety of the people. All the people in the "pen" are not gangsters; the gangsters are only a smaller part of them. In Louisiana we have practically no such thing as gang warfare. There was not a bank robber in the city of New Orleans or in the State whom we did not capture, and none of them have been pardoned and none of them have been paroled. But most of the people in the penitentiary are very much like the 10 niggers whom they captured in Richmond Parish, I think it was, in Louisiana, who killed one $2 yearling and barbecued the yearling, and the 10 niggers were sent to the penitentiary for one $2 yearling. Yet we do not take up a case, of which we all have knowledge, of one using the Government printing facilities or stamps.

Go to the penitentiary and I will guarantee it will be found that many postmasters are in the "pen" right now who did not steal over 50 cents' worth of stamps or over $5 worth; but, nonetheless, we, gentlemen of the Senate—and I acknowledge, let me say, that I am a part of the body corporate—have allowed one of our illustrious men flagrantly to violate the law to the extent of many thousand dollars and yet extol him as one of eminent virtue and capacity, to be emulated by our sons and our daughters. So while we are discussing these poor devils who are in the "pen" think rather charitably, gentlemen of the Senate, lest somebody might accuse us of not enforcing the law against our elders in this Government.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not think that the repetition of the insinuations that a high Government officer has stolen stamps should be passed unnoticed. I understand the Senator from Arizona expects to make some comment upon the subject.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. But I do not feel that the Senator from Louisiana has any justification for that statement. I feel that he is offensive to everyone in the Senate, except himself, when he makes that statement, and generally to people who believe in decency in government.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I did not seek a controversy with the Senator from Louisiana; I do not seek it now; and I doubt if I shall be forgiven for consuming the Senate's time at this juncture——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. LONG. I want to state that I have not during this morning hour used the words "stolen stamps." Of course, that is the only definition that might be given to it, but I wanted to be very judicial and courteous in my remarks this morning. The Senator from Arkansas puts that interpretation on the matter, and, of course, I agree that he is probably justified in it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, that is just the point I am making. The Senator from Louisiana uses language such as he did employ, and then he is surprised if anyone takes offense at it.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Do I understand it now to be said that it is not true that Mr. Farley printed some special stamps for his friends?

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator understands the English language he must understand me to say that when he charges that Mr. Farley stole stamps it is untrue in every sense of the word, and the Senator from Louisiana knows it it untrue.

Mr. LONG. I have stated the facts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona continue to yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield for a question.

Mr. LONG. I have not very much money, but I will go outside of this building now and make the statement——

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I make the point of order the Senator from Arizona has no right to yield the floor except for a question, and the Senator from Louisiana cannot make speeches on extraneous matter in the time of the Senator from Arizona.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained. The Senator from Arizona has the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not intend to be maneuvered by the Senator from Louisiana or any other person into such a position that it could be said of me that I am anxious to have men imprisoned for slight and transient causes for what sometimes are called casual, almost "accidental" offenses. The Senator from Louisiana is either disingenuous or oblivious to information if he fails to perceive that this country now and for some years has engaged in a teriffic effort to protect innocent persons who are obeying the law and occupying places where they have a right to be.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I only ask the Senator to yield for one question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I hope the Senator did not understand me to make any such statement. I had understood that I was entirely in accord with everything the Senator from Arizona had said. I did not understand that there was any difference between us.

Mr. ASHURST. The gravamen of the Senator's speech was that he made an insinuation, if not a direct charge, against absent persons who, under our rules and under the Constitution, are unable to reply. I want the Senator from Louisiana to understand that I am not adopting the attitude of a censor; I am not trying to correct somebody else; possibly I need correction as much as any Senator here; but, in view of the Senator's charge, I feel a disposition this morning to say that if we walk on the seacoast after a storm at sea has subsided, particularly if the storm was of such violence as to agitate the ocean to an unusual depth and send huge billows upon the shore, we discover curious denizens of the deep from the world of cold and dreadful night below the ocean's surface, that have been upthrust and cast ashore by the fury of the storm. We find wriggling on the beach, crustacea, such as crawfish, shrimps, mudcrabs, and lobsters; among the fish we find the grunt, puffer, pike, topknot, toadfish, jellyfish, kingfish, starfish, sawfish, stingray, and, indeed, too great a variety of types to admit of a complete definition.

When the sea is calm and tranquil these creatures seldom appear to human vision. Only some unusual agitation brings them from obscurity to conspicuousness.

Mr. President, the same physical principle operates on mankind when the distress of depression, the fury of financial panic and storm, and the terror of economic uncertainty agitates a people. We then are no longer the assured, free-swimming, self-reliant folk we seemed to be when the waters of life were smooth and placid. This law of physics is not peculiar to the American race alone. To all tribes of men, when confronted with any insecurity, whether it be economic, environmental, social, or philosophical, there come dangerous thoughts, feelings, and fears, and thus some men usually called "odd fish", are forced to the surface from the swamps of anonymity.

Many of such men thus projected to conspicuousness are excellent men who believe that they know how to reach the pot of gold at the rainbow's end; how to obtain a living in this practical, brass-tack, workaday world without giving any equivalent therefor; or how to break economic laws and avoid any penalty.

Thus, in these agitated and distressful days, we must expect to encounter whimsical, droll, eccentric, and erratic persons who occupy the stage for a time, and they, at least, divert us, interest us, entertain us, and, I am bound in fairness to add, they sometimes instruct us. Their fatal error is that they refuse to face the fact that only iron sacrifice can rescue a nation from a depression; they never realize that no easy way to achieve success has ever been, or ever will be discovered. It was ordained at the beginning of time that success shall be difficult. No one will ever circumvent destiny on that point, for she has resolved that, in obtaining success, man shall be put upon his mettle until the end of the film. In these recurrent depressions and times of poignant distress, wise and well-balanced men are sometimes confused and saddened and lose track of the simplicity of the rules of life. Moreover, we have complicated our existence to the point where it not only stupefies the ordinary man but defies the comprehension of the wisest man.

In such a whirligig epoch as the present many persons, in normal times sensible, become overwrought and unjustly suspect and defame such of their fellow citizens as do not subscribe to their particular reforms or gyrations.

Therefore, the suspiciousness of the Senator from Louisiana and his intolerant attitude toward and his denunciations of his colleagues, are quite understandable.

Such strictures, reproaches, and intemperate speeches from the Senator from Louisiana are really the wailings of an apostle of despair. He has lost control of himself. He is trying to play billiards with elliptical billiard balls and a spiral cue. He has adopted the apothegm of the French dramatist, Beaumarchais: "Calumniate, calumniate, calumniate; something is sure to stick."

Opulent with irony as are all human affairs, it is a startling paradox that in this particular period of the world's history, when to this generation has been given the keys that control the kingdom of the material sciences, this generation has lost control of itself. This paradox may be placed side by side with those other paradoxes, to wit, that the doctors are much more likely to die of disease than are their patients; that lawyers are more likely to lose their own cases than they are to lose their clients' cases.

Our American race in its hurry to achieve bulk, size, speed, and quantity has learned just enough to weaken our reliance upon tested, durable things; enough to relax our grasp upon durable values, but has found nothing to take the place of the fundamental truths that we have ignored.

Robert Burns, during a flash of his shining genius, wrote in his Address to the Unco Guid, or in his Address to a Louse, I do not for the moment remember which:

> Oh, wad some power the giftie us to see ourselves as others see us.

Among the many instruments, gadgets, and devices brought forth by the present generation which has tickled the physical world and made her laugh forth so many of her hidden secrets is the recent alleged invention—not yet patented—of the curved telescope with phones for audition and photophones attached, wherewith by the compound refraction of the rays of light a person may put this curved telescope to his eye, the auditory phones to his ears, with the photophone attached, stand upon one side of the street, see himself objectively as well as subjectively, and hear and see precisely how he appears to the man across the street. In other words, with the curved telescope and compound refraction of light, we shall see ourselves exactly as others see us.

I shall now take the Senate into my confidence and say that I have been accorded the opportunity of observing myself through this invention. It was not a pleasant experience. After one look I concluded that I would either mend my ways or never again put such a contraption to my eyes.

It is not for me to pass judgment upon the Senator from Louisiana. He has as much right to pass judgment upon me as I have to appraise him. An attitude of censoriousness is the one attitude the Senate never tolerates and never forgives any of its Members, but I will venture the suggestion that if the Senator from Louisiana should look through this telescope objectively, as he doubtless will some day, for he is of an inquiring mind, he will distinctly perceive a man frequently disrespectful of the rights and feelings of others, exalting himself with an unwarranted sense of superiority over others less gifted and less fortunate than himself; a man too often taking undue advantage of his privileged position here; a man of reckless abandon in speech and relentless in his forays upon those who disagree with him.

Aeschylus, the earliest of the three great Greek tragic poets, was born about 500 B. C. When the poet left Athens he took up residence in Sicily. It will be recalled that the eagles in Sicily had a habit at that time of pouncing down upon large turtles; then, after ascending to a considerable height, dropping the turtles upon stones, cracking the shells, and obtaining the turtles' flesh for a meal.

A legend of doubtful authenticity states that Aeschylus was killed by a large turtle which an eagle let fall upon the head of the poet, mistaking the poet's head for a large stone.

I express the hope that the American eagle will not be required to drop something upon the head of the Senator from Louisiana before he takes a hint and recognizes his true relation to the Senate and the country.

Mr. LONG and Mr. HARRISON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi is recognized:

Mr. HARRISON. I offer a proposed unanimous-consent agreement and ask that it may be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed unanimous-consent agreement will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

> I ask unanimous consent that beginning Monday, June 17, at 3 o'clock p. m., no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes on any amendment or motion, or more than once or longer than 30 minutes on the bill H. R. 7260, the so-called "social-security bill."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LONG. I object. Is there objection to my having the floor to reply to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. HARRISON. There are several Senators interested in having this agreement entered into.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before the Senator from Louisiana proceeds, permit me to say that the most important discussion will arise on the amendments. Will not the Senator therefore change the time so as to give the greater length of time on the amendments rather than on the bill itself?

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection to doing that. I think there ought to be some kind of agreement. I modify the agreement so as to provide not more than 30 minutes on any amendment or motion and not longer than 15 minutes on the bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, does the Senator propose at this time to go forward with his efforts or to suspend until the Senator from Louisiana shall have concluded his remarks?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Louisiana has objected. I had been hopeful I might get this matter out of the way.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Mississippi will let me make reply to the Senator from Arizona, and then he probably can get it out of the way.

I desire to acknowledge my gratitude for the special preparation which my friend from Arizona made with regard to me. I would not have given him a chance to read this marvelously concocted written preparation had I not by accident run into the discussion between himself and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. I believe he has me to thank for having brought about the occasion by which his efforts in preparing this eloquent address were not sniped out in some other experiences which might not have given the Senator from Arizona the opportunity to read his carefully prepared statement. I thank the Senator from Arizona for this.

The Senator, however, has his facts a little wrong. He says that during these days of depression, as in the case of all storms, various things are washed up on the sands and on the shores; and he says that among other things washed up, I believe, are the catfish, the crawfish, the kingfish, the barracuda, and other kinds of fish. The kingfish is even a more vicious species of marine life than the barracuda itself, so I am told; but the Senator from Arizona overlooks one thing. There is another species that is washed up on the shores in large numbers, and that is the tadpole. That is the animal that I now wish to bring to the attention of the Senator from Arizona.

The tadpole is a form of life which, during these depressions, goes out and promises one thing and then comes in and does another. That species is far more numerous than the kingfish, the whale, the crawfish, the turtle, or any other form of marine life. If it may please my friend the Senator from Arizona, I shall be glad to have him call to mind that, undertaking to avoid some of the descriptions which he has seen fit to give to the Senate, I have taken the words of our illustrious President for all the course I have followed here; not that he was the first to have made the statement, but I have taken the words of our illustrious President wherein he said that the people of the United States are entitled to share in a redistribution of wealth. Therefore I have used that as my landmark since the political campaign of 1932 ended.

Some few days ago, when we had up one of our important discussions, I was talking to a friend of mine in this body who, during one of his heated campaigns, had sent a telegram, or his office had sent a telegram, saying that he was in favor of such-and-such a bill or such-and-such an issue, and requesting that the fact that he was of that faith be speedily communicated to those interested. The telegram was sent to me, and I discussed it with my friend; and he said to me, "Yes; I suppose that is so." He said, "In the closing days of the campaign, when I am away from my office, and every kind of inquiry is being shot here and yonder, the only safe thing I know to do is to have them all telegraphed that I am in favor of whatever they telegraph for." I could not quarrel with that as being the attitude of some of my colleagues, because in this changing day of political campaigns I can recognize that with perhaps 90 percent of us that is about the only thing we know how to do.

For the benefit of the Senator from Arizona, however, I will state that I am advocating what I advocated at the age of 21. It did not have much support in this body during those days, I am sure. It had little support when I came here. However, it has been advocated by the present President of the United States, and by the ex-President of the United States, and they are all going to be "exes" until they either cease making that promise or some of them see fit to keep it.

SOCIAL SECURITY

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 7260) to provide for the general welfare by establishing a system of Federal old-age benefits, and by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for aged persons, dependent and crippled children, maternal and child welfare, public health, and the administration of their unemployment compensation laws; to establish a Social Security Board; to raise revenue; and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRISON obtained the floor.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from New York withhold offering his amendment until I can ascertain whether or not we can secure an agreement for a limitation of debate?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. LONG. What is the Senator's proposal?

Mr. HARRISON. I have submitted a request for unanimous consent that beginning on Monday at 3 o'clock debate be limited on any amendment—I have changed the time to meet the desire of the Senator from Idaho—to 25 minutes, and 25 minutes on the bill, and that no Senator be permitted to speak more than once on any amendment or on the bill.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair submit the request to the Senate. The Senator from Mississippi submits a request for unanimous consent, which will be stated by the clerk.

The enrolling clerk (William W. Horne) read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that, beginning on Monday, June 17, at 3 o'clock p. m., no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 25 minutes on any amendment or motion, or more than once or longer than 25 minutes on H. R. 7260, the social-security bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I have no desire to delay the passage of this bill at all, but I have a rather important amendment which I desire to discuss on Monday; and while I shall not desire to discuss it very long at any particular time, it is entirely probable that after I shall have discussed the amendment there will be a reply on behalf of the experts who have drafted the bill, and I shall probably desire to speak twice on the bill. Under those circumstances I am constrained to object, without any desire to delay the passage of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from Missouri what he would suggest in lieu of the proposal as submitted. Would a limitation of 45 minutes on the bill and 30 minutes on any amendment that may be offered be agreeable?

Mr. CLARK. That would be entirely agreeable to me so far as the time limit is concerned, except that I might desire to divide up my time. That is the whole question with me.

Mr. HARRISON. Then I should like the proposed agreement changed so that in speaking 45 minutes on the bill a Senator shall not be confined to one speech; that he may divide up the time he speaks on the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the proposed unanimous-consent agreement provides that a Senator may speak once on each amendment and once on the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; that is true.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I suggest that the situation which the Senator from Missouri has in mind might be taken care of by permitting the Senator to use such time as he desires to use on the bill at different intervals and under different recognitions from the Chair, so that if the Senator had a total of 25 minutes on the bill, and desired to speak for 10 minutes, he could reserve the balance of his time.

Mr. CLARK. That arrangement would be entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. HARRISON. Then, I ask unanimous consent that, beginning at 3 o'clock on Monday, no Senator shall speak longer than 25 minutes on any amendment——

Mr. McNARY. No, Mr. President; in view of the absence of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and his previous statement, I suggest that the time of speaking on amendments should be 30 minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well; I ask unanimous consent that beginning at 3 o'clock on Monday, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 30 minutes on any amendment or motion, and that on the bill he shall not speak longer than 45 minutes.

Mr. CONNALLY. That he shall speak only once and not longer than 45 minutes?

Mr. HARRISON. No; I did not say "once" on the bill. That time can be divided up.

Mr. LONG. I think that is all right, with the specific understanding that the 45 minutes can be divided up as one may desire, which will enable one offering an amendment, by speaking under his time on the bill, to make reply.

Mr. HARRISON. Absolutely.

Mr. LONG. I think that is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The agreement as entered into was reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered by unanimous consent, That beginning Monday, June 17, at 3 o'clock p. m., no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 30 minutes on any amendment or motion, and not longer than 45 minutes on the bill H. R. 7260, the social security bill.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I send to the desk three amendments which simply make more flexible the provisions permitting the use of some of the funds provided under this proposed legislation for the benefit of the blind. They are amendments which have been suggested to me by Helen Keller. There is no woman in the country who is more interested in the underprivileged than is that remarkable woman.

I understand that the consideration of these amendments will require a reconsideration of the votes by which the committee amendments were adopted at the respective places.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CONNALLY in the chair). The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that the vote by which title X was adopted may be reconsidered in order that he may offer certain amendments. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

The Senator from New York offers certain amendments which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 72, at the end of line 6, before the period, it is proposed to insert—and money expended for locating blind persons, for providing diagnoses of their eye condition, and for training and employment of the adult blind.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I may say with reference to that amendment that it will require no additional money, but part of the appropriation made in the bill may be used for this purpose. The Association for the Blind have made this request. It seems to me most reasonable, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 67, after line 16, it is proposed to insert:

Of said sum, each year $1,500,000 or such part thereof as shall be necessary shall be used in making payments to States of amounts equal to one-half of the total of the sums expended.

Mr. HARRISON. That carries out the same idea.

Mr. WAGNER. The same idea.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 68, at the end of line 15, it is proposed to insert the following:

(8) provide that money payments to any permanently blind individual will be granted in direct proportion to his need; and (9) contain a definition of blindness and a definition of needy individuals which will meet the approval of the Social Security Board.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Mississippi whether it is agreeable to consider at this time two amendments which I have offered.

Mr. HARRISON. It is.

Mr. WALSH. I submit the amendments, which relate to subparagraph (d) on page 81. The explanation of the amendments will be found on page 8333 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 28, 1935.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendments.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 81, line 12, after the word "Federal", it is proposed to insert the words "or State", and in line 16, after the word "child", it is proposed to insert a period and strike out the words "in violation of the law of a State."

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection to the amendments.

Mr. McNARY. Will the Senator from Massachusetts state the purpose of his amendments?

Mr. WALSH. I will ask the Senator to read with me subsection (d) on page 81, which is under the title of "Definitions":

Nothing in this act shall be construed as authorizing any Federal—

One of the amendments provides for the insertion of the words "or State" in that place, so as to read:

(d) Nothing in this act shall be construed as authorizing any Federal or State official, agent, or representative, in carrying out any of the provisions of this act, to take charge of any child over the objection of either of the parents of such child, or of the person standing in loco parentis to such child, in violation of the law of a State.

The second amendment would strike out the last phrase, "In violation of the law of a State." Some States have no such law. The purpose of the amendments is to conserve the rights of the individual from invasion by State as well as Federal authority.

I may say that the amendments have been presented by representatives of the Christian Science religion, who feel very strongly upon the subject, and I believe many other religious bodies join with them in urging that this protection of the home is an established principle that should be preserved in this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] desires to present a resolution. When that shall have been done, with the approval of the Chairman of the Committee on Finance, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], in charge of the pending business, I shall move an executive session.

Mr. GORE submitted a resolution (S. Res. 152), which appears under the appropriate heading elsewhere in today's RECORD.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, before the Senator from Arkansas moves an executive session will he permit me to submit an amendment to be printed and permit me to make a brief statement, because I am hopeful that the Senator from Mississippi can give some consideration to the matter between now and Monday?

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the particular amendment to which I am asking the Senator from Mississippi to give his attention over the week-end deals with a totally different phase of the problem involved in the security legislation.

The argument advanced as to why we cannot pass old-age pension and unemployment-insurance legislation in the States instead of in the Federal Congress is the argument that if one State should do it, adding, let us say, to the cost of production or manufacture in that State, it would inevitably inure to the advantage of some State which had not enacted similar legislation, and therefore, except as it is done uniformly, it may be done prejudicially. I quite concede that point of view. I wish to know, however, whether the point of view does not carry us further and into the larger unit. This is what I mean: When we passed the late N. R. A. legislation we included a clause providing for more or less automatic tariff readjustment whenever increased costs of production precipitated by the N. R. A. legislation increased the differential between costs of production at home and abroad. When we passed the A. A. A. legislation we included the provision for tariff revision in the event the costs of production were arbitrarily and artificially affected in the fashion indicated.

Apparently in the long run the proposed law may increase, by way of pay-roll additions, the costs of production industrially, in 1940, for example, by a billion six or seven hundred million dollars a year, and in 1945 may increase the costs of production, by way of pay-roll additions, nearly $2,000,000,000.

It seems to me there should be the same automatic provision in the law for readjusting tariff differentials in respect to the differences in the costs of production at home and abroad if, as, and when this demonstrably proves to be true.

There is still a further reason why I think it is important in connection with the proposed legislation. As the Senator from Mississippi well knows, there has been a substantial exodus of American plants to foreign countries during the last decade. Something like 1,800 American industrial institutions now have branch plants abroad. It occurs to me that except as we are somewhat careful in protecting this arbitrary and artificial increase in the costs of production at home against the competitive advantage abroad we may be putting a premium upon the further exodus of American plants into some other jurisdictions where they can escape these particular burdens. In other words, it seems to me that precisely the same argument applies to international competition that applies in respect to interstate competition, and, since we are answering the interstate competition by going to the Federal jurisdiction for our answer, I am submitting an amendment, which I am asking the Senator from Mississippi to consider over the week-end, which would provide an authorized approach to the consideration of offsetting that same differential when it occurs in international trade. I submit the amendment and ask that it be printed, and I will appreciate it if the Senator from Mississippi and his experts will give some consideration to it between now and Monday.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I shall be very glad to give consideration to it. The matter was not brought to the attention of the committee. A similar question was presented in connection with the N. R. A., because it was recognized that there would be increased costs to American producers by virtue of the codes and arrangements which might be made under them. Whether or not because of this tax the costs will be so high as to call for legislation I do not know. I shall be very glad, however, to talk with some of the experts of the Tariff Commission and with others and give the matter consideration.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CONNALLY in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nomination of Margaret C. Henderson to be postmaster at Fair Mount, Ga., in place of Dallas Thompson.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the nomination of John Monroe Johnson, of South Carolina, to be Assistant Secretary of Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nominations will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the calendar is in order.

FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK BOARD

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of John H. Fahey, of Massachusetts, to be a member of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board for a term of 6 years from July 22, 1935.

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask that this nomination go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination will be passed over.

FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Clyde L. Seavey, of California, to be a member of the Federal Power Commission for term expiring June 22, 1940.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters may be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE ARMY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask that the Army nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

JOHN MONROE JOHNSON

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the nomination of John Monroe Johnson to be Assistant Secretary of Commerce has been favorably reported from the Committee on Commerce, and I ask for the immediate consideration of the nomination.

Mr. BLACK. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the nomination will be placed on the executive calendar.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate return to the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate resumed legislative session.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 7982) to amend the Migratory Bird Hunting Stamp Act of March 16, 1934, and certain other acts relating to game and other wildlife, administered by the Department of Agriculture, and for other purposes, and it was signed by the Vice President.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE CAP R. CARDEN

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following resolution from the House of Representatives, which was read:

House Resolution 255

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
June 13, 1935.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. CAP R. CARDEN, a Representative from the State of Kentucky.

Resolved, That a committee of four Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution which I ask to have read and for which I ask present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 153) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. CAP R. CARDEN, late a Representative from the State of Kentucky.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to explain that ordinarily this resolution would carry with it the request for appointment of a committee from the Senate; but inasmuch as the resolution of the House was not messaged to the Senate until this morning, and the funeral of the Representative who died has already been held, the appointment of a Senate committee is not, of course, necessary; and that part of the resolution has been eliminated.

Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative, I move that the Senate do now take a recess until 12 o'clock meridian on Monday next.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, June 17, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate June 15 (legislative day of May 13), 1935

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF COMMERCE

John Monroe Johnson, of South Carolina, to be Assistant Secretary of Commerce, vice Ewing Y. Mitchell.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

Dr. John W. Cronin to be Assistant Surgeon in the United States Public Health Service, to take effect from date of oath.

NATIONAL EMERGENCY COUNCIL

Frank C. Walker, of New York, to be Executive Director of the National Emergency Council.

The following-named persons to be State directors, National Emergency Council:

Jerome F. Sears, for California.

Sveinbjorn Johnson, for Illinois.

Frank H. Foy, for Massachusetts.

Charles J. Hardy, for New York.

John Galleher, for Virginia.

CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS

Howard W. Oxley, of New York, to be director of C. C. C. camp education.

Silas M. Ransopher, of New York, to be assistant director of C. C. C. camp education.

POSTMASTERS

ALABAMA

Otis B. Hunter to be postmaster at Boaz, Ala., in place of J. D. Pruett. Incumbent's commission expired March 22, 1934.

Chalmers W. Hyatt to be postmaster at Guntersville, Ala., in place of J. H. Walls. Incumbent's commission expired April 15, 1934.

Byron F. Watson to be postmaster at Lincoln, Ala., in place of W. L. Hollingsworth. Incumbent's commission expired January 23, 1935.

Gordon G. Stimpson to be postmaster at Daphne, Ala. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Ludwig Lindoerfer to be postmaster at Elberta, Ala. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Blanche Hendon to be postmaster at Townley, Ala. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

David G. Pearce to be postmaster at Vina, Ala. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Maurice W. Holmes to be postmaster at Vinemont, Ala. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Jesse B. Robinson, Jr., to be postmaster at Waverly, Ala. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

ARKANSAS

Lucie H. McDonnell to be postmaster at Altheimer, Ark., in place of R. A. Dickey, resigned.

Frank Welch to be postmaster at Carlisle, Ark., in place of F. E. Marble. Incumbent's commission expired December 18, 1934.

Clement C. Bowen to be postmaster at Osceola, Ark., in place of A. B. Smith. Incumbent's commission expired February 5, 1935.

Albert S. Snowden to be postmaster at Paragould, Ark., in place of J. H. McPherson. Incumbent's commission expired December 16, 1934.

Elbert R. Winton to be postmaster at Piggott, Ark., in place of H. C. Robbins. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1935.

James H. Carnahan to be postmaster at Prairie Grove, Ark., in place of R. B. Cox. Incumbent's commission expired January 22, 1935.

Max B. Wurz to be postmaster at Bigelow, Ark. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

John W. Page to be postmaster at Dover, Ark. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

William F. Price to be postmaster at Evening Shade, Ark. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Andrew J. Clemmons to be postmaster at Grady, Ark. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Leo C. Russell to be postmaster at Lamar, Ark. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

John L. Hyde to be postmaster at Tillar, Ark. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Leila B. Lynch to be postmaster at Weiner, Ark. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Ernest A. Stockburger to be postmaster at West Fork, Ark. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

CALIFORNIA

William E. Emick to be postmaster at Temple City, Calif., in place of F. W. Brinker, resigned.

David Angus Vogt to be postmaster at Bridgeport, Calif. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Harrison P. Gower to be postmaster at Death Valley, Calif. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Walter Neipp to be postmaster at Earp, Calif. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Harry R. Wendelken to be postmaster at Idyllwild, Calif. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Edythe C. McGowan to be postmaster at Julian, Calif. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Dudley Wakefield to be postmaster at Moffet Field, Calif. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Flora E. Dahl to be postmaster at Mokelumne Hill, Calif. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Elvin M. Mitchler to be postmaster at Murphys, Calif. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Hetty C. Bryans to be postmaster at Pixley, Calif. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Elizabeth M. Taylor to be postmaster at Tulelake, Calif. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Myrtle M. Knouse to be postmaster at Westminster, Calif. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

John F. Wallahan to be postmaster at Yermo, Calif. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

COLORADO

N. George Parsons to be postmaster at Central City, Colo., in place of H. J. Stahl. Incumbent's commission expired January 23, 1935.

Frank P. January to be postmaster at Cheyenne Wells, Colo., in place of E. R. Quinn. Incumbent's commission expired December 18, 1934.

Robert R. Lawson to be postmaster at Grover, Colo. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Derrett C. Smith to be postmaster at Kim, Colo. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Mary E. Dermody to be postmaster at Strasburg, Colo. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Leona E. Backus to be postmaster at Two Buttes, Colo. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

CONNECTICUT

John W. Morris to be postmaster at Canaan, Conn., in place of W. J. Reel. Incumbent's commission expired January 22, 1935.

Frederick C. Flynn to be postmaster at Thomaston, Conn., in place of Harry Muir, deceased.

FLORIDA

John W. Watson to be postmaster at Fort Meade, Fla., in place of C. D. Prine, resigned.

Mary B. McCormick to be postmaster at La Belle, Fla., in place of R. V. Hedges, resigned.

Frank W. Dole to be postmaster at Fellsmere, Fla. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Bernice Parham to be postmaster at Lacoochee, Fla. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Oscar C. McDaniel to be postmaster at Sneads, Fla. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Amanda H. Richards to be postmaster at Wewahitchka, Fla. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

GEORGIA

Afley M. Cherry to be postmaster at Donalsonville, Ga., in place of A. M. Cherry. Incumbent's commission expired March 2, 1935.

Andrew J. Trulock to be postmaster at Climax, Ga. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Leila W. Maxwell to be postmaster at Danville, Ga. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Bennie Leviton to be postmaster at Fargo, Ga. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Augustus B. Mitcham, Jr., to be postmaster at Hampton, Ga. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Edward A. Barnett to be postmaster at Leary, Ga. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Elizabeth S. Maxwell to be postmaster at Lexington, Ga. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

George H. Ray to be postmaster at Norwood, Ga. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

George S. Thompson to be postmaster at Odum, Ga. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Isaac F. Arnow to be postmaster at St. Marys, Ga. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Sara W. Bulloch to be postmaster at Ochlochee, Ga. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

HAWAII

Julia Smythe to be postmaster at Haiku, Hawaii, in place of W. I. Wells, resigned.

Lemon W. Holt to be postmaster at Kahului, Hawaii, in place of A. H. Silva, Jr. Incumbent's commission expired February 14, 1935.

Dick C. Pang to be postmaster at Kamuela, Hawaii. Office became Presidential July 1, 1933.

Lee Loon to be postmaster at Pahala, Hawaii, in place of Lee Loon. Incumbent's commission expired February 20, 1935.

IDAHO

Arvene J. Boyle to be postmaster at Blackfoot, Idaho, in place of Osmond Buchanan. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1935.

Hastings Brown to be postmaster at Kamiah, Idaho, in place of C. C. Henderson, resigned.

Carl A. Rohrman to be postmaster at Culdesac, Idaho. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Marie E. Roos to be postmaster at Weippe, Idaho. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

ILLINOIS

Rose E. Gorman to be postmaster at Farmersville, Ill., in place of J. F. Gilman. Incumbent's commission expired December 20, 1934.

Leslie H. Ullrich to be postmaster at Kenilworth, Ill., in place of D. S. Crooks. Incumbent's commission expired March 8, 1934.

Edwin G. Stifle to be postmaster at Robinson, Ill., in place of F. A. Meskimen, resigned.

Otto F. Young to be postmaster at Stonington, Ill., in place of F. E. Tinker, resigned.

George H. Widmayer to be postmaster at Virginia, Ill., in place of L. O. Bingham. Incumbent's commission expired December 18, 1934.

James Fay Carr to be postmaster at Wauconda, Ill., in place of M. W. Hughes. Incumbent's commission expired April 2, 1934.

Herbert L. O'Connell to be postmaster at Wilmette, Ill., in place of J. E. Shantz. Incumbent's commission expired December 18, 1934.

Marsel F. Snook to be postmaster at Cutler, Ill. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Jessie M. Hickman to be postmaster at Good Hope, Ill. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Wayman R. Presley to be postmaster at Makanda, Ill. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Grace Hiller to be postmaster at Ogden, Ill. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Mansford W. Blackard to be postmaster at Omaha, Ill. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Earl A. Hill to be postmaster at Woodlawn, Ill. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

INDIANA

Stanley P. Nelson to be postmaster at Auburn, Ind., in place of C. O. Krise, removed.

Samuel O. McCarty to be postmaster at Carthage, Ind., in place of Pearle Coffin. Incumbent's commission expired December 18, 1934.

Philip L. Macklin to be postmaster at Decatur, Ind., in place of L. A. Graham. Incumbent's commission expired February 6, 1935.

Elnora Root to be postmaster at Hagerstown, Ind., in place of C. F. Porter. Incumbent's commission expired May 29, 1934.

Anna M. Records to be postmaster at Lawrence, Ind., in place of M. B. Staley. Incumbent's commission expired February 14, 1935.

Thomas E. Christman to be postmaster at Wabash, Ind., in place of Arthur Tomson. Incumbent's commission expired February 25, 1935.

Joel G. Barnes to be postmaster at Waldron, Ind., in place of Othor Wood, resigned.

William H. Bradshaw to be postmaster at Carbon, Ind. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Clarence T. Custer to be postmaster at Dupont, Ind. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Evan G. Moreland to be postmaster at Hymera, Ind. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Iva S. Turmail to be postmaster at Vallonia, Ind. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

IOWA

Eunice Hamilton to be postmaster at Bedford, Iowa, in place of J. M. Hamilton, deceased.

John H. Schulte to be postmaster at Breda, Iowa, in place of A. H. Ricke. Incumbent's commission expired December 20, 1934.

Glenn C. Teeter to be postmaster at La Porte City, Iowa, in place of George Banger. Incumbent's commission expired January 22, 1935.

William F. Gaddis to be postmaster at Lovilia, Iowa, in place of S. F. O'Bryan. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1935.

Bessie E. Sykes to be postmaster at Maynard, Iowa, in place of Purley Jennison. Incumbent's commission expired December 18, 1933.

Gay S. Morgan to be postmaster at Milton, Iowa, in place of M. E. Atkins. Incumbent's commission expired January 22, 1935.

Clara L. Chansky to be postmaster at Solon, Iowa, in place of A. M. Beck. Incumbent's commission expired December 20, 1934.

John Hynek to be postmaster at Tama, Iowa, in place of S. C. Nelson. Incumbent's commission expired February 25, 1935.

William A. Fiester to be postmaster at Brandon, Iowa. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Thelma Allen to be postmaster at Harris, Iowa. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

John L. Harrison to be postmaster at Hornick, Iowa. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

John R. Willmott to be postmaster at Oto, Iowa. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Arend Balster, Jr., to be postmaster at Scotch Grove, Iowa. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

KANSAS

David Earl Moore to be postmaster at Dexter, Kans., in place of W. D. Hale. Incumbent's commission expired January 23, 1935.

James H. Sandifer to be postmaster at Eldorado, Kans., in place of W. B. Morris. Incumbent's commission expired December 18, 1934.

John E. Hartsell to be postmaster at Oxford, Kans., in place of J. F. Oliver. Incumbent's commission expired December 18, 1934.

John L. A. Wainscott to be postmaster at Hazelton, Kans. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Helen M. Collins to be postmaster at Lenexa, Kans. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Erwin E. Lewerenz to be postmaster at Lincolnville, Kans. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Clyde Williams to be postmaster at Preston, Kans. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Henry F. Dodson to be postmaster at South Haven, Kans. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Milo R. Housh to be postmaster at Winchester, Kans. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

KENTUCKY

James R. Wilson to be postmaster at Auburn, Ky., in place of E. L. Peairson. Incumbent's commission expired December 20, 1934.

Ray Flowers to be postmaster at Columbia, Ky., in place of M. C. Winfrey. Incumbent's commission expired December 18, 1934.

Henry S. Bogan to be postmaster at Franklin, Ky., in place of J. G. Leak. Incumbent's commission expired January 13, 1935.

Jerry D. Shain to be postmaster at Madisonville, Ky., in place of W. W. Crick. Incumbent's commission expired February 14, 1935.

Lawrence W. Hager to be postmaster at Owensboro, Ky., in place of O. L. Greer. Incumbent's commission expired December 18, 1934.

Addie F. Owens to be postmaster at Russell Springs, Ky., in place of D. C. Hopper, removed.

Robert S. Welch to be postmaster at Scottsville, Ky., in place of H. E. Dixon. Incumbent's commission expired December 18, 1932.

Walter B. Carvell to be postmaster at Allensville, Ky. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Dycie B. Chism to be postmaster at Camp Taylor, Ky. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Martin S. Bowne to be postmaster at Clearfield, Ky. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

William R. Sizemore to be postmaster at Hyden, Ky. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Pearl Parsley to be postmaster at Inez, Ky. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Victor B. Stephens to be postmaster at Stanton, Ky. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Louise N. Chaney to be postmaster at Woodburn, Ky. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

MAINE

Joseph M. Mountain to be postmaster at Dexter, Maine, in place of W. E. Slater. Incumbent's commission expired January 22, 1935.

Earle B. Files to be postmaster at Gorham, Maine, in place of F. E. Hoyt. Incumbent's commission expired December 20, 1934.

William D. Hay to be postmaster at Kennebunk, Maine, in place of R. A. Evans, removed.

Edith B. Holden to be postmaster at Oakfield, Maine. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

MARYLAND

Margaret T. Johnson to be postmaster at College Park, Md., in place of M. T. Johnson. Incumbent's commission expired March 8, 1934.

W. John Einwachter to be postmaster at Perry Point, Md., in place of Harry Bodein, resigned.

Howard Raymond Hamilton to be postmaster at Cardiff, Md. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Francis H. Blake to be postmaster at Sparks, Md. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

MASSACHUSETTS

John H. Gilboy to be postmaster at East Brookfield, Mass., in place of H. L. Green. Incumbent's commission expired April 22, 1934.

James R. Mansfield to be postmaster at Haydenville, Mass., in place of F. L. Smith. Incumbent's commission expired April 2, 1934.

John F. Mack to be postmaster at Housatonic, Mass., in place of C. D. Thatcher, resigned.

Genevieve V. Dion to be postmaster at Linwood, Mass., in place of D. E. Chase, deceased.

Alliston S. Barstow to be postmaster at Marshfield, Mass., in place of A. S. Barstow. Incumbent's commission expired December 16, 1933.

Frank C. Sheridan to be postmaster at Maynard, Mass., in place of William Stockwell. Incumbent's commission expired January 22, 1935.

Robert H. Howes to be postmaster at Southboro, Mass., in place of R. H. Howes. Incumbent's commission expired January 23, 1935.

Helen K. Hoxie to be postmaster at Sunderland, Mass., in place of H. K. Hoxie. Incumbent's commission expired February 25, 1935.

William J. Bell to be postmaster at Warren, Mass., in place of J. W. Keith. Incumbent's commission expired March 18, 1934.

Sara H. Jones to be postmaster at West Barnstable, Mass., in place of S. H. Jones. Incumbent's commission expired April 15, 1934.

William E. Brennan to be postmaster at Whitman, Mass., in place of J. L. Hatchfield, transferred.

James F. Healy to be postmaster at Worcester, Mass., in place of J. F. Healy. Incumbent's commission expired January 22, 1935.

Chestina B. Robbins to be postmaster at East Templeton, Mass. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Enlo A. Perham to be postmaster at Tyngsboro, Mass. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

MICHIGAN

Edward Kott to be postmaster at Center Line, Mich., in place of Martin Donahue, removed.

Dennis E. Kelleher to be postmaster at Fenton, Mich., in place of E. E. Yerdon. Incumbent's commission expired December 18, 1934.

Roger J. Tobin to be postmaster at Channing, Mich. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

James A. McDonald to be postmaster at Detour, Mich. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

William J. Putnam to be postmaster at Goodrich, Mich. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

David G. Bernard to be postmaster at Hale, Mich. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Etta V. Schram to be postmaster at Lincoln, Mich. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

William M. Hankerd to be postmaster at Munith, Mich. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Frank L. Brighenti to be postmaster at Ramsay, Mich. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

MINNESOTA

Edward S. Scheibe to be postmaster at Cloquet, Minn., in place of F. L. Redfield, Jr. Incumbent's commission expired June 20, 1934.

Ole J. Leding to be postmaster at Cook, Minn., in place of D. H. Hill. Incumbent's commission expired April 8, 1934.

Clarence E. McCarthy to be postmaster at Detroit Lakes, Minn., in place of B. H. Peoples. Incumbent's commission expired February 25, 1935.

William C. Ackerman to be postmaster at Lakeville, Minn., in place of A. L. Mallery. Incumbent's commission expired December 20, 1932.

Cora E. McAlpine to be postmaster at Marble, Minn., in place of Joseph Smuk, Jr. Appointee not commissioned.

Louis I. Bullis to be postmaster at Winnebago, Minn., in place of E. A. Enders. Incumbent's commission expired May 20, 1934.

Colette F. Grutsch to be postmaster at Avon, Minn. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Harriett M. Eleeson to be postmaster at Beaver Creek, Minn. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Hazel W. Brown to be postmaster at La Crescent, Minn. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

William Pennar to be postmaster at Laporte, Minn. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Vern Weaver to be postmaster at Lowry, Minn. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Conrad B. Diekman to be postmaster at Ogema, Minn. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

MISSISSIPPI

James S. Garraway to be postmaster at Hattiesburg, Miss., in place of E. T. Batten. Incumbent's commission expired December 16, 1934.

William Liston to be postmaster at Kilmichael, Miss., in place of G. H. Flowers. Incumbent's commission expired December 8, 1934.

James C. Edwards to be postmaster at Pontotoc, Miss., in place of R. H. DeKay. Incumbent's commission expired July 1, 1934.

William W. Milner to be postmaster at Vaiden, Miss., in place of M. E. Cain. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1935.

Will S. Black to be postmaster at Weir, Miss., in place of T. C. Kite. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1935.

William M. Ferrell to be postmaster at Ashland, Miss. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Mable C. Whitaker to be postmaster at Gunnison, Miss. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Pink H. Morrison to be postmaster at Heidelberg, Miss. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Helene Clarke to be postmaster at Holcomb, Miss. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

John T. Miller to be postmaster at Myrtle, Miss. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Thomas J. Barnes to be postmaster at Noxapater, Miss. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Andrew Y. Sivley to be postmaster at Olive Branch, Miss. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Tommie A. Hamill to be postmaster at Sturgis, Miss. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

William T. Byrd to be postmaster at Walnut, Miss. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

MISSOURI

Jesse D. Burwell to be postmaster at Browning, Mo., in place of A. D. Peterson. Incumbent's commission expired June 26, 1934.

Thomas Wert Gwaltney to be postmaster at Charleston, Mo., in place of G. L. Pemberton. Incumbent's commission expired February 14, 1935.

Thomas A. McQuary to be postmaster at Galena, Mo., in place of J. G. Short. Incumbent's commission expired March 8, 1934.

Edgar G. Hinde to be postmaster at Independence, Mo., in place of H. H. Reick. Incumbent's commission expired April 30, 1934.

Frank M. Story to be postmaster at Kahoka, Mo., in place of J. P. Scott. Incumbent's commission expired April 8, 1934.

Anna Watson to be postmaster at Marceline, Mo., in place of L. T. McKinney. Incumbent's commission expired April 30, 1934.

Fay B. Swicegood to be postmaster at Weaubleau, Mo., in place of C. O. Vaughn. Incumbent's commission expired April 8, 1934.

Felix P. Wulff to be postmaster at Argyle, Mo. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Garnett S. Cannon to be postmaster at Fornfelt, Mo. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Leonard D. Smith to be postmaster at Fremont, Mo. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Buren Napper to be postmaster at Holcomb, Mo. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Myrtle Rauls to be postmaster at Marquand, Mo. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Anna B. Wood to be postmaster at Rosendale, Mo. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

MONTANA

Teddie Martin to be postmaster at Alberton, Mont. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Prince A. Mowbray to be postmaster at Brady, Mont. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Sophia J. Guthrie to be postmaster at Reedpoint, Mont. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

NEBRASKA

Fred B. Householder to be postmaster at Bladen, Nebr., in place of O. L. Lindgren. Incumbent's commission expired May 29, 1934.

Henry A. Georgi to be postmaster at Dawson, Nebr., in place of M. R. Tiehen. Incumbent's commission expired June 2, 1934.

Kenneth A. Schofield to be postmaster at Neligh, Nebr., in place of E. T. Best, Jr., resigned.

William J. McCorkindale to be postmaster at Bellevue, Nebr. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Frank C. Allen to be postmaster at Newport, Nebr. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Adolf E. Kaspar to be postmaster at Prague, Nebr. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Mary B. Kanaly to be postmaster at Rulo, Nebr. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Tarsney H. Winfrey to be postmaster at Stella, Nebr. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

NEVADA

Margaret E. Williams to be postmaster at Round Mountain, Nev., in place of K. C. Berg. (Appointee declined.)

NEW HAMPSHIRE

Frank Doudera to be postmaster at Dixville Notch, N. H. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

NEW JERSEY

Catherine S. E. Cullen to be postmaster at Millington, N. J., in place of E. K. Kenworthy. Incumbent's commission expired May 13, 1934.

NEW MEXICO

Filiberto E. Lucero to be postmaster at Espanola, N. Mex., in place of A. F. Sisneros. Incumbent's commission expired February 5, 1935.

John C. Leonard to be postmaster at Raton, N. Mex., in place of C. B. Thacker. Incumbent's commission expired February 9, 1931.

NEW YORK

Thomas LeRoy Wardle to be postmaster at Amityville, N. Y., in place of Eugene Velsor. Incumbent's commission expired May 29, 1934.

Andrew J. Melton to be postmaster at Bay Shore, N. Y., in place of M. W. Drake, retired.

Benjamin F. Griffin to be postmaster at Camillus, N. Y., in place of G. M. Lovell. Incumbent's commission expired January 23, 1935.

Grace L. Sullivan to be postmaster at Canton, N. Y., in place of J. F. Hammond. Incumbent's commission expired January 9, 1934.

Milton L. Rogers to be postmaster at Fayetteville, N. Y., in place of F. A. Lowe. Incumbent's commission expired December 18, 1934.

John L. Mack to be postmaster at Gasport, N. Y., in place of A. H. Wilcox. Incumbent's commission expired December 6, 1934.

Grant W. Fuller to be postmaster at Gouverneur, N. Y., in place of W. A. VanDuzee. Incumbent's commission expired March 22, 1934.

Everard K. Homer to be postmaster at Livingston Manor, N. Y., in place of J. R. Baldwin. Incumbent's commission expired Jannuary 22, 1935.

Donald Decker to be postmaster at Port Ewen, N. Y., in place of J. R. Rodman, resigned.

Mary F. Chambers to be postmaster at Shortsville, N. Y., in place of E. T. Sheffer. Incumbent's commission expired March 8, 1934.

Albert B. Sabin to be postmaster at Wolcott, N. Y., in place of L. B. Dobbin. Incumbent's commission expired January 23, 1935.

NORTH CAROLINA

Robert G. Creech to be postmaster at La Grange, N. C., in place of J. W. Stanton, resigned.

Michael B. Kibler to be postmaster at Morganton, N. C., in place of N. M. Patton. Incumbent's commission expired January 22, 1935.

Henry L. Avent to be postmaster at Buies Creek, N. C. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Thurla Cole to be postmaster at Cameron, N. C. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Joseph C. Peed to be postmaster at Creedmoor, N. C. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

William C. Stockton to be postmaster at Ellenboro, N. C. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Riddick W. Gatling to be postmaster at Gates, N. C. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Lula G. Harris to be postmaster at Macon, N. C. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

James A. Barnes to be postmaster at Middlesex, N. C. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Frances G. Thompson to be postmaster at Morven, N. C. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Margaret T. Ledbetter to be postmaster at Polkton, N. C. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Thomas L. Maness to be postmaster at Star, N. C. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Jewell Ballentine to be postmaster at Varina, N. C. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Bertie L. Matthews to be postmaster at Vass, N. C. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

NORTH DAKOTA

Winnifred D. Flaten to be postmaster at Edinburg, N. Dak., in place of I. M. Shuley. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1935.

Mons K. Ohnstad to be postmaster at Sharon, N. Dak., in place of M. K. Ohnstad. Incumbent's commission expired December 16, 1933.

Lester H. Knowles to be postmaster at Wing, N. Dak., in place of B. W. Graham. Incumbent's commission expired October 16, 1933.

OHIO

Edward Wild to be postmaster at Arcanum, Ohio, in place of B. K. Smith. Incumbent's commission expired December 18, 1934.

Ralph M. Hutchison to be postmaster at Cambridge, Ohio, in place of J. R. Lloyd. Incumbent's commission expired February 20, 1935.

William F. Engle to be postmaster at New Paris, Ohio, in place of E. C. Mikesell. Incumbent's commission expired December 18, 1934.

Jessie B. McFadden to be postmaster at Pataskala, Ohio, in place of F. P. Johnson. Incumbent's commission expired December 18, 1934.

Grover C. Speckman to be postmaster at Warsaw, Ohio, in place of Estella Wilson. Incumbent's commission expired December 18, 1934.

William L. Bryan to be postmaster at Bradner, Ohio. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Linn G. McKnight to be postmaster at Buckeye Lake, Ohio. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Helen E. Dunn to be postmaster at Holland, Ohio. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Olive R. Kast to be postmaster at Holloway, Ohio. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Donovan T. Dickerson to be postmaster at Hopedale, Ohio. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Clifford Carlile to be postmaster at McClure, Ohio. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Lewis Edgar Clawson to be postmaster at Middle Point, Ohio. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Clara J. Mitchell to be postmaster at Mount Pleasant, Ohio. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Glenn C. Swartz to be postmaster at Polk, Ohio. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Florence Hunter to be postmaster at Rayland, Ohio. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Earl I. Ducket to be postmaster at Walbridge, Ohio. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

OKLAHOMA

Margaret Cummins to be postmaster at Chattanooga, Okla., in place of B. G. Baker, deceased.

Alice L. Woolman to be postmaster at Coweta, Okla., in place of Downey Milburn, deceased.

John W. Williams to be postmaster at Medford, Okla., in place of G. H. Belcher. Incumbent's commission expired December 16, 1933.

Lizzie E. Capehart to be postmaster at Jay, Okla. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Beulah J. Van Coevering to be postmaster at Orlando, Okla. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

OREGON

Blanche M. Brown to be postmaster at Hubbard, Oreg., in place of C. M. Crittenden. Incumbent's commission expired June 17, 1934.

A. Phenton Groblebe to be postmaster at Mill City, Oreg., in place of W. G. Smith. Incumbent's commission expired February 6, 1934.

PENNSYLVANIA

John H. Baldwin to be postmaster at Atglen, Pa., in place of J. H. Baldwin. Incumbent's commission expired January 8, 1934.

Charles H. Reisinger to be postmaster at Dallastown, Pa., in place of C. E. Ehrhart. Incumbent's commission expired February 25, 1935.

Reuben S. Lauer to be postmaster at Dover, Pa., in place of E. A. Brown. Incumbent's commission expired February 27, 1935.

Thomas A. Wilson to be postmaster at Ellwood City, Pa., in place of E. A. P. Christley, transferred.

Homer C. Kifer to be postmaster at Manor, Pa., in place of J. H. Beamer. Incumbent's commission expired January 16, 1934.

W. Frederick Clevenstine to be postmaster at Mingoville, Pa., in place of M. I. Workman. Incumbent's commission expired January 13, 1932.

Lester D. Sedam to be postmaster at Muncy, Pa., in place of T. B. Painter, deceased.

Robert M. Graham to be postmaster at Newville, Pa., in place of E. W. James. Incumbent's commission expired July 1, 1934.

Agnes Ann Flynn to be postmaster at Laporte, Pa. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Margaret E. Treacher to be postmaster at Mather, Pa. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Donald R. Sheehan to be postmaster at Mehoopany, Pa. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Thomas A. Howe to be postmaster at Morrisdale, Pa. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Joseph M. Gilliland to be postmaster at Snow Shoe, Pa. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Thomas M. Shade to be postmaster at Turbotville, Pa. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

RHODE ISLAND

William H. Seifert to be postmaster at Chepachet, R. I. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Bessie T. Cooper to be postmaster at Mayesville, S. C. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

George H. Fogle to be postmaster at Ridgeville, S. C. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Olin J. Salley to be postmaster at Salley, S. C. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

SOUTH DAKOTA

Warren S. Leeper to be postmaster at Blunt, S. Dak., in place of C. H. Hess, Jr. Incumbent's commission expired January 28, 1935.

Amelia L. Rositch to be postmaster at Bowdle, S. Dak., in place of J. R. Todd, resigned.

John H. Francis to be postmaster at Dupree, S. Dak., in place of H. E. Mosher. Incumbent's commission expired March 8, 1934.

TENNESSEE

Mamie D. Phillips to be postmaster at Brighton, Tenn. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Augustus F. Shults to be postmaster at Caryville, Tenn. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Robert L. Queener to be postmaster at Jacksboro, Tenn. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Sam L. Cummins to be postmaster at Lyles, Tenn. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Robert M. Cobb to be postmaster at Mascot, Tenn. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Everett M. Smith to be postmaster at Maynardville, Tenn. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Rufus V. Cawthon to be postmaster at Mount Juliet, Tenn. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

William T. Latham to be postmaster at Niota, Tenn. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Kirk D. Beene to be postmaster at Petros, Tenn. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Thomas A. Humphreys to be postmaster at Puryear, Tenn. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

William T. Christian to be postmaster at Roan Mountain, Tenn. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

TEXAS

Harry McDonald Thomson to be postmaster at Coleman, Tex., in place of B. F. Robey. Incumbent's commission expired March 18, 1934.

Cleo K. Hinton to be postmaster at Forney, Tex., in place of K. E. Yates. Incumbent's commission expired December 20, 1934.

John M. Strawn to be postmaster at Trent, Tex., in place of R. E. Dowdy. Incumbent's commission expired May 2, 1934.

Gertrude E. Berger to be postmaster at Boling, Tex. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Claud A. Howard to be postmaster at Bronson, Tex. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Nadyne Goodman to be postmaster at Collinsville, Tex. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Roy B. Miller to be postmaster at Crawford, Tex. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

William H. Wheeler to be postmaster at Eustace, Tex. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Juanita M. Thomas to be postmaster at Gause, Tex. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Vera G. Kirkpatrick to be postmaster at High Island, Tex. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

James A. Greer to be postmaster at Kopperl, Tex. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Augustus S. Hightower to be postmaster at Millsap, Tex. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Clarence O. Bruce to be postmaster at Seagoville, Tex. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Henry E. Cannon to be postmaster at Shelbyville, Tex. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Louise McElroy to be postmaster at Shepherd, Tex. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Helen A. Milhan to be postmaster at Terrell Wells, Tex. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

UTAH

A. Lucile Greenwood to be postmaster at Richfield, Utah, in place of J. L. Sevy, Jr. Incumbent's commission expired October 10, 1933.

Mattie S. Larsen to be postmaster at Castle Dale, Utah. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Lydia R. Strong to be postmaster at Huntington, Utah. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

George T. Williams to be postmaster at Kamas, Utah. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

VIRGINIA

Isaac C. Taylor to be postmaster at Big Stone Gap, Va., in place of D. A. Sergent. Incumbent's commission expired June 16, 1934.

Nannie A. Chisholm to be postmaster at Clover, Va., in place of E. B. Snow. Incumbent's commission expired May 13, 1934.

Bernard E. Young to be postmaster at Dayton, Va., in place of W. H. Ruebush. Incumbent's commission expired February 4, 1935.

George K. Fielder to be postmaster at Fries, Va., in place of J. D. Williamson. Incumbent's commission expired February 25, 1935.

Frank B. Rice to be postmaster at Halifax, Va., in place of M. I. Lacy, resigned.

James E. Thomas to be postmaster at Marion, Va., in place of R. A. Anderson, removed.

Allan A. Lanford to be postmaster at Palmyra, Va., in place of L. S. Haden, resigned.

Haller M. Bowman to be postmaster at Timberville, Va., in place of R. S. Bowers. Incumbent's commission expired January 13, 1935.

Howard C. O'Bryan to be postmaster at Austinville, Va. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Beatrice B. Higginbotham to be postmaster at Forest, Va. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Alfred Prentis Bull to be postmaster at Hallwood, Va. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

William B. Owen to be postmaster at Jarratt, Va. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Howard F. Gilliam to be postmaster at Phenix, Va. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Edgar W. Sims to be postmaster at Rapidan, Va. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

John E. Pace to be postmaster at Ridgeway, Va. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Pauline H. Duncan to be postmaster at Riverton, Va. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Frank D. Coleman to be postmaster at Rose Hill, Va. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Zuleime H. Sealock to be postmaster at Sperryville, Va. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

WASHINGTON

Ernest H. McComb to be postmaster at Everson, Wash., in place of A. U. Thompson. Incumbent's commission expired February 6, 1934.

John H. McAfee to be postmaster at Ilwaco, Wash., in place of R. B. Williams. Incumbent's commission expired April 30, 1934.

Arthur A. Barnes to be postmaster at Pasco, Wash., in place of W. R. Cox. Incumbent's commission expired January 22, 1935.

Jessie A. Knight to be postmaster at Shelton, Wash., in place of J. A. Knight. Incumbent's commission expired February 25, 1935.

Kenneth K. King to be postmaster at Addy, Wash. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Hannah L. Parker to be postmaster at Alderwood Manor, Wash. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Mary Mallory to be postmaster at Mansfield, Wash. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Bertha H. Welsh to be postmaster at Prescott, Wash. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Richard H. Lee to be postmaster at Wilsoncreek, Wash. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

WEST VIRGINIA

Olga O. Baughman to be postmaster at Belington, W. Va., in place of R. L. Teter. Incumbent's commission expired February 20, 1935.

Okey K. Burdette to be postmaster at Point Pleasant, W. Va., in place of J. J. Lovell, resigned.

Irvin J. Richardson to be postmaster at Bartley, W. Va. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Robert Y. Henley to be postmaster at Caretta, W. Va. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Hugh A. Christie to be postmaster at Everettville, W. Va. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Thomas O. Wash to be postmaster at Kayford, W. Va. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Esta B. Combs to be postmaster at Man, W. Va. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

William E. Simpson to be postmaster at Power, W. Va. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Lewis H. M. Christie to be postmaster at Renick, W. Va. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Charles Dillard to be postmaster at Walton, W. Va. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

James H. Trail to be postmaster at Winding Gulf, W. Va. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

WISCONSIN

John L. Cunningham to be postmaster at Beaver Dam, Wis., in place of G. E. Stoddart. Incumbent's commission expired February 25, 1935.

Carl E. Seiler to be postmaster at Fish Creek, Wis., in place of M. I. Kinsey. Incumbent's commission expired January 28, 1934.

Harry R. Jones to be postmaster at Sturgeon Bay, Wis., in place of N. C. Garland. Incumbent's commission expired February 20, 1935.

Roman W. Stoffel to be postmaster at Allenton, Wis. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Julia L. Quigley to be postmaster at Arena, Wis. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Elmer G. Zellmer to be postmaster at Fair Water, Wis. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

August B. Zabolio to be postmaster at Genoa, Wis. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

Casimir Jaron to be postmaster at Lublin, Wis. Office becomes Presidential July 1, 1935.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate June 15 (legislative day of May 13), 1935

FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION

Clyde L. Seavey to be a member of the Federal Power Commission.

APPOINTMENTS BY TRANSFER IN THE REGULAR ARMY

First Lt. William Frederick Kellotat to Quartermaster Corps.

Second Lt. Terrence Robert Joseph Hickey to Quartermaster Corps.

First Lt. Waldo Eugene Laidlaw to Ordnance Department.

First Lt. Paul William Steinbeck to Field Artillery.

PROMOTIONS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

Donald Cowan McDonald to be colonel, Field Artillery.

Fulton Quintus Cincinnatus Gardner to be colonel, Coast Artillery Corps.

James Allan Stevens to be lieutenant colonel, Infantry.

Emmert Wohlleben Savage to be lieutenant colonel, Infantry.

Frederick Ramon Garcin to be lieutenant colonel, Chemical Warfare Service.

Douglas Campbell Cordiner to be lieutenant colonel, Quartermaster Corps.

Lewis Bradley Douglas to be major, Quartermaster Corps.

Carl William Connell to be major, Air Corps.

Robert Canada Vickers to be major, Signal Corps.

Thomas Lawrence Clark to be major, Signal Corps.

Harlan Nelson Hartness to be captain, Infantry.

Louis Brainard Ely to be captain, Field Artillery.

Julius Easton Slack to be captain, Field Artillery.

Bertram Francis Hayford to be captain, Field Artillery.

Ernest Aaron Bixby to be captain, Field Artillery.

Robert Rossiter Raymond, Jr., to be captain, Field Artillery.

William Basil Offutt to be first lieutenant, Air Corps.

John Hugh Fite to be first lieutenant, Air Corps.

Dudley Earl Whitten to be first lieutenant, Air Corps.

James Arthur Ronin to be first lieutenant, Air Corps.

Earle Thomas MacArthur, Jr., to be first lieutenant, Air Corps.

Norman Bert Olsen to be first lieutenant, Air Corps.

Curtis Emerson LeMay to be first lieutenant, Air Corps.

Kenneth Ross Crosher to be first lieutenant, Air Corps.

Morrison Clay Stayer to be colonel, Medical Corps.

Lee Roy Dunbar to be colonel, Medical Corps.

Addison Dimmitt Davis to be colonel, Medical Corps.

William Hope Smith to be colonel, Medical Corps.

POSTMASTERS

FLORIDA

Cullen H. Talton, Daytona Beach.

Faltha Huie, Haines City.

MAINE

Albert A. Towne, Norway.

Don Owen Cate, Richmond.

Linwood J. Emery, Sanford.

PENNSYLVANIA

Nita Elwood, Apollo.

George Lange, Belle Vernon.

Earl T. Zerby, Bernville.

J. Russell Clayton, Bryn Athyn.

George D. McCutcheon, Fredonia.

Christian S. Clayton, Huntington Valley.

Edna M. Finney, Langeloth.

Edward F. Poist, McSherrystown.

George C. Dietz, Mechanicsburg.

H. Oscar Young, Plymouth Meeting.

Perry A. Tschop, Red Lion.

Lucy A. Sellers, Robertsdale.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, JUNE 15, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Incline Thine ear, our Heavenly Father, and hear our prayer: Help us to realize most earnestly that we are the children of time and eternity and that nothing can separate us from Thee; Thou hast made us and not we ourselves. We pray for Thy blessing that we may be kept in health and strength to serve our country and do Thy holy will. By an adequate use of our privileges, may we fulfill in our daily walk those vital requirements which are to do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly before God. In this service bless us with a freedom from excessive care. Sustain us with that calmness which is the very secret of strength. In the Master's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested.

S. 1788. An act authorizing the State of Michigan to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the St. Clair River at or near Port Huron, Mich., and to acquire other transportation facilities between said State and Canada.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 1611. An act to authorize an exchange of lands between the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Co. and the United States at Quantico, Va.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 59) entitled "An act to create a national memorial military park at and in the vicinity of Kennesaw Mountain in the State of Georgia, and for other purposes."

FORESTRY PROGRAM

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes, or so much thereof as I may require.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to make an extended talk this morning upon the acquisition of forestry lands in this country, but I have asked for this time to make a brief statement and to insert in the RECORD, if I may have the permission of the House, the names of the new purchase units established by the Forest Conservation Commission and a list of the States involved, with the names of the Congressmen from the respective districts where lands are being purchased.

We embarked upon this program of establishing forestry units and purchasing lands in the several States some 15 or 18 years ago, and 2 years ago, when the emergency program was on, there were new units established and new purchases made in approximately 26 States of the Union. This work has steadily gone forward for the past 2 years as fast as the Government service could handle the purchases.

Under the new public-works bill, from which we hope to get some $60,000,000 to continue this work, I understand the allocation committee has only allocated approximately $13,000,000 for the work. We need at this time to continue during the next year approximately $108,000,000 to purchase a little more than 24,000,000 acres.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to insert in the RECORD the statistics involved in the purchase of this land and the names of the Congressmen with their States, so that those who are interested and who have lands in their respective districts can study the figures for themselves.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, in the next few days a meeting will be called of these Members, together with the Senators representing these States, in order to form a little organization to call upon the Forest Service, the Allocation Commission, and, if necessary, the President, in order that we may obtain funds out of the new public-works bill to continue this program of conservation.

You will find today in the lobby a map showing the location of these units in the Tree Belt of the United States. All of the States except about six are involved in the forestry-purchase service, but the new units that have been established in the last 2 years are in 26 States.

Please look at the RECORD Monday, find out whether lands in your districts are involved, and, if interested in the continuance of this program, you will be notified and given an opportunity to appear and help form this organization in order that we may obtain these funds.

The matter referred to follows:

Distribution of purchase units by congressional districts

State	Congressman	Purchase unit
Maine	Simon Moulton Hamlin	White Mountain.
New Hampshire	William Nathaniel Rogers	Do.
Do	Charles William Tobey	Do.
Vermont	Charles Albert Plumley	Green Mountain.
Pennsylvania	Robert F. Rich	Allegheny.
Do	D. J. Driscoll	Do.
West Virginia	Jennings Randolph	Monongahela.
Do	John Kee	Do.
Virginia	A. Willis Robertson	Monongahela, George Washington.
Do	Thomas G. Burch	Unaka, Mountain Lake.
Do	Clifton Alexander Woodrum	Mountain Lake.
Do	John W. Flanagan, Jr	Unaka, Clinch, Mountain Lake.
Kentucky	Virgil Chapman	Cumberland.
Do	Fred M. Vinson	Do.
Do	John Marshall Robsion	Do.
Tennessee	B. Carroll Reece	Unaka, Pisgah.
Do	J. Will Taylor	Cherokee.
Do	Sam D. McReynolds	Do.
North Carolina	Robert L. Doughton	Unaka.
Do	A. L. Bulwinkle	Do.
Do	J. Walter Lambeth	Pisgah, Uharie.
Do	Zebulon Weaver	Pisgah, Cherokee, Nantahala.
Do	Harold Dunbar Cooley	Uharie.
Do	Graham Arthur Barden	Croaton.
South Carolina	John Clarence Taylor	Nantahala, Enoree, Long Cane.
Do	John J. McSwain	Enoree.
Do	James Prioleau Richards	Do.
Do	Thomas Sanders McMillan	Wambaw.
Georgia	B. Frank Whelchel	Nantahala, Cherokee.
Do	Malcolm Connor Tarver	Cherokee.
Alabama	William B. Bankhead	Alabama.
Do	Sam Hobbs	Talladega.
Do	Joe Starnes	Do.
Do	William Bacon Oliver	Oakmulgee.
Do	Lister Hill	Conecuh.
Mississippi	Wall Doxey	Holley Springs.
Do	A. L. Ford	Do.
Do	Aubert C. Dunn	Bienville.
Do	William Myers Colmer	Chickasawhay, Leaf River, Biloxi.
Do	Dan R. McGehee	Homochitto.
Do	William Madison Whittington	Delta.
Oklahoma	Wilburn Cartwright	Kiamichi.
Arkansas	Ben Cravens	Ouachita, Ozark.
Do	Claude A. Fuller	Ozark.
Do	David Dickson Terry	Ouachita, Ozark.
Do	John L. McClellan	Do.
Do	John E. Miller	Ozark.
Missouri	Dewey Short	Table Rock, Pond Fork, Gardner, Gasconade.
Do	Clyde Williams	Fristoe, Clark, St. Francois, Gasconade.
Do	Orville Zimmerman	Fristoe, Wappapello.
Illinois	Claude V. Parsons	Shawnee.
Do	Kent Ellsworth Keller	Illini.
Indiana	Arthur H. Greenwood	Pleasant Run, Lost River, Patoka.
Do	John William Boehne	Lafayette.
Do	Eugene B. Crowe	Pleasant Run, Lost River, Patoka.
Ohio	James G. Polk	Little Scioto.
Do	Thomas A. Jenkins	Symmes Creek, McArthur.
Do	Robert Thompson Secrest	Muskingum.
Do	Mell G. Underwood	Hocking Valley, McArthur
Iowa	Edward Clayton Eicher	Keosauqua.
Do	Lloyd Thurston	Grand River, Chariton, Chequest.
Do	Hubert Otterback	Chariton.
Michigan	Albert J. Engel	Manistee.
Do	Roy Orchard Woodruff	Huron.
Do	Prentiss M. Brown	Marquette, Hiawatha.
Do	Frank E. Hook	Ottawa, Gogebic.
Wisconsin	Gerald J. Boileau	Oconto.
Do	George J. Schneider	Argonne, Oconto.
Do	B. J. Gehrmann	Chequamegon, Mondeauz, Flameaux.
Minnesota	Harold Knutson	Chippewa.
Do	William Alvin Pittenger	Superior, Mesaba.
Do	Richard Thompson Buckler	Chippewa.
North Dakota	Usher L. Burdick	Souris, Sheyenne.
Do	William Lemke	Do.
Puerto Rico	Santiago Iglesias	Toro Negro, Luquillo.

Forest-land acquisition under Weeks and Clark-McNary laws by land exchange and by withdrawal from public domain—Current land and financial status of established purchase units, as of Apr. 1, 1935

Map index number	Region and unit	State	Gross	Reserved public lands	Acquired through exchange	Purchased or in course of purchase	Average cost per acre	Total amount expended or obligated to date	Additional area to be purchased	Approximate cost to complete unit	Area believed to be nonpurchasable
	New England:		Acres	Acres	Acres	Acres			Acres		Acres
1	White Mountain	New Hampshire	859,795			696,787	$7.64	$5,321,326.00	117,008	$819,056	46,000
2	Green Mountain	Vermont	307,520			149,419	10.64	1,589,719.00	115,601	1,040,409	42,500
	Total		1,167,315			846,206	8.17	6,911,045.00	232,609	1,859,465	88,500
	Appalachian:
3	Allegheny	Pennsylvania	726,340	20	158	421,037	6.46	2,717,512.00	184,985	739,940	120,140
4	Monongahela	West Virginia and Virginia.	1,717,000			739,781	3.15	2,331,368.00	638,869	1,916,067	338,530
5	George Washington	do	1,161,700		135	700,507	3.63	2,540,186.00	308,784	1,003,548	152,274
6	Mountain Lake	Virginia	1,977,516			44,218	1.77	78,436.00	1,187,398	4,155,893	745,900
7	Clinch	do	658,000			36,456	3.56	129,758.00	449,544	2,247,720	172,000
8	Cumberland	Kentucky	992,605			307,739	3.85	1,183,592.00	564,498	1,693,494	120,368
9	Unaka	Virginia, North Carolina, and Tennessee.	1,503,700			310,252	3.80	1,177,722.00	1,103,298	3,861,543	90,150
10	Pisgah	North Carolina and Tennessee.	1,154,840			393,743	5.27	2,073,686.00	647,374	3,236,870	113,723
11	Nantahala	Georgia, North Carolina, and South Carolina.	1,550,900	8,394	70	414,393	5.58	2,313,287.00	994,398	4,474,791	133,645
12	Cherokee	Georgia, Tennessee, and North Carolina.	1,765,600	4	14	546,537	4.41	2,409,739.00	1,155,875	4,623,500	63,170
13	Alabama	Alabama	561,065	17,709		130,390	4.78	622,705.00	347,626	1,390,504	65,340
	Total		13,769,266	26,127	377	4,045,053	4.35	17,577,991.00	7,582,469	29,343,870	2,115,240
	Piedmont:
14	Uharie	North Carolina	560,000			12,178	4.40	53,574.00	449,796	1,349,388	98,026
15	Enoree	South Carolina	342,000			76,919	5.02	385,941.00	191,081	955,405	74,000
16	Long Cane	do	409,000			45,827	5.52	253,177.00	256,173	1,537,038	107,000
	Total		1,311,000			134,924	5.13	692,692.00	897,050	3,841,831	279,026
	Southern Pine:
17	Croatan	North Carolina	307,000			77,011	3.02	232,226.00	199,989	599,967	30,000
18	Wambaw	South Carolina	418,500			230,390	6.51	1,499,743.00	188,110	752,440
19	Osceola	Florida	161,813	80		155,149	5.02	779,425.00	3,348	13,392	3,236
20	Ocala	do	478,981	158,689	189	75,598	2.83	214,064.00	220,890	441,780	23,615
21	Apalachicola	do	297,770			275,859	2.30	634,391.00	3,911	10,755	18,000
22	Choctawhatchee	do	368,048	133,635	55,931	96,203	2.39	230,101.00	33,414	66,828	48,865
23	Talladega	do	422,000			82,739	2.00	165,478.00	263,261	1,158,879	76,000
24	Oakmulgee	do	282,000						254,000	889,000	28,000
25	Tombigbee	do	611,000						515,000	3,218,000	96,000
26	Conecuh	do	342,100						289,000	1,409,478	53,100
27	Holly Springs	Mississippi	530,520			80,611	3.70	297,872.00	119,389	358,167	330,520
28	Bienville	do	382,820			166,662	2.51	418,153.00	189,158	567,474	27,000
29	Chickasawhay	do	192,000			134,504	1.45	358,858.00	57,496	114,992
30	Leaf River	do	623,261			207,855	1.73	421,818.00	360,406	810,913	55,000
31	Biloxi	do	409,600			126,827	3.32	668,732.00	192,933	771,732	89,840
32	Homochitto	do	410,860			173,724	3.85	590,697.82	165,836	580,426	71,300
33	Delta	do	323,840						274,840	1,236,780	49,000
34	Kisatchie	Louisiana	789,819			412,818	2.32	956,598.00	323,404	70,212	53,597
35	Vernon	do	107,500			70,285	1.50	101,889.00	7,715	15,430	29,500
36	Sabine	Texas	350,000			176,962	2.76	488,859.00	103,038	412,152	70,000
37	Angelina	do	300,000			131,258	2.72	357,109.00	138,742	485,597	30,000
38	San Jacinto	do	400,000			142,436	3.88	552,506.00	177,564	621,374	80,000
39	Davy Crockett	do	350,000			151,281	9.09	1,375,545.00	148,719	1,189,752	50,000
	Total		8,859,432	292,404	56,120	2,968,172	3.28	9,753,367.00	4,230,163	15,785,520	1,312,573
	Ozark and Central Mississippi:
40	Ouachita	Arkansas and Oklahoma.	2,476,576	628,077	32,945	571,075	2.34	1,333,506.00	977,819	2,444,547	266,660
41	Ozark	Arkansas	1,233,040	284,960		344,424	3.15	1,084,159.00	554,676	1,802,697	48,980
42	Table Rock	Missouri	247,420						187,420	468,550	60,000
43	Pond Fork	do	356,729			44,574	1.83	81,628.00	220,769	551,922	91,386
44	Gardner	do	269,796			61,261	2.69	164,554.00	163,851	491,553	44,684
45	Fristoe	do	466,655			208,587	1.90	395,919.00	176,855	442,137	81,213
46	Wappapello	do	347,592			84,003	2.11	177,597.00	202,877	557,912	60,712
47	Gasconade	do	469,364			81,306	.17	176,596.00	284,494	782,358	103,564
48	Clark	do	704,469			273,929	2.00	548,394.00	292,854	732,135	137,686
49	St. Francois	do	451,680						361,680	813,780	90,000
50	Illini	Illinois	352,186			58,161	6.53	379,656.00	192,203	1,441,522	101,822
51	Shawnee	do	489,856			60,433	4.70	283,757.00	325,829	2,117,888	103,594
52	Lafayette	Indiana	201,320						159,840	1,038,960	41,480
53	Lost River	do	182,000						144,180	1,009,260	37,820
54	Patoka	do	209,000						166,300	1,164,100	42,700
55	Pleasant Run	do	189,000						142,000	994,000	47,000
56	Little Scioto	Ohio	287,000						236,000	2,832,000	51,000
57	McArthur	do	285,000						242,000	2,420,000	43,000
58	Hocking Valley	do	355,000						275,000	2,200,000	80,000
59	Muskingum	do	282,000						238,000	2,380,000	44,000
60	Symmes Creek	do	255,000						191,000	1,337,000	64,000
	Total		10,110,683	913,037	32,945	1,787,753	2.58	4,625,766.00	5,735,647	28,022,321	1,641,301
	Lake and Upper Mississippi States:
61	Keosauqua	Iowa	126,080						84,540	845,400	41,540
62	Chequest	do	244,040						154,400	1,544,000	89,640
63	Chariton	do	151,520						108,200	1,298,400	43,320
64	Grand River	do	307,360						225,220	2,702,640	82,140
65	Manistee	Michigan	1,282,847			141,174	2.37	333,923.00	1,031,831	2,579,577	109,842
66	Huron	do	579,992	137,512	128,672	149,963	1.81	271,442.00	42,722	170,888	121,123
67	Marquette	do	502,369	23,875	9,128	151,775	1.99	302,033.00	237,357	593,392	75,234
68	Hiawatha	do	675,843	2,634		343,752	2.20	755,241.00	164,474	493,422	164,983
69	Ottawa	do	1,738,553	320		347,299	3.22	1,118,813.00	1,175,431	12,342,025	215,503
70	Oconto	Wisconsin	444,194	483		215,404	1.56	336,265.00	118,363	295,907	109,944
71	Argonne	do	542,434	189		287,447	2.50	718,069.00	137,567	412,701	117,231
72	Flambeau	do	353,768	245		129,173	1.62	208,795.00	5,649	16,947	218,701
73	Mondeaux	do	169,913	120		112,756	1.42	160,585.00	1,799	4,497	55,238
74	Chequamegon	do	578,342	750		414,318	1.79	740,388.00	22,081	55,202	141,193

Forest land acquisition under Weeks and Clark-McNary laws by land exchange and by withdrawal from public domain—Current land and financial status of established purchase units, as of Apr. 1, 1935—Continued

Map index number	Region and unit	State	Gross	Reserved public lands	Acquired through exchange	Purchased or in course of purchase	Average cost per acre	Total amount expended or obligated to date	Additional area to be purchased	Approximate cost to complete unit	Area believed to be nonpurchasable
	Lake and Upper Mississippi States—Continued.		Acres	Acres	Acres	Acres			Acres		Acres
75	Moquah	Wisconsin	111,434	908		97,581	$1.41	$137,452.00	1,071	$2,677	11,874
76	Superior	Minnesota	2,613,514	809,412	26,514	406,145	2.81	1,140,862.00	676,059	2,028,177	694,384
77	Mesaba	do	287,789	1,029		118,363	1.93	228,489.00	67,395	202,185	101,002
78	Chippewa	do	998,859			230,590	2.43	560,382.00	432,978	1,407,178	335,291
79	Souris	North Dakota	478,080						300,000	750,000	178,080
80	Sheyenne	do	293,760						200,000	600,000	93,760
	Total		12,480,691	982,477	164,314	3,145,740	2.23	7,012,739.00	5,187,137	28,345,215	3,000,023
	Puerto Rico:
81	Luquillo		130,950	13,824		3,909	11.61	45,375.00	112,041	1,120,410	1,176
82	Toro Negro		112,000			1,358	12.96	17,951.00	33,648	336,150	77,000
	Total		242,950	13,824		5,267		63,326.00	145,683	1,456,560	78,176
	Total, region 7		8,643,426	13,844	293	3,101,211	5.14	15,955,223.00	3,712,190	15,072,687	1,815,888
	Total, region 8		20,416,153	1,231,548	89,149	5,813,910	3.61	21,460,863.00	10,908,779	41,461,803	2,373,267
	Total, region 9		18,881,758	982,477	165,314	4,017,994	2.29	9,220,840.00	9,390,289	52,120,292	4,325,684
	Total, regions 7, 8, 9		47,941,337	2,227,869	254,756	12,933,115	3.66	46,636,926.00	24,010,758	108,654,782	8,514,839

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. KNUTE HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the reading of the Journal I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I feel that a request of this kind is entirely unreasonable and I shall object.

SEGREGATION OF HABITUAL CRIMINALS

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a short and able editorial written by G. J. Kirchendorfer, editor of the Mansfield News-Journal, on the Segregation of Habitual Criminals, which I think is worthy of preservation in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following able editorial written by G. J. Kirchendorfer, editor of the Mansfield News-Journal, Mansfield, Ohio.

SEGREGATION FOR HABITUAL CRIMINALS

With the quick closing in of Federal agents on the kidnapers of the Weyerhaeuser boy, the question of what to do with kidnapers is again being widely discussed.

After the first flash of indignation has passed it may be doubted if there will ever be wide-spread public approval of capital punishment for kidnapers, in cases not resulting in death of the victim.

It does appear, however, that punishment for crimes of this kind should have some more drastic phase than mere imprisonment and that it should represent a finality that would be known to every criminal whose mind might at some time turn to contemplation of the kidnaping racket as a means of acquiring "easy money."

If it is accepted as an obligation upon the public to provide quarters and sustenance for habitual criminals during their natural lifetime, then surely some plan should be developed whereby this type of criminal can be completely, securely, and permanently segregated from that entirely different class of law violators who are temporarily deprived of liberty while efforts are being made to reform their thinking to the extent of making them law-abiding citizens thereafter.

It is not improbable that exaggeration of the political theory of "'equality" in this country has been responsible, at least in part, for the show of sentimentality which inclines to have greater regard for the criminal than for the victim and to consider the suffering of the criminal's family as being more important than the grief brought upon the loved ones of the victim.

Efficiency of Federal agencies in the clearing up of kidnaping cases has already been so convincingly demonstrated that it is entirely probable this field of operation will be expanded rather than diminished.

Use is already being made by the Federal Government of an island prison for some criminals. This whole problem is so obviously national in scope that it may be advisable to consider elaborating the island-prison idea to the point of opening the way for States to send their kidnapers and other habitual criminals under life sentence to such a penal colony instead of confining them in State prisons.

If capital punishment is to be withheld from kidnapers, then there should be assurance of complete segregation during the remaining years of their life, without chance for pardon and with no opportunity for escape.

This, coupled with such records for quick capture as are now being made, should go far in putting a stop to kidnaping in the United States.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, yesterday we had the Private Calendar. We had intended to consider the Private Calendar the day before. The men on the committee who are officially designated to analyze and study these bills and object to the ones that are without merit were ready and prepared. We had to listen to about 1 hour of speech-making on Thursday and about the same thing yesterday. I shall object to any requests for time to address the House prior to the consideration of the Consent Calendar today. The consideration of the Consent Calendar today was brought about at the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] so that his triple A amendment bill could be considered by the House on Monday next. There is other important legislation to be considered next week, among which is the Wagner bill. I am perfectly willing to have all gentlemen address the House after the bills on this calendar have been considered today. The Speaker desires that we make haste with this calendar and Members who are interested in the bills are of the same opinion. They want to get through with the consideration of the calendar.

Mr. MAY. Did the gentleman say "triple A" or "crippled A"?

Mr. TRUAX. Triple A—not crippled A.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes on Monday next, immediately following the reading of the Journal.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I understand we have changed the day for the consideration of bills on the Consent Calendar from Monday to today, for the purpose of letting the triple "A" bill, as well as some other important matters, come in next week. I feel it would be improper to allow extended speeches at that time, or at any time until those matters are disposed of.

I know that the Speaker is anxious that we should transact this important business before the House. I feel that speeches should be condensed or come in at some other time.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield? I want to make a short statement. On the 12th of the month the Washington Times, in a special article, made an attack on me in which I would be justified in taking an hour of time on a question of personal privilege. I do not want to do anything of the kind. I can say all I need to say in 15 minutes. If the gentleman wishes to object, all right.

CLAIMANTS WHO SUFFERED LOSS FROM FIRES SET BY GOVERNMENT OPERATED RAILROADS IN MINNESOTA IN 1918

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, we hope to have the House of Representatives vote next Tuesday on omnibus bill no. 8108. One section of this bill contains the Minnesota fire claimants measure, which is the Ryan bill, H. R. 3662. This Ryan bill was objected to by two objectors, and went back to the Claims Committee, where a further hearing was held, and the Claims Committee again favorably reported this bill, in the omnibus bill, H. R. 8108.

I find that I am the only Member of Congress from Minnesota in the past 6 years who is not recorded as giving this bill his favorable consideration. The only reason why I have not endorsed this bill is the fact that I am a new Member, and this is the first opportunity that I have had to talk to my colleagues about it.

I am a farmer, and there are hundreds and thousands of farmers in Minnesota who are concerned with the passage of this measure. You understand that these farmers were burned out by fires set by Government-operated railroads in 1918. The courts in Minnesota held the Government Railroad Administration liable for the damage, but the Director General changed his mind about paying the damage and decided that he would only pay the farmers and others a part of their loss. This bill is to pay the balance that is due them.

I was talking to a fellow the other day, who told me that this bill was "gray haired and hoary" with age. I am getting a little gray haired myself, but I think my hairs will all be considerably grayer if we keep up this system in Congress of having one or two objectors always defeating meritorious bills.

I said to this fellow the other day, when he told me this was an old bill and that it had been kicking around for years, that the only reason why the bill had acquired a little age, was the fact that objectors always prevented the House of Representatives from passing it. I pointed out to him that every Claims Committee which has considered this measure since the Seventy-first Congress has favorably reported the bill, but, of course, the objectors stop the bill.

I was not here last year, but understand there were a lot of rumors that there was considerable gossip that the bill was a bad bill, and that it was a "lobbyist bill", and I also understand that there were various other things said. I want to ask my colleagues not to take that propaganda seriously, because it is easy enough to make a lot of remarks but sometimes hard to prove them, and up to date none of the things that were said last year have proved to be true.

I am supporting this bill because it is an honest bill and because the courts of Minnesota have said that the Railroad Administration owed this money. You do not have to rest on my word alone. The Honorable John Devaney, chief justice of the Supreme Court of Minnesota, and the Honorable Floyd B. Olson, Governor of Minnesota, as well as others, including President Roosevelt, have endorsed this Ryan bill, now known as "title 4" in the omnibus bill 8108. If you want to help carry out the President's program of doing justice to the people in Minnesota, you are bound to vote for this bill.

Someone claimed the other day that these claimants had been overpaid. Such a statement is a terrible mistake, and I simply cannot understand how anyone would make that statement without looking into the facts. Sometime ago my colleague Mr. RYAN prepared a letter and showed just how these settlements were made, by giving one of the actual cases in point.

I quote from his letter which I received under date of June 3, and which ought to settle the matter, so far as getting a favorable vote when this measure is considered:

In order to clearly present the facts, I submit the following typical example of one of these firm claims. The data on this claim were taken from Government records.

On October 12, 1917, Otto Koski resided in Cloquet, Minn., a city of approximately 8,000 population, and owned a home which was destroyed on that day by a fire which originated through negligence of Government-operated railroads.

On July 22, 1921, the Supreme Court of Minnesota, in a test case for that area, held the Government liable for the damage caused by that fire, and on October 17, 1921, Mr. Koski filed a claim for $1,229.18 with the Government for his loss on account of said fire, liability having been fixed in said test case. Subsequently, a Government investigator appraised his loss and fixed the actual amount at $1,000.

The Government advised Koski that it would pay 50 percent of his $1,000 loss, providing, among other things, that every similar claimant agreed to do the same, and he could either "take it or leave it" and attempt to collect.

There were more than 8,000 cases of this kind pending, and it was estimated that it would take all of the courts of Minnesota more than 10 years to hear and determine the same, excluding all other business of the courts. The expense of trial of a single case would exceed the amount of recovery in this case. The Government refused to consolidate similar cases for trial. Mr. Koski had no finances with which to litigate his claim. Litigation had then been under way since October 1918.

Under all the circumstances, Koski was coerced, and agreed to accept the partial payment.

On December 29, 1921, a judgment was entered in his favor against the Government for $500, and on January 28, 1922, Mr. Koski signed a release in full for his $1,000 claim, but was paid only $500.

This measure provides for the payment to Mr. Koski of the remaining $500, and for similar treatment to other claimants.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, and Members of the House, I want to urge all of you who feel that a farmer whose home has been burnt up by the Railroad Administration is entitled to the same treatment that other people receive to vote for this measure and help the Members of Congress from Minnesota see that this wrong which has been done many years ago is corrected.

A PUNCTURED BALLOON

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and include therein a short editorial by the Honorable Clark Howell, editor of the Atlanta Constitution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following short editorial by the Honorable Clark Howell, editor of the Atlanta Constitution:

A PUNCTURED BALLOON

The "brain trust" sponsored demands for a revolutionary change in the Constitution, voiced following the N. R. A. decision by the Supreme Court, were evidently prepared as a trial balloon to ascertain public opinion. If so, the balloon was punctured on the first day up.

The suggestion to further centralize power in Washington at the expense of the sovereignty of the State never received the approval of the President. It was probably put up to him by some of the eminent Soviet-minded theorists now conspicuous for their activities in Washington, and he merely conveyed it on to the public, although definitely failing to endorse it.

The public was not long in responding and the trial balloon was shot full of holes, collapsed, and dropped with a dull thud, the response of Congress, the public, and the press being immediate and unmistakable.

Should any such amendment be submitted, it would not only fail to receive the necessary approval of three-fourths of the States, but would be lucky to be endorsed by one-fourth.

It did not take Congress long to size the situation, and the plan is now, in the picturesque language of General Johnson, "as dead as a dodo"—for which the country has much to be thankful.

We have had enough tinkering with the Constitution. It has served well and efficiently in safeguarding the rights of the people and forwarding the interests of the Nation for more than 150 years.

Those who would now change the fundamentals of this solid bulwark of American liberty and safety may well consider the caution of Daniel Webster in an address delivered on the centennial anniversary of Washington's birth. Citing that America could, and undoubtedly would, recoup from the effects of disastrous wars or other misfortunes that might sweep our commerce from the oceans, exhaust the Treasury, or desolate our fields and industry, this great American warned—

"But who shall reconstruct the fabric of demolished government; who shall rear again the well-proportioned columns of constitutional liberty; who shall frame together the skillful architecture which unites national sovereignty with State rights, individual security, and public prosperity? No; if these columns fall, they will be raised not again."

The very suggestion to take away from the State the power now vested in them to determine their own affairs, and to create an empire without State lines, is abhorrent.

Again we say, if Congress wishes to serve the public, the best step it can take is to adjourn, go home, give the people a rest, and business a chance to go forward.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that after calling the Consent Calendar, the Chair is willing to stay here if the Members of the House are willing and recognize any gentleman who has a request to make.

The program on Monday is to recognize the gentleman from North Carolina to make a motion to suspend the rules and pass the tax bill. After that the House will take up the triple "A" bill, with 6 hours' general debate granted under the rule. Of course, if the House wishes to vary that program, the Chair has no objection, but he is stating to the House what the present program is.

Under special order, the Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

SAFEGUARDING CUSTODIANS OF GOVERNMENT MONEYS AND PROPERTY

The Clerk called the first bill on the Consent Calendar (H. R. 5360) providing for punishment for the crime of robbing or attempting to rob custodians of Government moneys or property.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. I object.

The SPEAKER. This bill requires three objectors. Is there further objection?

There being no other objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 197 of the act of March 4, 1909 (18 U. S. C. 320; 35 Stat. 1126), be amended to read as follows:

"Whoever shall assault any person having lawful charge, control, or custody of any mail matter, money, or other property of the United States, with intent to rob, steal, or purloin such mail matter, money, or other property of the United States, or any part thereof, or shall rob any such person of such mail, money, or other property of the United States, or any part thereof, shall, for the first offense, be imprisoned not more than 10 years; and if, in effecting or attempting to effect such robbery he shall wound the person having custody of the mail, money, or other property of the United States, or put his life in jeopardy by the use of a dangerous weapon, or for a subsequent offense, shall be imprisoned 25 years."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "matter, money" and insert "matter or of any money."

Page 2, line 2, strike out "if" with a comma, and insert "if" without the comma.

Page 2, line 3, strike out the word "the" and insert the word "such."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 10, after the word "mail", strike out the comma and insert "matter or of any."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MONUMENT TO FORMER AMBASSADOR OF FRANCE, JULES JUSSERAND

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following communication.

The Clerk read as follows:

JUNE 13, 1935.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I take pleasure in transmitting to you herewith copy of a note (in translation) which the French Ambassador left with the Under Secretary of State this morning expressing appreciation on behalf of the French Government and people for the vote of the Congress authorizing the erection at Washington of a monument in memory of Mr. Jusserand, former Ambassador of France.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

[Translation]

JUNE 12, 1935.

MR. SECRETARY: It was with particular satisfaction that my Government learned that the House of Representatives of the United States had unanimously adopted on May 6 last a resolution authorizing the erection in Washington of a monument in memory of Mr. Jusserand, late Ambassador of France in the United States, and that this resolution had been approved the day before yesterday, June 10, by the Senate.

In conformity with instructions which I have just received from the President of the Council, who is also Minister of Foreign Affairs, I have the honor to express to Your Excellency the gratitude of the Government of the Republic for a recognition which is indeed warmly appreciated by him as well as by the French people.

I should be grateful to Your Excellency to be good enough to transmit to the Senate and to the House of Representatives an expression of the gratitude of the Republic for a vote which gives proof of the feeling of high esteem and sympathy which the American people still retains toward my eminent predecessor.

Accept, Mr. Secretary, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

ANDRE DE LABOULAYE.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next bill on the Consent Calendar.

INDIAN BUFFALO HUNT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5263) to purchase and erect in the city of Washington a group of statuary known as the "Indian Buffalo Hunt."

The SPEAKER. This requires three objections. Is there objection?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been passed over a number of times. If there is any good reason for not passing it, it ought to be developed at this time. I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. TRUAX, Mr. ZIONCHECK, and Mr. COSTELLO objected.

CONSTRUCTION OF RESIDENCE FOR UNITED STATES HIGH COMMISSIONER TO PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6800) authorizing the construction of buildings for the United States High Commissioner to the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The proponents of this bill agreed to accept an amendment reducing the amount of funds to be authorized from $1,000,000 to $750,000. With the understanding that that amendment is acceptable, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KOCIALKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute for the House bill Senate 2278.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the Senate bill will be substituted for the House bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. How will that affect the proposed amendment?

Mr. KOCIALKOWSKI. The Senate bill authorizes an appropriation of $750,000.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $750,000 for the necessary housing for office and residence purposes for the establishment of the United States representative in the Philippine Islands, including the acquisition of land, the purchase, construction, and reconstruction of buildings, and the procurement of furniture, furnishings, and equipment.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike ou the last word. I feel that it is of the utmost importance to the Members of this House to have their attention called to the fact that last year by virtue of House Resolution 275, the Committee on Military Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, was authorized by the House to inquire into alleged profiteering in military aircraft, irregularities in the leasing of public property by the War Department, and so forth, and other matters in which the problem of national defense is involved.

As a result of that resolution, as chairman of subcommittee no. 3, I was designated by the full committee to take charge of those investigations, and after 4 months of extended hearings we filed a unanimous report, Democrats, Republicans, and Farmer-Laborite, recommending that certain action be taken against Col. Alexander Williams, former Assistant Quartermaster General of the Army; Col. Joseph I. McMullen, chief of the patent section in the Judge Advocate General's Office; and Maj. Gen. Benjamin D. Foulois, Chief of Army Air Corps. Following a check-up by the Inspector General of the Army, Maj. Gen. John S. Preston, Colonel Williams was court-martialed and ordered dismissed from the military service for what? For soliciting a loan of $2,500 from a tire-tube salesman seeking orders from the War Department. Colonel McMullen is now under indictment for accepting fees from a company with Government interest while on active duty. In a desire to improve our system of national defense, to clean house in the Army Air Corps, we spent months in the completion of our investigation of this branch of service and filed a unanimous report 1 year ago today recommending that Maj. Gen. Benjamin D. Foulois be dismissed as Chief of the Air Corps for the following reasons:

First. Because he willfully and deliberately violated existing law in the purchase of airplanes and aircraft material.

Second. He accused superior officers of willfully attempting to deceive the committee.

Third. He testified falsely before the subcommittee as to his opportunity and authority in presenting Air Corps needs to the Director of the Budget.

Fourth. He advised the Second Assistant Postmaster General that the Air Corps was prepared to fly the air mail, when the record shows that he as Chief of the Air Corps should have known differently.

At the end of our report we made this statement unanimously, and I quote it to you now so that you will have it thoroughly in mind.

> In conclusion, however, we find it necessary to report that we are most firmly convinced from the evidence and records submitted that before any substantial progress in the upbuilding of the morale and matériel in the Army Air Corps can be obtained, Maj. Gen. Benjamin D. Foulois must be relieved from his position as Chief of the Air Corps. We unanimously recommend that the Secretary of War take such action without delay.

After waiting a whole year you may well imagine the shock which I had yesterday afternoon when, as chairman of that committee, I read in the Washington Evening Star, under a picture of General Foulois, this statement:

> Cleared. Foulois cleared of House charges.

Then, Mr. Speaker, after reading that statement I am advised that this article was based on a report to the press given out yesterday afternoon from the office of the Secretary of War, about which you are entitled to know, and I ask your indulgence for a few moments while I refer to it. This report given out by the Secretary of War to the press in regard to Maj. Gen. Benjamin D. Foulois, Chief of the Army Air Corps, stated this——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ROGERS] has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. A summary of this statement given to the press by the Secretary of War yesterday afternoon is this:

The allegations might be summarized under three headings. I will read them to you: First, a violation of existing laws in the purchase of airplanes and aircraft matériel; second, unsound estimates made to the Post Office Department as to the ability of the Air Corps to handle the air mail; and, third, incorrect, unfair, and misleading statements to a congressional committee.

The press release then states:

> The Inspector General then recommends that General Foulois be reprimanded—

For what?

> for his unethical conduct under heading 3—

Which is not perjury or anything like that, but simply—> incorrect, unfair, and misleading statements to a congressional committee.

The Secretary of War approved the recommendation of the Inspector General. That is substantially the statement sent out to the press yesterday afternoon, on which these newspaper articles are based.

I then took it upon myself late in the afternoon to go to the office of the Committee on Military Affairs to see if any communication had been received from the Secretary of War addressed to our committee, and I found one. What does that statement say? It is signed by the Secretary of War, George H. Dern, and refers to the misconduct of Maj. Gen. Benjamin D. Foulois. What does it say about General Foulois? I quote:

> It is affirmatively established that General Foulois violated the ethics and standards of the military service in making statements—> before your committee which were not only unfair and misleading to the committee itself, but which also seriously reflected upon the integrity of his brother officers.

And these were statements under oath, I say to the Members of the House—

He came before our committee and, under oath, made untrue statements which "seriously reflected upon the integrity of his brother officers", says the Secretary of War, and "that in general", not in specific instances, but "in general, during his appearance before your committee he evidenced a lack of team spirit and a tendency to make exaggerated and inexact statements."

In other words, Mr. Speaker, Secretary Dern summarizes just what we said about Major General Foulois, who came before our committee and perjured himself, lied under oath, and made statements which, in the language of the Secretary of War's report, "seriously reflected upon the integrity of his brother officers"; also statements unfair and misleading to our committee.

What does the Secretary of War then do to General Foulois? He says to the press that it is just a little unethical, and apparently slaps him on the wrist as a reprimand. Colonel Williams, not a major general, but a colonel, whom we found guilty of seeking a loan of a few hundred dollars, is kicked out of the service; and while our charges against General Foulois are confirmed, he simply receives a reprimand.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ROGERS] has again expired.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. I yield.

Mr. MAAS. The gentleman is not inferring that the committee found evidence that General Foulois was dishonest?

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Yes, sir; absolutely; that he was a liar and a perjurer, under oath, before our committee, time and time again.

Mr. MAAS. The gentleman is not accusing him of taking any money?

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. No, sir; not at all. We did not ask that he be kicked out of the service. We did not ask for him to be court martialed. We simply asked that he be removed as Chief of the Army Air Corps. General Foulois once had a splendid military record, a long record as a soldier of distinction; and every man on the committee was his friend until he came before us and lied and perjured himself time and time again; and let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that he had every opportunity in the world to appear before our committee day after day.

Mr. MAAS. After the report was made he had no time?

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. After the report, of course not. We were simply acting as a grand jury. We made these charges, sir, and the Secretary of War confirms them in his report.

Mr. MAAS. Did he do more than make minor changes in his testimony, like all of us do after we speak in the House?

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. He certainly did.

Let me call your attention to something definite. I ask your indulgence a moment while I locate it in my memorandum.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, this is one of the most important questions to come before this House.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. It certainly is.

Mr. RANKIN. In order that the gentleman from New Hampshire may not be crowded, I ask that he may be permitted to proceed for 15 minutes in order that he may have time to find what he has in his records there.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. When we started out every man on the committee was his friend—he came before us under oath and something came up about the violation of an Army regulation, the law of the Army; and I asked him if he broke that, and he, the Chief of the Air Corps, testifying under oath, said he had "overlooked the Army regulations and broken them hundreds of times—and I will break them again." A fine example of military discipline to set for the youth of this country who desire to enter the Army of the United States!

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS] will look in the hearings on the War Department appropriation bill, he will see where General Foulois not only permitted but condoned one of his officers, Major Hoffman, accepting about $23,000 of stock from the Triangle Parachute Co. in derogation of his duty as an Army officer.

Mr. MAAS. The only point I am making is that the committee made recommendations to the Secretary of War. The Secretary of War made, we assume, a proper investigation of those charges.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Sure.

Mr. MAAS. The committee is not a prosecuting authority; it is not a judicial body.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. It is an investigating authority.

Mr. MAAS. The committee made recommendations.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. And the Secretary of War has confirmed them, sir, in his letter to our committee, but not in his statement to the press. In that statement he finds them simply unethical, but he admits and states in his letter to our committee not only that General Foulois was unethical but that he gave testimony which tended to bring his brother officers into disrepute.

Mr. MAAS. Those were the recommendations of the committee.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield. The point is he was testifying before the committee under oath.

Mr. MAAS. In the meantime, General Foulois has not been given an opportunity to be heard in defense.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I refuse to yield further.

Mr. Speaker, one further statement: He came before our committee and told us one thing about a matter we were trying to clear up in regard to the policy on procurement, to get at a proper system for the Army Air Corps. When his testimony came back to the committee a change had been made in it. He first testified: "I asked the reason for it. * * * But I got no explanation." Behind our backs he took that testimony, crossed it out and substituted the following:

> I asked the reason for it, and was advised to the effect that the amendment provided for more leeway in securing the number of airplanes desired. * * *

Do you want that type of man to be the Chief of the United States Army Air Corps, a man who will do that under oath, a man who says first he got no reason for it, then changes his testimony so that it reads he asked the reason for it and was told that it was to give them more leeway in securing the number of airplanes desired?

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I am nearly through. I want to refer to just one thing further, if I may.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to interrogate the gentleman from New Hampshire.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I refuse to yield right now. After I have finished my statement I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. RANSLEY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this is the regular order. The gentleman from New Hampshire was given permission to speak for 15 additional minutes.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New Hampshire is not talking on the bill, and I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that on the request of the gentleman from Mississippi the gentleman from New Hampshire was given 15 minutes to continue speaking on this subject, and that is the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so understand the request. The request was not that the gentleman might speak out of order; the request was that he might be allowed to continue for 15 additional minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. The request was that he might have 15 minutes additional to finish his speech he was then making out of order.

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair does not recall that such statement was made, and no such request submitted to the House, as the record will show. Of course, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order, the gentleman from New Hampshire must confine himself to the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Would it be proper now for me to reconsider my refusal and to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

The SPEAKER. Is that satisfactory to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I now demand the regular order.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I submit my request when I rose was that the gentleman from New Hampshire was discussing a very vital matter that the House ought to be informed on, and I asked unanimous consent that he might be permitted to proceed for 15 minutes to finish his statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair submitted the request that the gentleman from Mississippi made, which was that the time of the gentleman from New Hampshire be extended 15 minutes, to which the House agreed. Of course, the Chair has no objection to the gentleman discussing this matter or any other matter. The Chair stated the question as the gentleman from Mississippi submitted it, namely, that the time of the gentleman from New Hampshire be extended for 15 minutes. The gentleman from Mississippi did not include in his request the words "out of order." The Chair has no objection to the gentleman from New Hampshire proceeding on any subject, but when the attention of the Chair is called to the fact, and a point of order is made, the Chair must follow the precedents of the House. Under the precedents of the House and under the rules of the House, the gentleman from New Hampshire is restricted to a discussion of the bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my request be read in order to show exactly what it was. I should like to have that done. Let the Clerk read the request.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraw his point of order?

Mr. RANSLEY. I do not.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. The gentleman did not raise a point of order. He asked for the regular order and the regular order is the gentleman from New Hampshire speaking out of order.

Mr. RANSLEY. If the gentleman will read the rules, he will know that a demand for the regular order is the same thing as raising a point of order, and that was the point I made.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I am entitled to have the Clerk repeat my request.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has called for the record.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, in order to save time, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ROGERS] may be given 15 minutes to speak out of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. If a Member submits a unanimous-consent request and in making the request states the purpose and the object in making the request, and the Speaker in presenting the unanimous-consent request states it more briefly and consent is given, is consent given to the request made by the Member who stated it, or is consent given according to the request as presented by the Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The statement of the Chair always controls, because that is what the House gives its consent to. If it is desired to speak out of order—and every Member is conversant with this rule—the procedure is to ask unanimous consent to speak out of order and unless consent is given by the House for a Member to speak out of order, the Chair has no alternative and must enforce the rule when a point of order is made. [Applause.]

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, a further point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I should like to know the purpose of looking at the record to determine what the gentleman from Mississippi stated, if the parliamentary situation is as the Speaker has stated it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Is it not true that the gentleman got the floor upon his own request to strike out the last word?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct. There has been no request submitted to the Members of the House by the Chair for the gentleman from New Hampshire to speak out of order. The Chair would have been pleased to have submitted such a request if it had been submitted in that form, but this was not done. The Chair stated the request as the Chair understood it, and if the Chair misunderstood the request, it was the privilege of the gentleman who made the request to correct the Chair.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Where a Member is speaking on the floor, out of order, under a motion to strike out the last word, and it is clearly apparent to every person present that his speech is out of order, and another Member, such as was done by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], states that the speech then being made out of order "is one of the most important questions to come before the House" and asks that he be permitted to proceed for 15 minutes so that he may have time to examine his records, when it is generally understood that the whole speech is out of order, and the unanimous consent for such 15 additional minutes is granted by the House, is the Member precluded from so using his 15 minutes? I submit that it was generally understood that the extra 15 minutes granted by the House were to be used out of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi made these remarks:

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, this is one of the most important questions to come before this House.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. It certainly is.

Mr. RANKIN. In order that the gentleman from New Hampshire may not be crowded, I ask that he may be permitted to proceed for 15 minutes in order that he may have time to find what he has in his records there.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I agree with what the Chair states about a Member who rises and moves to strike out the last word. Of course, he is supposed to confine himself to the amendment before the House, although he is speaking on the last word; but when a Member takes the floor and begins a speech out of order, all the Members acquiescing, and no point of order is made or reserved, and he starts out to discuss the matter, and a request is made under such conditions which implies he shall have time to continue to discuss the matter on which he is speaking, I submit that a point of order later to try to stop him within the 15 minutes, on the ground he is not speaking on the last word read, comes too late. I submit that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is too late and that his point of order is not well taken, and that the gentleman from New Hampshire is entitled to proceed for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Mississippi, that the gentleman, of course, is familiar with the rules, and knows how consent may be obtained to speak out of order. The gentleman from Mississippi did not submit his request in that form. The gentleman made reference to some records that the gentleman from New Hampshire was searching for at the time. Consent was given to proceed for 15 minutes. When a Member of the House exercises his privilege and makes the point of order that the gentleman is proceeding out of order when consent has not been given, there is no alternative and the Chair must rule that the point of order is well taken and ask the gentleman speaking to confine himself to the matter before the House. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Hampshire may have the balance of the 15 minutes granted him by the House to finish his speech.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ROGERS] may proceed for the remainder of his 15 minutes to continue the discussion of the subject upon which he was speaking. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I want the RECORD to show that the applause was on the Republican side. If it is desired to defend a man who commits perjury in order to get money out of the Government, that is all right.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, may I say that I submitted a unanimous-consent request before the bills on the Consent Calendar came up for consideration? I had no desire to speak on any other subject than this matter. However, an objection was made at that time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asked that he be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes and objection was made. The Chair has no personal feeling about this matter and is not acting from a personal standpoint. The Chair is trying to maintain proper procedure and give recognition to every Member of the House, and extend to every Member the privilege of making points of order and insisting on the rules being observed at all times.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have the privilege of revising and extending my remarks and inserting therein the official documents to which I have referred, including letters, communications, and so forth.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that he may revise and extend his remarks and include therein the official documents to which he has referred. Is there objection?

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, there will be no objection on my part. My contention is that General Foulois ought to be tried by officers and not by civilians.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire?

There was no objection.

EXHIBIT A

[House of Representatives, Rept. No. 2060, 73d Cong., 2d sess.]

INVESTIGATION OF PROFITEERING IN MILITARY AIRCRAFT, UNDER HOUSE RESOLUTION 275

The Committee on Military Affairs shortly after the convening of Congress in January began hearings looking to the enactment of legislation for the enlargement of the Army Air Corps and for the promotion of its efficiency and effectiveness. The committee contemplated action to give a more just recognition in the matter of promotion to the very fine personnel who make up the rank and file of the Air Corps. The committee wished to provide the necessary planes, equipment, and matériel to make the Air Corps at least the equal of any air force in the world comparable in size. The committee realizes the power and the tremendous potentialities of the Air Corps, operating not only in conjunction with ground forces but more especially as an independent fighting force. The committee believes that inevitably the Air Corps is destined to become our first line of defense and surely it affords the most economical means of frontier defense. Unfortunately the hearings disclosed conditions in the command and administration of the Air Corps that moved the committee to ask the House of Representatives to set up the special investigating committee provided for in House Resolution 275. It is the hope of the committee that the conditions set out herein below will be remedied before the convening of the next session of Congress and that at that time the committee may go forward with its plans for the Army Air Corps.

By virtue of House Resolution 275, authorizing and directing the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into and investigate alleged profiteering in military aircraft, irregularities in the leasing of public property by the War Department, profiteering in the purchase of property from public funds, and other matters in which the problem of national defense is involved, Subcommittee No. 3 of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives is conducting extended hearings and said subcommittee hereby reports to the House certain violations and evasions of law and Army regulations by, also the gross misconduct and inefficiency of, Maj. Gen. Benjamin D. Foulois, Chief of the Air Corps, United States Army, and other executive officers under his command. By reference report no. 1506, House Calendar No. 263 filed on May 7, 1934, relative to the $7,500,000 allocated to the War Department for the purchase of airplanes out of Public Works Administration funds, is made a part hereof. We expect at a later date to report further as to the results of our investigation into other matters referred to us by virtue of said H. R. 275.

On July 2, 1926, Public Law No. 446, Sixty-ninth Congress, H. R. 10827, entitled "An act to provide more effectively for the national defense by increasing the efficiency of the Air Corps of the Army of the United States and for other purposes" was enacted into law. Under its provisions the purchase and procurement of aircraft by the Army are regulated. The provisions thereof pertinent to this report are as follows:

"SEC. 10 (k). The Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy may at his discretion purchase abroad or in the United States with or without competition, by contract, or otherwise, such designs, aircraft, aircraft parts, or aeronautical accessories as may be necessary in his judgment for experimental purposes in the development of aircraft or aircraft parts or aeronautical accessories of the best kind for the Army or the Navy, as the case may be, and if as a result of such procurement, new and suitable designs considered to be the best kind for the Army or the Navy are developed, he may enter into contract, subject to the requirements of paragraph (j) of this section, for the procurement in quantity of such aircraft, aircraft parts, or aeronautical accessories without regard to the provision of paragraphs (a) to (e) inclusive, hereof.

"(q) In the procurement of aircraft constructed according to designs presented to any individual, firm, or corporation prior to the passage of this act, which designs have been reduced to practice and found to be suitable for the purpose intended or according to such designs with minor modifications thereof, the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, when in his opinion the interests of the United States will be best served thereby, may contract with said individual, firm, or corporation, at reasonable prices for such quantities of said aircraft, aircraft parts, or aeronautical accessories as he may deem necessary: Provided, That the action of the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, in each such case shall be final and conclusive.

"(t) Hereafter whenever the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy shall enter into a contract for or on behalf of the United States, for aircraft, aircraft parts, or aeronautical accessories, said Secretary is hereby authorized to award such contract to the bidder that said Secretary shall find to be the lowest responsible bidder that can satisfactorily perform the work or the service required to the best advantage of the Government; and the decision of the Secretary of the department concerned as to the award of such contract, the interpretation of the provisions of the contract, and the application and the administration of the contract shall not be reviewable, otherwise than as may be therein provided for, by any officer or tribunal of the United States except the President and the Federal courts."

The legal application and purposes of these provisions of law as applicable to the Army were passed upon by the office of the Judge Advocate General of the United States Army by approved memoranda dated May 17, 1929, and August 3, 1929, addressed to the Assistant Secretary of War. The Judge Advocate General held that under section 10 (k) of the Air Corps Act of July 2, 1926 (supra), quantity procurement of aircraft and accessories must be made only after advertisement pursuant to section 3709 Revised Statutes.

Subdivision 10 (t) of the Air Corps Act (supra) clearly defines the only method by which aircraft procurement in quantity can be obtained, that is, by competitive bidding, a policy definitely established by law not only in the Air Corps Act of 1926, but also by section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, March 2, 1861, and the act of March 2, 1901.

In addition to illegal procurement of aircraft and accessories under the provisions of (k) and (q) of the Air Corps Act of 1926, procurement was illegally made by an alleged compliance with Army Regulations (par. 9, A. R. 5–160).

Further unlawful procurement was made allegedly in compliance with Army Regulations 5–240, 1–2, dated October 1, 1932, which reads, in part, as follows:

"Without competition, general authorization: Supplies may be procured without competition only when it is impracticable to secure competition or when purchase without competition is expressly authorized by statutes."

Despite the provisions of the Air Corps Act of 1926 and the interpretations thereof by the Judge Advocate General, the evidence discloses deliberate, willful, and intentional violations of law by the Chief of the Air Corps, aided and abetted by his assistants in charge of procurement.

As a result of continued violations of provisions of the Air Corps Act of 1926 and various subterfuges which were begun immediately following the passage of the act and continually used by the Procurement Division of the Air Corps to evade the clear intent and purpose of the act in regard to the procurement of aircraft in quantity, there has developed a pernicious, unlawful system detrimental to the progress of the Air Corps of the United States and to the adequacy of our national air defense. This system has resulted in favoritism and discrimination, which section 3709 of the Revised Statutes and section 10 (t) of the Air Corps Act sought to eradicate by prescribing competitive bidding, in the Army Air Corps.

The method by which those in charge of the Air Corps were able to continue to violate the law and to impose upon the country their ideas of administering the Air Corps despite the explicit language of the statute was the simple means of flouting the law repeatedly with impunity. Under the terms of the Air Corps Act the Secretary of War has determinations of procurement and purchase, and that office has, as the records disclose, heretofore relied on the Assistant Secretary of War for Air, and/or the Chief of the Air Corps.

The details of national defense being confidential we deem it inadvisable to present a detailed discussion of the present inefficient status of the Air Corps as to equipment, management, and personnel. However, we feel that the situation is such as to merit the concern of those most vitally interested and charged with the prime duty of national defense.

In December 1927 Maj. Gen. Benjamin D. Foulois was appointed Assistant Chief of the Air Corps, and has served in an executive capacity continuously since that time. On June 1, 1929, he took charge of the Matériel Division at Wright Field, Dayton, Ohio, a branch office of the Chief of the Air Corps, and served there for 1 year. His duties under this assignment included all matters relative to bids, negotiations, and preparation of contracts. On July 1, 1930, he returned to Washington as Assistant Chief of the Air Corps, and on December 22, 1931, he took office as Chief of the Air Corps.

It is apparent that from the period of 1927 to date Major General Foulois' assignments made a knowledge of the Air Corps Act of 1926 and the interpretations thereof by the Judge Advocate's Department of the Army, as approved by the Secretary or Assistant Secretary of War, prerequisite for the fulfillment of his duties. During his terms as Assistant Chief of the Air Corps, Chief of the Matériel Division (procurement), Assistant and Acting Chief of the Air Corps, and Chief of the Air Corps, the deliberate and intentional violations of law in connection with the procurement of aircraft and accessories have continued with his sanction and approval.

He even testified under oath that in the interest of Government he had "overlooked the Army regulations and broken them hundreds of times—and I will break them again."

During the course of more than 4 months of extended hearings held by this subcommittee, Major General Foulois, his assistant chief, Brig. Gen. Oscar Westover; his executive assistant, Col. Jacob E. Fickel, and others attached to the office of the Chief of the Air Corps, appeared as witnesses. Their testimony accentuated the deliberations with which the law has been violated and ignored.

On February 1, 1934, Major General Foulois appeared before the House Military Affairs Committee to discuss the situation relative to the Air Corps. He was later given an opportunity to examine his remarks. In order to fully acquaint the House with the situation with which this subcommittee was confronted on his subsequent appearances, and to fully demonstrate the inaccuracy and unreliability of his testimony, certain portions of his original testimony of February 1, 1934, are here set forth together with the alterations thereof of Major General Foulois.

ORIGINAL TESTIMONY	ALTERED TESTIMONY
For 20 years, Mr. Chairman, at least 20 years, I fought consistently against the Army General Staff, trying to build up aviation within the Army.	For 20 years, Mr. Chairman, at least 20 years, I have struggled consistently against the War Department General Staff, in my efforts to build up aviation within the Army.
I announced to the Chief of Staff in his office, 4 days ago, in the presence of the Deputy Chief of Staff, that the steps that they were taking at that time—that was 4 days ago—toward the building up of Army aviation, were the first steps, to my knowledge, in the past 20 years that had been initiated by the General Staff itself.	I announced to the Chief of Staff, in his office, 4 days ago, in the presence of the Deputy Chief of Staff, that the steps that they were taking at that time—that is 4 days ago—toward the building up of Army aviation were the first real constructive steps, to my knowledge, in the past 20 years, that had been initiated by the War Department General Staff itself.
That has been my experience, as I say, for over 20 years, in trying to build up aviation. The main obstacle—the main blocking element—in the War Department has been the War Department General Staff.	This has been my experience, as I say, for over 20 years, in trying to build up aviation. The main obstacle to the more rapid development of aviation in the War Department has, in my belief, been the War Department General Staff.
In saying that, I am not impugning the integrity of any particular individual member of the General Staff nor criticizing any particular member of the General Staff. The General Staff is made up of intelligent men—made up of men who have been trained in other branches of the service. Ninety-nine percent of them have no knowledge of aviation except what they read out of books.	In saying this, I am criticizing the General Staff system as now existing in the War Department. I am not impugning the integrity of any particular individual member of the War Department General Staff nor criticizing any particular member of the General Staff. The General Staff is made up of conscientious and intelligent men, but made up chiefly of men who have been trained in the ground branches of the service, 95 percent of whom have practically no knowledge of aviation except what they have read out of books.
This is a practical problem that has got to be handled by practical men trained in aviation and at the same time who have just as much knowledge, training, and experience on General Staff work and organization of the Army and the other branches of the service as any member of the General Staff.	Army aviation is a practical and highly technical problem that must be developed and controlled by the practical airmen trained in practical aviation, and who, through their own knowledge, training, and experience on staff work and general organization of the Army, as well as the other branches of the service, are better fitted, in my experience, to develop Army aviation than the nonflying members of the General Staff.
That is the basis on which I want to start in connection with building up an organization within the Army, under the War Department, that can go ahead, keep up to date, and not be hampered and hindered by the routine methods that hamper and hinder the Army now.	The foregoing is the basis upon which to start in connection with building up an efficient and economical air organization within the Army, under the War Department; an organization that can go ahead, keep up to date, and not be hampered and hindered by the routine War Department General Staff system and methods, which now guide and govern the development, organization, training, and operations of the Army Air Corps.
We cannot operate under those methods. We cannot operate at a speed of 4 miles an hour, the speed of Infantry. We are hitting it up around a speed of 200 miles an hour. Today the psychology of the development of aviation requires that the organization must be speeded up, and the rest of the Army has got to pull up its speed if we are going to get anywhere.	We cannot efficiently operate under the existing system and methods. We cannot operate at a speed of 4 miles an hour, the speed of the Infantry. We are now operating, in the air, at a speed of 200 miles an hour. Today, the psychology of the development of aviation requires that all other military organizations must increase their speed of operations, and the rest of the Army must be reorganized with this in view, if it ever expects to effectively use the modern military weapons of war.
I will give you the very latest action of the General Staff. You have had it yourself in this bill.	The day before yesterday, in the evening, I presented to you, Mr. Chairman, a draft of a proposed piece of legislation which I delivered to you informally under the direction of the Chief of Staff. You will remember that there was a proviso in that first draft that I submitted the day before yesterday which fixed a ratio in aircraft between the Army and the Navy; a ratio which the Chief of Staff considered necessary to properly take care of the Army Air Corps in this general move to build up the air defenses of the United States.
The day before yesterday, in the evening, I presented to you a draft of a proposed piece of legislation which I delivered to you informally under the directions of the Chief of Staff. If you have read it, you will remember that there was a proviso in that first draft that I submitted the day before yesterday that fixed a ratio between the Army and the Navy to what we felt was necessary to take care of the Army Air Corps in this general move to build up the air defenses of the United States.	Within 24 hours the first draft was changed. The new draft that you have on your desk now I do not have a copy of. It was supposed to have been furnished to me, but I did not receive it. It was presented to you formally and officially over the signature of the Secretary of War. The new draft contains an ambiguous clause. I visited the Deputy Chief of Staff and the Chief of Staff last night and they asked me to read it. I read it and the point that stood out was that the new formal draft fixed a maximum limitation of 2,000 airplanes. In other words, within 24 hours the War Department General Staff policy had changed. I asked the reason for it, and was advised to the effect that the amendment provided for more leeway in securing the number of airplanes desired. I had a different explanation from a General Staff officer this morning to the effect that it was put in there deliberately for the purpose of ambiguity.
Within 24 hours they changed that. The paper that you have on your desk now I do not have a copy of. It was supposed to have been furnished to me, but I did not receive it. It was presented to you formally and officially over the signature of the Secretary of War. That contains an ambiguous clause in it. I went before the Deputy Chief of Staff and the Chief of Staff last night, and they asked me to read it. I read it, and the very point that I brought out was that that proviso sets a maximum limitation on what we can do. Inside of 24 hours they had changed the policy. I asked the reason for it. It is just a little more leeway in order to enable them to handle what they want. But I got no explanation. I did get an explanation from a General Staff officer this morning to the effect that it was put in there deliberately for the purposes of ambiguity. Whom are they trying to fool? You? Me? Or someone else?	Mr. James brought out this very point, and it should be kept in mind in connection with these hearings. It is this very ambiguity which in the final analysis may give to the General Staff full authority, in the future, to fix any limitation on Army aircraft they may desire.
I am suspicious. As I say, I fought them for 20 years, and I think they are trying to fool you and trying to fool me.	Mr. James has also brought out the point that these points must definitely be fixed by law, if you want to have them the way they ought to be.
Mr. James brought out the point that should be kept in mind in connection with this very thing. A lot of this is covered in a concrete case, but it represents the trouble that we have had in the past 20 years. It is the very ambiguity which, in the final analysis, gives the responsibility to the General Staff to do as they blame please. That is why that provision is in there, in my opinion.	* * * * *
* * * * *
The very point that I am trying to develop is the neces-	The vital point that I am trying to develop is the necessity

ORIGINAL TESTIMONY—contd.	ALTERED TESTIMONY—contd.
sity of having an independent organization that can function without a lot of obstruction.	of having an independent Army Air Corps organization that can function efficiently outside of the present cumbersome General Staff system.

Further in this testimony Major General Foulois, in discussing the procurement for the Air Corps under the Public Works Administration, stated that under the old routine the Chief of the Air Corps would have been called upon by the Assistant Secretary of War for Air to prepare the program. He further stated:

"Now without an Assistant Secretary of War for Air that program is brought up by the General Staff without even consulting the Chief of the Air Corps."

In our previous report we pointed out the falsity of this statement by setting forth an official communication dated November 29, 1933, addressed to the Chief of the Air Corps from the budget office of the War Department, advising him of the availability of funds for the procurement of aircraft and requesting advice thereon "indicating the monthly apportionment desired." Major General Foulois further testified:

"We have no control over our bombs, our machine-gun ammunition, our guns, our radio equipment, all of which go to make up a combatant fighting military airplane."

As to this statement, we call attention to the testimony of Maj. Gen. Hugh A. Drum, Deputy Chief of Staff, who, when his attention was called to Major General Foulois' testimony in regard to the matter, testified, under oath, in part, as follows:

"If he has not represented the needs of the Air Corps in machine guns and bombs and radio equipment, and so forth, he has neglected his duty. No doubt there is a control, because all the money we want is never given us, naturally."

Major General Foulois also testified:

I never have an opportunity to defend the request for the things that we need; pay of the Army Air Corps, the Reserve officers that we are supposed to have; the Reserve officers that are supposed to be on extended active duty—all of those elements, anything that has to do with pay, with Reserve officers, with armament, machine guns, bombs, Signal Corps equipment (that is, radio), are all under other branches of the War Department, and I am expected to take the responsibility. It is the Chief of the Air Corps that has the responsibility for building up the Air Corps, and he is not allowed to make the recommendations, or if he does make the recommendations, no attention is paid to him; he is never called in to defend his own recommendations; he is never called in to defend the requests for amounts of money, either before the Budget Director or before Congress. Yet, when the money is allotted, it is usually allotted regardless of his own recommendations, and in the end he is harnessed with a responsibility to get the thing done.	I never have an opportunity to defend the requests for many of the things that we need, such as pay of the Army Air Corps, the pay of Reserve officers that we are required to have, the number of Reserve officers that are required to be on extended active duty, or anything else that has to do with pay, with armament, machine guns, bombs, Signal Corps radio equipment, all of which are under other branches of the War Department. It is the Chief of the Air Corps who is charged with the responsibility for building up the Air Corps, yet he is not called upon to make full recommendations; or if he does, on his own initiative, make such recommendations, War Department priorities usually render such recommendations of no value. He is seldom called in to defend his recommendations in connection with funds appropriated to other branches for Air Corps purposes. He is never called in to defend, before the Director of the Budget or before Congress, funds estimated for by other branches for Air Corps purposes. Yet, with all these financial restrictions and handicaps, the Chief of the Air Corps is held responsible for the efficient and economical administration and operation of the Army Air Corps.

In order to emphasize the falsity of this testimony and as further evidence of his deliberate attempts to mislead, certain records of the War Department are set forth:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
November 8, 1926.

Subject: War Department appropriations.
To: The Chief of Finance.

Hereafter chiefs of War Department branches and bureaus will be present during the entire time that hearings are being held for appropriations pertaining to their respective branches by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget and by committees of Congress.

By order of the Secretary of War.

R. S. KIMBALL, Adjutant General.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE BUDGET OFFICER,
Washington, August 16, 1930.

Subject: Hearings on War Department estimates, fiscal year 1932, before the Bureau of the Budget.

1. The hearings on the War Department estimates for the fiscal year 1932 before the Director of the Bureau of the Budget are scheduled for 1:30 p. m., August 25, 26, 27, 29, and September 2, 3, 5, 8, 9. Each arm, service, or bureau will be informed as much in advance as possible of the date and hour its representatives will be required to appear.

2. The Chief of Staff will open the hearings at 1:30 p. m., August 25, and it is desired that each chief of arm, service, or bureau of the War Department be present at that time.

3. In general, the order of the hearings will be that in which the appropriations appear in the bill, beginning with departmental salaries, followed by printing and binding, contingent, and military items. The nonmilitary items will be taken up in the order in which they occur in the bill after completion of all military items.

4. In order that this office may have record of the names of witnesses to appear, and the portion of the estimates which each will explain, it is requested that this office be furnished, on or before August 23, with a list of the appropriation titles pertaining to your activity, including departmental salaries and printing and binding, with names of the witnesses who will appear to explain the same.

5. In connection with the hearings now scheduled and the hearings to be held by the committees of Congress, your attention is invited to letter of November 8, 1926, from The Adjutant General to the chiefs of branches as follows:

"Hereafter, chiefs of War Department branches and bureaus will be present during the entire time that hearings are being held for appropriations pertaining to their respective branches by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget and by committees of Congress."

By authority of the Secretary of War:

R. L. CARMICHAEL,
Major General,
Budget Officer for the War Department.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE BUDGET OFFICER,
Washington, September 22, 1933.

Subject: Hearings by Deputy Chief of Staff on military estimates, fiscal year 1935.

To the Chiefs of Arms, Services, and Bureaus:

1. For the purpose of preparing a general plan for the justification of the military estimates of the War Department for the fiscal year 1935, and to conduct a rehearsal of the testimony to be presented by each Chief of Arm, Service, or Bureau before the Bureau of the Budget, hearings will be conducted before the Deputy Chief of Staff in the General Council Room, State, War, and Navy Building, beginning Monday, October 2, 1933, and continuing from 9:30 a. m. to 12 m. and 1.30 p. m. to 4:30 p. m. each day until completed. Hearings will include approved changes in language.

2. The schedule of the hearings will follow in sequence the arrangement of appropriations as carried in the Appropriation Act, 1934, beginning with the Assistant Chief of Staff, G–2, estimate for "Contingencies, Military Intelligence Division", and concluding with the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice.

3. Each Chief of Arm, Service, or Bureau, accompanied by such assistants as will be present at the Bureau of the Budget hearings, will attend. Notification of the date and hour of branch hearings will be furnished through the fiscal officers concerned.

By authority of the Secretary of War:

F. W. COLEMAN,
Major General,
Budget Officer of the War Department.

The attention of the Deputy Chief of Staff, Major General Drum, was called to the statement of Major General Foulois as quoted above, and at the request of the subcommittee he attended a hearing, was duly sworn as a witness, and testified that Major General Foulois had every opportunity to "appear before the Budget Advisory Committee and before the Bureau of the Budget and before Congress." He also said that Major General Foulois "has every opportunity to present the views and recommendations before the program for the year has been made up before the Budget Advisory Committee or Bureau of the Budget and Congress on everything that pertains to the Air Corps, whether it is supplied by the Air Corps or some other branch."

After characterizing the above-quoted statement of Major General Foulois as a misstatement of fact, Major General Drum further emphasized that Major General Foulois has—"an opportunity to make his statement on anything that pertains to his branch and question of money for reserve, the question of bombs, machine guns, radio equipment—and there is an opportunity afforded him in his appearance and statements to cover those subjects. There is no restriction on him. He is ordered to do it and he is neglecting his duty if he does not present them."

In corroboration of his testimony, Major General Drum submitted a memorandum prepared by the Chief of the Budget and Legislative Planning Branch of the War Department showing that—

"as the first step in the preparation of the tentative directives for the military estimates for the fiscal years 1932 to 1936, both inclusive, all chiefs of arms, branches, and bureaus were directed to communicate directly with each interested division of the General Staff, submitting thereto their recommendations, if any, as to new activities pertaining to their respective offices to be provided for, or former activities to be abandoned or modified in the estimates for the fiscal year under consideration.

In conformity therewith, the Chief of Air Corps each year submitted the predicted requirements of the Air Corps in personnel, material, and training, and made such recommendations with reference to Ordnance Department, Signal Corps, and Organized Reserve requirements as were pertinent. General Foulois became Chief of the Air Corps on December 22, 1931. At that time, the Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1932 was financing current expenditures. The Military Subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee was holding hearings on the fiscal year 1933 estimates, the Air Corps' portion of which was presented by General Foulois on January 5, 1932. The call for recommendations concerning the fiscal year 1934 directive was made on December 30, 1931, 8 days after General Foulois took office. On January 12, 1932, General Foulois signed a memorandum for the Assistant Chiefs of Staff, G–1, G–3, and G–4, setting forth the requirements of the Air Corps for the tentative directive, fiscal year 1934. This memorandum covered the field of Air Corps activities and stated the requirements in great detail. (Italics ours.)

"On March 31, 1932, General Foulois appeared in person before the Budget Advisory Committee and with the aid of five assistants presented the Air Corps' estimates for the fiscal year 1934. Before forwarding the report of the Budget Advisory Committee for approval by higher authority, the budget officer for the War Department on June 20, 1932, informed the Chief of Air Corps of its recommendations concerning Air Corps activities and instructed him to submit any statement concerning these recommendations he saw fit. In reply thereto, the then Acting Chief of Air Corps (General Westover) on June 22, 1932, submitted a reclama regarding the recommendations on the number of pilots and airplanes and the amount of equipment to be provided. This reclama was carefully considered by the successive reviewing authorities at the time the Budget Advisory Committee's report was examined, and an additional amount aggregating $1,088,014 over that allowed by the Budget Advisory Committee was allotted to the Air Corps. General Westover was present and presented the Air Corps' contentions at the meeting of the general council which recommended the increase. On October 20, 1932, General Foulois appeared before Mr. Roop, Director of the Budget, and personally presented the Air Corps' estimates. On December 14, 1932, he presented the Air Corps' estimates before the Military Subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee." (Italics ours.)

"Before the War Department's expenditure program for the fiscal year 1934 could be promulgated the incoming Director of the Bureau of the Budget imposed a limitation on the amounts that could be withdrawn from the Treasury during the fiscal year 1934. The Chief of the Air Corps did not participate in the negotiations and conferences which took place at that time between representatives of the Secretary of War and of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget for the reason that the Director of the Bureau of the Budget prescribed that no one except the immediate advisers of the Secretary of War should be informed in the matter. However, the War Department's representatives did succeed in having the limitation of $16,557,915 originally imposed on the Air Corps by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget raised to $20,612,400. As soon as the limiting Air Corps figure was finally prescribed by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, the Chief of Air Corps was promptly informed of the amount that had been allotted to his establishment and was requested to consider the effect on Air Corps activities and to submit recommendations concerning possible transfers to his appropriation from other appropriations, at the same time indicating the appropriations that could be reduced and the reasons therefor. In reply the Chief of Air Corps recommended that $150,000 should be transferred from "Air Corps, Army" to "Organized Reserves", and this recommendation was approved.

"On February 13, 1933, General Foulois signed a memorandum for the Assistant Chiefs of Staff, G–1, G–3, and G–4, setting forth the requirements of the Air Corps for the tentative directive, fiscal year 1935. Among the recommendations covering the requirements of the Air Corps was included the following: 'It is recommended that there be no limiting figure which will prevent the submission of programs by the Ordnance Department and the Signal Corps for the procurement of material provided by these departments for use by the Air Corps. This recommendation is submitted with particular reference toward securing estimates for the necessary bombs, machine guns, and radio sets.' On July 17, 1933, General Westover personally appeared before the Budget Advisory Committee and presented the Air Corps' requirements in the detail they desired. The Budget Advisory Committee carefully coordinated Air Corps requirements estimated for by other bureaus and consulted with Air Corps representatives to assure itself that the Air Corps was properly provided for in such estimates. Although afforded an opportunity by the budget officer for the War Department to state any disagreement with the recommendations of the Budget Advisory Committee, the Chief of Air Corps did not avail himself of the opportunity. (Italics ours.)

"On October 18, 1933, General Foulois personally appeared before the representative of the Bureau of the Budget (Colonel Dasher) who was examining the War Department's estimates in the office of the budget officer for the War Department and presented the Air Corps' requirements. On November 13, 1933, General Foulois personally appeared before the Assistant Director of the Bureau of the Budget (Mr. Lowry), who was conducting hearings in the Bureau of the Budget on the War Department's estimates, and read a formal statement concerning Air Corps requirements. Following this, he replied at length to questions propounded to him and discussed the activities of his establishment at length. On February 14, 1934, General Foulois appeared personally before the military subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee and discussed Air Corps requirements in the greatest detail. (Italics ours.)

"On March 24, 1934, General Foulois signed a memorandum for the assistant chiefs of staff, G–1, G–3, and G–4, setting forth the requirements of the Air Corps for the tentative directive, fiscal year 1936. The Budget Advisory Committee has not held hearings in the Air Corps' estimates, but General Foulois will be given the opportunity of presenting the Air Corps requirements at the proper time. The tentative directive provides for 'the completion of the Five-year Air Corps Program.'

"With reference to the control of the Chief of Air Corps over bombs, other ammunition, machine guns, and radio equipment, bureaus other than the Air Corps are required by law to procure, store, and issue such items. In this respect, the Air Corps is in the same position as other using services, except that since the enactment of the Air Corps Act of July 2, 1926, the Air Corps has been accorded preferential treatment. With reference to bombs and other ammunition, the Chief of Air Corps is allotted annual allowances on a money value basis and credits are established in ordnance establishments which issue to the Air Corps the items requisitioned for up to the amount of money value available. The situation would not be changed if funds for these purposes were carried in the appropriation 'Air Corps, Army.' The decision as to the amount of funds to be carried in War Department estimates for these purposes would be made by the same authority which now prescribes the ammunition allowances."

In view of the records, testimony, and quotations above referred to we find as a fact that, notwithstanding his testimony to the contrary, Major General Foulois was given full opportunity to present and defend his proposed budgets for the Air Corps, and that he availed himself of such privilege.

AIR MAIL

A glaring example of mismanagement and inefficiency on the part of Major General Foulois is apparent from his actions or failures to act in connection with the plans and preparations prior to the transportation of the air mail. Major General Foulois testified, under oath, on March 1, 1934, that he was advised of the probability that the Army Air Corps might be called on to carry the mail on February 9, 1934, and that when asked "Whether or not the officers, men, and material were in such state and training and condition to do it" he told the Assistant Postmaster General that he was "quite certain" that the Air Corps could handle the job and that he thought he would be ready to move personnel and material in a week or 10 days. He further testified that he was then given 10 days to prepare for transportation of the air mail. The testimony also shows that Brig. Gen. Oscar Westover, Assistant Chief of the Air Corps, who was put in charge of the air-mail operations the day following the order given for transportation, was not consulted by Major General Foulois or any other officer with reference to the condition of the Air Corps for the proper handling of the air mail, notwithstanding the fact that Brigadier General Westover was available and that he testified that he would ordinarily be consulted in such a move. Brigadier General Westover also testified as follows, in regard to this proposition:

"Mr. ROGERS. Considering the other factors, danger, equipment, landing-field accommodations—considering all those other factors in connection with it, do you feel that at that time, you would have recommended in favor of carrying the mail by the Air Corps?

"General WESTOVER. I doubt whether I would. I certainly would have consulted with the War Department officials with reference to their complications, the question of leasing and doing things of that kind. I mean there are so many angles to it that it would have taken some time to have reached a decision.

"Mr. ROGERS. You would not have felt like doing it until you had considerable time to look into the matter further?

"General WESTOVER. Yes, sir.

"Mr. ROGERS. You would not have been ready at that time?

"General WESTOVER. I would not have been ready. I would not have made an immediate decision."

Apparently after a realization of the detrimental effect of his testimony Brigadier General Westover conveyed to the committee the impression that he may not have been in Washington when the decision for the transportation of the air mail was made, but later undoubtedly realizing the serious nature of testimony under oath, wrote the committee on March 14, 1934, that he was "on duty and available in this city (Washington) from the 1st to the 9th of February, * * *."

Major General Foulois further testified in answer to the question "what experience had they (Army pilots) had in night flying before they took up the mail work" replied:

"I think nearly practically every one of the officers employed on this averaged, even before they graduated from the training center, 30 to 40 hours of night flying; and the men that are employed now on the lines, with possibly an isolated exception here and there averaged I would say 50 to 60 hours at the beginning on night flying. They had that experience before going on the lines."

From records submitted to the committee it appears that D. O. Lowry, second lieutenant, Air Corps, had only 17½ hours' night flying up to the time, of his fatal injury while carrying the mail; another, W. M. Reid, second lieutenant, Air Corps Reserve, had only 8⅓ hours' night flying prior to his crashing while carrying the mail. Other officers involved in night crashes on regular mail runs had the following hours of night flying: H. L. Dietz, second lieutenant, Reserve, 24 hours 25 minutes; N. R. Burnett, second lieutenant, Air Corps, 13 hours; and C. P. Hollstein, second lieutenant, Reserve, 9 hours 50 minutes.

In connection with accidents incident to administration work connected with the air mail, the records show the following:

NIGHT FLYING

	Hrs.	Mins.
G. F. McDermott, second lieutenant, Reserve	13	20
J. H. Rothrock, second lieutenant, Reserve	6	00
W. S. Pocock, second lieutenant, Reserve	12	10
N. H. Crumley, second lieutenant, Reserve	21	15

Further testimony before the committee showed the total lack of preparation made by the Chief and Assistant Chief of the Air Corps for the welfare of the personnel engaged in the carrying of the mail, the preparation in regard to their per diem allowances, working conditions and the availability of hangars within which the planes were to be housed during the time for necessary repairs and inspection.

EXHIBIT B

[House of Representatives, Report No. —, 74th Cong., 1st sess.]

WAR DEPARTMENT INVESTIGATION—FINAL REPORT BY SUBCOMMITTEE NO. 3 OF THE COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS, DESIGNATED BY SAID COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE TRANSACTIONS OF THE WAR DEPARTMENT

To the Speaker and House of Representatives:

Your Subcommittee No. 3 of the Committee on Military Affairs, having conducted many hearings relating to the transactions of the War Department, beg leave to make the following final report of our acts and doings and conclusions upon the same:

Your subcommittee has held a great many hearings, has examined scores of witnesses, has inspected volumes of records and documents and has patiently worked to ascertain the facts relating to War Department business transactions, such as the purchase of material, motor cars, airplanes, and supplies generally. Your committee has studiously avoided sensationalism and has scrupulously protected the names and reputations of various persons whose conduct was brought into question.

After months of diligent investigation your subcommittee held a lengthy conference with the Secretary of War and revealed to him many of the facts that have come to the attention of the committee and the names of some of the persons that have been under investigation. The Secretary of War assured your committee that he would promptly take steps to have the conduct of such persons further investigated by the Inspector General of the Army and subsequently the Secretary of War officially notified the committee of his action in which he had ordered a prompt and searching investigation by the Inspector General.

The investigation by your committee was in no sense the result of the investigation by the grand jury of the District of Columbia which began early in February 1934, and continued through several weeks. The Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs on March 20, 1933, introduced House Concurrent Resolution 6 seeking an investigation into the existing establishments of national defense. Failing to obtain favorable action upon said concurrent resolution, the chairman of the committee on January 11, 1934, introduced House Resolution 219, seeking to set up a special committee of the House to make a survey of all the facts affecting the existing establishments for national defense. Failing to obtain favorable action on House Resolution 219, the chairman of the committee on February 30, 1934, introduced House Resolution 275, to authorize the Committee on Military Affairs to conduct the investigation into War Department transactions. This House Resolution 275 was unanimously adopted by the House, and subsequently the House, by House Resolution 284, authorized the payment of the expenses of conducting such investigation not to exceed $10,000. Subsequently the House by resolution increased the amount from $10,000 to $30,000, for the purpose of defraying the necessary expenses incident to such investigation.

Your committee is pleased to report that it has expended only about one-fourth of the amount authorized by the House.

Your committee desires to acknowledge with thanks the cooperation given by the Honorable J. R. McCarl, Comptroller General of the United States, for lending to the committee the services of certain of the trained attorneys and accountants in his office. Furthermore, your committee acknowledges with appreciation the services rendered by an officer of the War Department from the Division of the Inspector General of the Army. Furthermore, the committee takes pleasure in recording the splendid cooperation that has been rendered by the Department of Justice, especially through the Bureau of Investigation, and by the Bureau of Internal Revenue of the Treasury Department.

It was freely circulated through the press of the country that the grand jury of the District of Columbia, which investigated certain phases of War Department transactions, failed to return any indictment against any individual but that the said grand jury did, through the United States attorney of the District of Columbia, communicate certain recommendations to the President of the United States and to the Secretary of War concerning War Department affairs. Your committee is reliably informed that this special report of the grand jury contained several criticisms of the methods and practices obtaining in certain parts of the War Department.

In addition, the pernicious practice of political and personal lobbyists, collecting fees upon the pretense of being able to exert influence upon War Department officials charged with responsibilities of either purchasing property or selling surplus property, was severely and forcibly condemned. The result of the investigation by your committee justifies it in joining heartily in the criticisms made by the grand jury and in its condemnation of the pernicious practice of lobbying in the manner under scrutiny.

Your committee recognizes that there is a proper form of lobbying relating to legislation whereby the so-called "lobbyist" furnishes information relating to the subject under consideration. But where individuals, whether members of the bar or not, collect large fees upon the pretense of being able to exert influence and to bring about official action in favor of the person paying the large fees, your committee thinks it is a most serious and deplorable practice. Your committee is glad to report that from its finding such improper and undue influence is actually exerted in relatively few cases. But the wrong consists largely in obtaining money from credulous business people who are led to believe that public officials are either weak enough or corrupt enough to take action not based upon the merits but based upon the personal influence of the lobbyist.

MAJ. GEN. BENJAMIN D. FOULOIS

At the time of the transmittal of the communication of August 21, 1934, to your subcommittee by the Secretary of War, he evidently had been informed or advised by Major General Foulois that Major General Foulois had been denied the opportunity to appear before the subcommittee or before the full committee on the matters covered in the two preliminary reports of your committee. That is clearly indicated from the phraseology of the letter.

This opinion, apparently entertained by the Secretary of War, was completely erroneous. The records bear out the positive assertion of your committee that Major General Foulois had appeared before the full Committee on Military Affairs or before your subcommittee and had testified at least once regarding each of the specific findings embodied in the two preliminary reports. Upon some of them he had appeared more than one time.

The Secretary of War conferred in person with the members of your subcommittee on December 13, when sessions had been resumed, and the true facts were given him in detail. Your committee will outline them briefly.

The subcommittee no. 3 of the committee, on May 7 last, reported to the House (Rept. No. 1506, 73d Cong., 2d sess.) its findings on the matter of the expenditure of the $7,500,000 allocated to the War Department for the purchase of airplanes out of Public Works Administration funds and reported that the action of Assistant Secretary of War Harry L. Woodring in the matter was in full accord with the spirit and the letter of existing law while the action of the Chief of the Air Corps, Maj. Gen. Benjamin D. Foulois, was in the opinion of the subcommittee and in the opinion of the Judge Advocate General of the Army and the Comptroller General of the United States in clear violation of existing law.

The subcommittee further reported in the matter that the statement Major General Foulois made to the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations on War Department appropriations that before bids were invited a change was made in the specifications by The Assistant Secretary of War, was untrue and not in accordance with the facts.

The subcommittee no. 3, on June 15 last, made another report to the House (Rept. No. 2060, 73d Cong., 2d sess.) in which it reported to the House certain violations and evasions of law and Army regulations by Major General Foulois as well as certain gross misconduct and inefficiency on his part and recommended that he should be relieved from his position as Chief of the Air Corps by the Secretary of War. The report was printed as a House document and a copy of the report was given to the press for the information of the public generally, and a copy was transmitted by the chairman of the subcommittee to the Secretary of War for his information.

In the letter of August 21 addressed to the chairman of the subcommittee, the Secretary of War stated that he could take no action looking to the removal of Major General Foulois as Chief of the Air Corps for the reason that the recommendation of the committee was not based upon a full and complete hearing wherein the constitutional rights of the accused were assured. The letter of the Secretary of War is appended hereto, marked "Exhibit A."

The Secretary stated further that since the subcommittee recommended the removal of Major General Foulois, he could not refer the case to a military tribunal, since such a step might suggest a reflection on the subcommittee. The subcommittee conducted its investigation in full compliance with the precedents and practices adhered to by congressional investigating committees since the very beginning of the Government. The subcommittee was not and could not be in any sense a trial court.

The subcommittee fully understands that an investigation by the Congress or by any committee thereof is in no sense a trial. Such an investigation is merely what it declares itself to be, and what all persons experienced in legislative matters understand it to be, namely, an inquiry seeking to ascertain facts relating either to officials of the Government or to the methods of conducting the business or the duties of the various departments and bureaus thereof. If, in the conduct of such investigation, any kind of official misconduct or failure of duty or violation of either the civil or criminal laws of the Congress are found, it has been the unbroken custom and practice from time immemorial for the investigating committee or body to give notice and information to the proper department or bureau as to the nature of the facts ascertained and of the names of the persons affected thereby. The Senate has in recent years conducted a great number of investigations, and in many of them has uncovered acts of criminality or breaches of trust on the part of public officials. The subcommittee, therefore, was following the line of usual procedure in such matters when it transmitted to the Secretary of War a copy of its report.

The hearings of the subcommittee were made executive at the insistence of Major General Foulois himself. The deliberations, the findings, and the recommendations of the subcommittee were based entirely and solely on matters upon which Major General Foulois had appeared and, as previously stated, had testified before your committee, in some instances more than once. The subcommittee endeavored repeatedly to get Major General Foulois to appear and testify further before it for some several weeks before its report was made to the House. Each time, however, the efforts of the subcommittee were met with the plea from Major General Foulois that he had to be out of the city, or was ill, or for some reason could not come to testify.

The subcommittee could not wait indefinitely, as adjournment of Congress was rapidly approaching, and it felt that in the public interest it must make its report to the House before the adjournment of the Congress. It therefore proceeded to eliminate from its consideration and deliberations all matters upon which Major General Foulois had not testified, and to reach its determination in the case solely and entirely on those matters upon which Major General Foulois had appeared and testified.

A thoughtful reading of the report will confirm this fact.

The subcommittee carefully placed in the report to the House only such evidence as it had considered in reaching its determinations and it was on this evidence, and this evidence alone, that the findings and the recommendation of the subcommittee were based. We therefore reiterate that as to all these matters Major General Foulois did testify.

The subcommittee received advice and assurances from high and responsible authorities in the War Department as to procedure in the case and confidently expected that the case would be referred to a military tribunal for appropriate action. The subcommittee knew that the Secretary of War had no power himself under the law peremptorily to remove Major General Foulois. It did not regard its recommendation as in any sense a mandate to the Secretary of War, for the subcommittee well knows that neither it nor the House of Representatives has the power to issue a mandate to the Secretary of War dealing with an administrative matter in his Department. The recommendation stands for what it is worth, and leaves the matter of procedure and the mode of action to the responsibility of the Secretary of War.

The findings of the subcommittee were:

"(1) Major General Foulois willfully and deliberately violated existing law in the purchase of airplanes and aircraft material.

"(2) He accused superior officers of willfully attempting to deceive this committee.

"(3) He testified falsely before the subcommittee as to his opportunity and authority in presenting Air Corps needs to the Director of the Budget.

"(4) He advised the Second Assistant Postmaster General that the Air Corps was prepared to fly the air mail when the record shows that he as Chief of the Air Corps should have known differently."

To illustrate this last finding we recapitulate and quote from the report of the subcommittee, report no. 2060, page 12:

"Major General Foulois further testified in answer to the question. 'What experience had they (Army pilots) had in night flying before they took up the mail work', replied:

"'I think nearly practically every one of the officers employed on this averaged, even before they graduated from the training center, 30 to 40 hours of night flying; and the men that are employed now on the lines with possibly an isolated exception here and there averaged, I would say, 50 to 60 hours at the beginning on night flying. They had that experience before going on the lines.'

"* * * records submitted to the committee * * * [show] that D. O. Lowry, second lieutenant, Air Corps, had only 17½ hours' night flying up to the time of his fatal injury while carrying the mail; another W. M. Reid, second lieutenant, Air Corps Reserve, had only 8⅓ hours' night flying prior to his crashing while carrying the mail. Other officers involved in night crashes on regular mail runs had the following hours of night flying: H. L. Dietz, second lieutenant, Reserve, 24 hours 25 minutes; N. R. Burnett, second lieutenant, Air Corps, 13 hours; and C. P. Hollstein, second lieutenant, Reserve, 9 hours 50 minutes.

"In connection with accidents incident to administration work connected with the air mail, the reports show the following:

NIGHT FLYING

	Hrs.	Mins.
G. F. McDermott, second lieutenant, Reserve	13	20
J. H. Rothrock, second lieutenant, Reserve	6	00
W. S. Pocock, second lieutenant, Reserve	12	10
N. H. Crumley, second lieutenant, Reserve	21	15

Since the subcommittee made its Report No. 2060 on June 15, 1934, we are informed that Major General Foulois has been stripped and shorn by the War Department of much of his power and authority. On December 13 last, after the Secretary of War had appeared before and conferred with the subcommittee, the Secretary immediately, on said December 13, issued an order to the Inspector General of the Army to initiate promptly a searching and complete investigation into the facts concerning Major General Foulois, and to make to the Secretary a full report at the earliest practicable date. Such action is the usual step preliminary to placing such a matter before a military tribunal.

The subcommittee is pleased to report that because of its insistence together with the attitude, the efforts, and the cooperation of The Assistant Secretary of War, Mr. Woodring, and the Comptroller General of the United States, Mr. McCarl, it is understood the law providing for the purchase of airplanes and aircraft material is being substantially complied with at this time by the War Department.

MOTOR VEHICLES AND SURPLUS PROPERTY

The evidence, written and oral, developed by the committee, establishes a deplorable condition that has existed over a long period of years, prejudicial both to the interest of the United States and to the interests of those individuals and corporations seeking business with the United States, especially in the fields of motor vehicles and surplus property.

On the one hand, there have been disclosed special agents, or lobbyists, for certain dealers, who have been employed almost solely by reason of their supposed ability to make special contacts with Government officials and to secure special consideration or advance information for their employers. These special agents or lobbyists have had practically unsupervised and liberal drawing accounts for expenses, through which Government officials willing to accept such favors have been generously entertained in the homes of these lobbyists and in the more expensive hotels of the District of Columbia. It also was testified loans or gifts in money, apparently, have been made to at least two War Department officials in high positions.

Special discounts and favorable trades on the purchase of new cars also have been given to inspection officers in a position to influence the purchase of cars, which special discounts and favorable trades were not open to the general public, or even to other officers of the Army not having to do with procurement, except in one instance which has been admitted of a corps area commander who obtained such special discount on the purchase of a new car by making his request through an inspecting subordinate officer.

On the other hand, there have been disclosed officials having authority in the matter of inspection and procurement, who not only have willingly accepted frequent entertainment and special discounts as offered to them but have sought such entertainment. Loans of money and gratuities of various sorts have, in addition, been offered to these officials in return for which it appears to be established that they have given advance information relating to specifications and probable purchases, to the extent that a rivalry has grown up between the lobbyists for certain motor vehicle concerns and surplus property dealers.

This practice has grown to such an extent that the rival factions looking for this business have produced a condition whereby, at certain times, one concern, or more, has been "written out" of specifications. The concern or concerns "written out", however, usually have been able at some later period to have specifications written largely around their own product and to have the concern "written out" which previously had been "written in." No matter which dealer has been favored by the specifications, the situation which has existed has stifled any bona fide competition and has frustrated the purposes of the Congress, as expressed in the statutes, and has prejudiced the national defense.

In at least one instance the specifications were changed from 200-cubic inch displacement to 205-cubic inch displacement, which "wrote out" of the specifications a certain manufacturer of a popular truck, so that when he bid he was required to furnish a much larger engine and a more expensive engine in competition with his competitors.

The testimony produced shows that at one time full force-feed lubrication was required in certain specifications, drawn in the War Department, and had it not been for agitation through this committee, and otherwise, resulting in the specifications being modified, it would have been necessary for one truck manufacturer to increase his cost of production by at least $10 per truck, in order to compete.

Your committee finds that so-called "military characteristics" have frequently been written into specifications, so that standard products could not be furnished by competing concerns.

It seems to your committee that these specifications should, as far as possible, pertain only to standard makes or standard specifications for ordinary trucks. In case of war, only standard equipment would be available in large quantity production.

We see no proper basis for the writing of any standard product out of the specifications, on the basis of cubic-inch displacement, until the products of the various dealers have been submitted to an unprejudiced test, such as a dynamometer test in the Bureau of Standards.

A further criticism that your committee desires to offer is that specifications for the trucks are not written far enough in advance of the actual purchase to enable those manufacturers whose products do not conform with the specifications to compete on equal terms with those whose products substantially do conform to the specifications as written.

From evidence adduced, your committee feels that the War Department should change its policy in connection with the sending out of invitations to bid so that ample time is given to all those desiring to enter the competition. As soon as the appropriate bills have become law the War Department should immediately start its plan of procurement and not wait until toward the end of the fiscal year before making the actual purchases. Your committee finds by evidence that, in many cases, purchases have been so delayed that it has necessitated telegraphic communications on invitations for bidding.

Your committee recommends further that the writing of the specifications for all motor vehicles for the War Department should be made by a single agency, rather than having the heads of a bureau or bureau chiefs made responsible in the different arms of the service.

During the 1933 fiscal year the War Department appropriation subcommittee changed its policy, so that the responsibility was placed upon the Chief of the Bureau of Militia in writing the specifications for the Militia Bureau trucks. The Quartermaster General testified before your committee that this change was made without consultation with him.

Your committee found that bad practices existed at Camp Holabird in connection with the opening of bids. In fact, a sign was posted in the office of the contracting and purchasing officer to the effect that no information would be given to bidders in reference to the exceptions or details of a competitor's bid after the opening. When this was called to the attention of the Quartermaster General by your committee that practice was ordered to be discontinued, so that it is understood such information now is available to competitors after the bids are opened.

Your committee adds a recommendation which has been arrived at only after the most careful thought and study, and after extensive consultation with The Assistant Secretary of War and his staff, the Quartermaster General and members of his staff, and qualified representatives of the automotive industry. It recommends that previous to the issuance of invitations for bids, conferences be held by the Quartermaster General in which authorized representatives of the industry shall meet with him or his representative, together with The Assistant Secretary of War and the Comptroller General, or their representatives.

Your committee feels that such conferences will constitute a fundamental and an effective step in eliminating the great bulk of the sorry practices which have grown up, some of which have heretofore been described. It is pleased to report that among the long line of witnesses it has heard upon this proposal, representing all the offices and the industrial groups mentioned, all have heartily acquiesced and declared their intention of bringing such procedure into operation.

Specifications will as a result be less restrictive, and will, in the language of Mr. James, be "broad enough so that they will be satisfactory to the Comptroller General, the War Department, and the industry itself." Complaints would be reduced in number, changes fewer, and the pernicious activities of lobbyists sharply curbed.

At this point your committee desires to note that early in its investigation it learned with dismay that a combination of circumstances had left only one motor concern eligible to bid on War Department as well as on all Government proposals for the lighter type of motor vehicles. This one concern for a time was supplying the large needs of the Government without competition, and the record indicates that the cost to the Government was appreciably higher as a result thereof.

Through its own findings and activities, your committee is able to report that such situation has been corrected. At least two competing concerns, and on some occasions more, have been eligible to offer bids in response to every invitation of the War Department since the policy was changed as indicated. The change in policy, for which your committee feels responsible, manifestly has operated to keep prices per unit at lower levels, thus effecting a saving to the Government and permitting acquisition of a greater number of vehicles for the moneys the Congress has made available.

There can be no question that the tendency of the situation which evidence shows has existed has been to corrupt weak Government officials, as well as the dealers and subcontractors who have participated in creating the situation. The great host of honest Government officials and business representatives have been placed under suspicion, and the complete procurement system has been brought into disrepute through the machinations of an apparently few corrupt and dishonest officials and agents. It is undeniable that corrupt business agents have sought and have obtained special consideration and information from dishonest and weak Government officials. Such corrupt agents furthermore have sought and obtained gratuities even from the subcontractors and would-be subcontractors of their own employers.

One of these special agents or lobbyists for a motor-vehicle concern, who, it is established by abundant evidence, frequently entertained and gave favors to Government officials, has admitted under oath that his expense accounts shown on the books of his employer misrepresent the facts contained therein. The said special agent or lobbyist admitted under oath that he had not in fact conversed with or entertained two of the several prominent Government officials in the manner shown by his expense accounts.

This same special agent or lobbyist, through one of his subordinates, obtained surreptitiously from Government files advance information in reference to certain phases of this committee's investigation. Upon obtaining such advance information said lobbyist and his subordinates took immediate action to contact witnesses having knowledge of facts which your committee was known to have under investigation, and made it very difficult for this committee thereafter to elicit accurate testimony from these witnesses, who were called by your committee to testify and who were conversant with the facts.

Your committee desires here to point out that many of the bad practices which it has uncovered through private investigation and through long and extended hearings have been remedied by the proper Government officials, when brought to their attention, and therefore feels that a vast amount of good already has been accomplished through its investigation, resulting probably in the actual saving of millions of dollars. Your committee deems it best in the public interest, however, not to be more specific at this time.

Your committee cannot too strongly condemn the practice which the evidence has disclosed respecting the carrying on of certain phases of the Government business outside of the Government offices, in hotel rooms, hotel lobbies, and the private homes of Government officers or lobbyists. Numerous instances are established showing the vicious results of such modes of transacting public business.

For example, in the private home of a high-ranking officer, there was burned by said officer a paper copy of specifications which had been written in the office of The Assistant Secretary of War, to eliminate from competition one of the leading motor-vehicle dealers. This copy of specifications had come into the hands of the officer in confidence, and he in turn, upon the testimony of two witnesses who were present, is shown to have placed it in the hands of the dealer affected, in an irregular and unauthorized manner. The burning of this paper took place in the presence of said two witnesses, one of them being the agent of the dealer affected, who admitted the occurrence under oath. The secret knowledge thus disclosed was doubtless of great value to this agent and to his employer.

This same high Government official, having to do with procurement, is shown to have visited, both in and out of Washington, in the hotel rooms and in the private homes of lobbyists, and in those places to have discussed the Government business in which said lobbyists were interested, and to have given them information, probably of great value, through which they either did secure or hoped to secure large Government orders.

This same officer, moreover, is established to have given a 6 months' note for $2,500, payable to bearer, to one of the most active lobbyists engaged in the motor-vehicle business. There is considerable evidence, based on the sworn testimony of four witnesses, that the note was given in return for cash in that amount, and that the said officer has at no time offered to pay said note, either when due or since, but on the contrary has endeavored to repossess himself of said note without paying the same.

On one occasion it is established on the testimony of several witnesses that the said officer sought out and met by appointment the holder of his note in the city of New York while the latter was a fugitive from justice. The officer admitted being with said fugitive while he himself was a responsible Government official, but stated that it did not occur to him to turn the said fugitive over to the Department of Justice or to the local police or to report to the Department of Justice that he had seen said fugitive from justice in the city of New York.

It seems to your committee that a fair inference from his failure in this respect is that said officer did not desire the apprehension of said fugitive, lest the latter should disclose to this investigating committee the facts concerning the note which had been given.

It seems to your committee also that evidence adduced before your committee establishes beyond any reasonable doubt that conferences were held in private places between a notorious Army surplus-property lobbyist and the lobbyists of one or more motor-vehicle concerns; that these conferences were held for the purpose and with the intention of entering into an agreement or conspiracy which would have deprived the Government of the benefit of any bona fide competition in the procurement of motor-vehicle equipment throughout the period of the present economic emergency; and that had the witnesses which testified before your committee been available at the time of the District of Columbia grand-jury inquiry in February 1934, an entirely different result might have been reached.

In one instance, a high official in the office of the Judge Advocate General of the Army is shown not only to have gone to the hotel room of a purchaser of surplus Army property, but is shown also to have participated in the negotiation and preparation of a contract at his own home where there were present numerous lobbying agents.

WAR DEPARTMENT INVESTIGATION

This same officer is shown repeatedly to have sought and obtained large fees from private corporations in matters which related to his official duties, and to have injected himself into numerous Government transactions in other Government departments, whereby he was able to favor claimants against the United States, who, in turn, favored him by the payment of fees or otherwise.

Evidence also discloses that while this officer was serving regularly in the office of the Judge Advocate General of the Army, he maintained private law offices outside of and independently of his military office. Furthermore, he corresponded with individuals and firms on stationery indicating him to be an attorney at law, with private office, telephone, and cable addresses. The committee is also in possession of letters written with reference to his private business affairs on War Department stationery, and presumably dictated during his physical occupancy of his War Department office, and while he was making use of the services of subordinate employees in the War Department.

It may be enlightening to quote at this point from the observations of a responsible official from another governmental executive department who had direct knowledge of the activities of this officer.

"The WITNESS. So it was about this ——— case, I suggested to the colonel, I remember we had a long telephone conversation. I suggested to him that even if my view of the law was wrong, the Department of Justice was charged with the duty of representing the Government and he was bound by the views of the Department of Justice. 'Well', he said, 'I will retain outside counsel.'

"The CHAIRMAN. Who said that?

"The WITNESS. ——— said that to me, 'I will retain outside counsel.' I said, 'Of course you can do what you please. I can't stop you, but it strikes me that you have got to take your law from the Department of Justice.' 'Well, I don't know about that', he said. So he filed a report which recommended a much higher award than I was battling for, and I felt a little bit ashamed about it, like a lawyer does sometimes, and I think we had an all-afternoon argument before ———. And then ——— came to hand down his decision—he didn't write any written opinion—he said that while he was impressed with my argument, nevertheless he felt that in view of the fact that the War Deparement felt that a higher compensation was justified, that he would follow the report of the War Department.

"The CHAIRMAN. A patent claim that the Navy Department appraised at about $400 in value, that ——— made a valuation of $35,000, and somehow or other before they got through with, it was allowed for $250,000 and when they paid the interest on it they paid about $288,000, all told.

"Mr. Goss. Four-hundred-odd thousand.

"The CHAIRMAN. Yes; $402,000, all told.

* * * * * * *

"The CHAIRMAN. Who was their principal lawyer here?

"The WITNESS. Now there were, I might say, several of the biggest claimants had their own counsel, but the majority of the claimants were represented by ———, who is now dead, and ———, who is a practicing lawyer in this city today. * * * the real work was done by ——— * * * representing the great majority of the claimants.

* * * * * * *

"The CHAIRMAN. We received evidence before this committee that would indicate of the $9,000,000 allowed that probably $6,000,000 represented exorbitant valuations if the awards were puffed and inflated in the same degree that one was. What was the name of it?

"The WITNESS. ———.

"The CHAIRMAN. In the same degree that the ——— was, to wit: Five million award, and four million dollars out of five, then that would be about 80 percent.

"The WITNESS. That is right.

"The CHAIRMAN. And 80 percent of $9,000,000 would be $7,000,000, and it appeared this morning from another witness that there was probably about $6,000,000 of inflation or puffing of value.

"The WITNESS. I shouldn't wonder that was so. Of course, values are always matters of opinion."

This same War Department official wrote the following self-commendatory letter, referring to his work criticized above:

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 6, 1933.

* * * * * * *

The following is a statement of my experience in valuing patents and licenses under patents:

In 1922 and 1923 I was chairman of an international joint commission to value on a royalty basis, a large group (28 cases) of United States patents, owned by British subjects, which were used jointly by the United States and Great Britain during the World War. The subject matter of the patents related to aircraft, aircraft engines, and aircraft accessories, including gyroscopes and radio applicable to aircraft.

Lord Justice Sargent, of the High Court of Appeals of Great Britain, sat with me in London during the years mentioned above, and settlement was made in all cases to the entire satisfaction of both countries.

From 1922 to about 1927, I was chairman of the international commission, and among other things valued on a royalty basis, the use of patents owned by Belgian, French, British, and Italian citizens, which were used by the United States during the World War (1917 to July 1921). The patents in question covered a broad field of invention.

In 1932, I was chairman of two separate commissions, one at The Hague and one at London, involving the valuation of patents, a few of which were radio.

From March 1928 to December 31, 1931, I was called upon to value, on a royalty basis, the use by the United States of the patents contemplated by the War Claims Act of 1928 (United States patents owned by German and Austrian-Hungarian citizens). There were 1,072 separate cases involving about 14,000 patents in this operation.

This group of patents envisaged the entire range of classes of inventions recognized by the Patent Office. One group of the patents in question covered the entire field of radio. With respect to this particular group, however, the Government took all right, title, and interest, but the valuations were made on a basis involving the principle of royalty payments. In about 95 percent of these cases the arbiter accepted my valuation without question, and in most cases the counsel for claimants accepted my valuation. Total awards, including ships, amounted to $87,000,000, of which about eight million was for patents.

In addition to the above work, I have during the past 14 years negotiated numerous contracts involving the arrival of patent values based on royalty payment principle.

The values arrived at in the above cases varied all the way from less than one-thousandth of 1 percent, on the manufacturing cost of the subject matter of the patent, to as high as 18 percent on such value, depending upon a lot of circumstances, differently applicable to different cases.

Sincerely yours,

(Signed) ——— ———.

The conclusion seems unavoidable that military officers drawing pay and allowances on the basis that they will serve in the field with troops should not be excepted from the requirement of duty with troops every 4 years, in accordance with the so-called "Manchu law." (See sec. 4, act of June 4, 1920, 41 Stat. 762; and sec. 2, act of June 6, 1924, 43 Stat. 470; 10 U. S. C. 532, 533, 534.) This particular officer has served steadily since 1921 in the office of the Judge Advocate General, War Department, in the District of Columbia.

Realizing that the law as it now stands does permit of this situation because of specific statutory exceptions (10 U. S. C. 533, 534 supra), and realizing that Congress itself must therefore assume some responsibility, your committee recommends that the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee prepare an amendment to the law and press for its early enactment, said amendment to clarify the phraseology of the act so that it will be administered in complete harmony with the original intent of Congress.

It may be observed that the character of the duties of this officer in the Judge Advocate General's Office was such that they might have been performed by a civilian conversant in the profession. If a duty or performance is strictly of a civilian nature in Washington, which a civilian could perform as well as a military officer, it would not seem that there is any reason for having such work performed by a military officer, who, by reason of his greater powers over his subordinates, is able to make the connections and get away with the outrageous practices which this particular officer followed.

The testimony above quoted shows how the practices of one Army officer may have caused the Government to sustain an unwarranted loss, on one class of claims, of approximately $7,000,000. Because of such practices, your committee is constrained to believe that legal safeguards should be set up to protect the Army itself, as well as the public, against such unethical abuses, even though their occurrence may happily be rare indeed. To that end it recommends that the Chairman of the Military Affairs Committee of the House endeavor to secure early enactment of a bill specifically forbidding Army officers from receiving fees of any sort for any character of services from outside sources. There is no question in the minds of your committee that if an Army officer in any branch performs his full duty to the Government, he has not time or energy to devote to the service of those claiming against his Government, and that if he does devote his time and energy to serving those whose interests are in conflict with the interests of the public, then his public duties are improperly performed.

The committee makes the further suggestion that if there is to be a statute of limitations with respect to offenses committed by officers of the Government or those in a fiduciary relation to the public, it should be for at least 6 years, and possibly for 10 years, instead of for 3 years, as at present. For that reason it recommends that the Chairman of the Military Affairs Committee prepare and introduce a bill which, when enacted, will have such effect whenever the commissioned, enlisted, or civilian personnel of the Army may be involved. Your committee comes to this conclusion because many of the improper practices date back many years and the statute of limitations has run against many of the irregular or questionable acts for which there should be authority to punish.

The War Department has not undergone so sweeping an investigation as your committee has endeavored to perform in such a long period of time that these practices have grown up and forced themselves upon the attention of the Military Affairs Committee.

Your committee has purposely refrained from mentioning any officer's name or the name of any representative of a dealer in this report, inasmuch as the War Department is making its own investigation, on the evidence adduced, in reference to these and other matters which your committee feels it would not be prudent to report upon at the present time.

Your committee at this time feels that it is not in the public interest to submit with this report any of the hearings before the committee, at least until the War Department has had an opportunity to investigate and correct the matters in question.

Time and circumstances have prevented any detailed inquiry into the methods of property accounting and exchange in the War Department, as well as into many other items which have come to the attention of the committee, but the evidence which has been adduced leads your committee to believe that there should be a thorough inquiry into the present methods of property accounting and the arranging of exchanges of obsolete property for new property.

As far as the committee has gone into the subject of the exchanges of property, it would recommend the repeal of the act of May 12, 1917 (c. 12, 40 Stat. 43), which reads in part as follows:

"* * * hereafter motor-propelled vehicles, aeroplanes, engines, and parts thereof may be exchanged in part payment for new equipment of the same or similar character, to be used for the same purpose as those proposed to be exchanged."

The 1894 statute, making the authority of the administrative officers final in reference to property accounts (see act of Mar. 29, 1894, 28 Stat. 47, as amended, 31 U. S. C. 89–92) should be amended to require that both the physical property and the accounts shall be open to inspection at all times by the Comptroller General of the United States and those who may be designated by him for that purpose, in order that reports thereon by an agency independent of the administrative agency can be made to the Congress. Your committee, therefore, recommends that the Chairman of the Military Affairs Committee introduce such amendment. While sensible of the limitations of its jurisdiction, your committee cannot consistently with its findings recommend that such an amendment should apply alone to the War Department.

If the Congress should desire that this committee should go further into the matter, it should authorize a sufficient appropriation for that purpose to enable this committee to employ an adequate force of accountants to perform that function under the supervision of the committee. If the Congress in its wisdom does not see fit to make this available to the Military Affairs Committee, then it is recommended that the law be modified so that the Comptroller General may perform this duty for the benefit of the Congress.

EXHIBIT C

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., August 21, 1934.

Hon. WILLIAM N. ROGERS,
Chairman of Subcommittee No. 3,
Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. ROGERS: The unanimous recommendation of Subcommittee No. 3 of the Committee on Military Affairs that Maj. Gen. Benjamin D. Foulois be relieved from his position as Chief of the Air Corps was received by me in your letter of June 18, 1934. Following the normal course of military procedure, I transmitted the report and recommendation to Major General Foulois on June 20, 1934, for such statement as he desired to make. He has submitted under date of August 10, 1934, a preliminary statement which is enclosed herewith.

A most difficult problem now confronts me, the solution of which involves some of the fundamental precepts of our system of jurisprudence embodying many of the most sacred rights of American citizenship.

As a matter of course any recommendation of a committee of Congress would receive my most respectful attention. Our system of government requires it. Proper coordination demands it. Had the report of the committee been confined to an indictment or charges against Major General Foulois, the situation would have presented no difficulty. In such event I could have followed the regular procedure prescribed for the determination of such matters by referring the case to a military tribunal for adjudication. Instead, however, the report is not limited to an indictment, but in effect finds the accused guilty, fixes the sentence, and calls on the Secretary of War to execute it. Under such circumstances should I now refer the matter to a military tribunal for the determination of the precise matters which your committee already has adjudged, such a step well might suggest a reflection on the committee. Such a suggestion I desire most scrupulously to avoid. My respect for the members of the committee is only exceeded by my desire to work in complete harmony with them.

Accordingly had the report and recommendation of the committee been based on a full and complete hearing wherein the constitutional rights of the accused were assured, even though the procedure were somewhat unusual, I would have felt constrained to comply with the mandate of the committee.

But such was not the case. The hearings were conducted in the usual manner of congressional hearings held in executive or closed session. Major General Foulois appeared before the committee, but it was in the capacity of a witness and not of an accused. I understand that he was later given an opportunity to appear again before the committee before the report was submitted, but for some reason this did not eventuate. It does not appear that he was apprised of the accusations contained in the report, nor was he confronted by the witnesses against him and given an opportunity to hear their testimony and cross-examine them, and then to offer evidence in his own defense. Nor was he permitted to be represented by counsel of his own choosing. All of these rights are sacred to every American citizen and are guaranteed by the Constitution. Major General Foulois states that he has repeatedly requested that he be furnished with a copy of the full record of the evidence which formed the basis of the report and recommendation, and that this request has not as yet been granted.

This situation places me in a most difficult and embarrassing position, because in the first place the accused has not had full opportunity to examine or to refute the evidence against him; second, I, myself, do not know what this evidence is, except to the limited extent it is set forth in the report; and finally, I have not been called upon to evaluate the evidence or make any decision in the case, but to the contrary am, in effect, precluded from following such a course, due to the findings and recommendation of the committee.

Being convinced that the committee is as solicitous as I am that complete justice be done in this case, I feel that the only step now open to me is to transmit to the committee the partial statement of Major General Foulois to the end that the committee may consider whether he should not now be permitted to have full access to the evidence against him and then appear before the committee to present his defense.

With further assurance of my deep respect and of my desire to cooperate in the solution of this case to the fullest extent consistent with the dictates of fairness and justice, I await the committee's further action.

Sincerely yours,

(Signed) GEO. H. DERN,
Secretary of War.

EXHIBIT D

WAR DEPARTMENT ACTION IN THE CASE OF MAJ. GEN. BENJAMIN D. FOULOIS, CHIEF OF THE AIR CORPS

On December 13, 1934, the Secretary of War directed the Inspector General of the Army to investigate alleged official misconduct on the part of Maj. Gen. Benjamin D. Foulois, Chief of the Air Corps, the matter having been personally laid before the Secretary by the Military Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives. The Inspector General has today submitted his report of investigation.

The allegations might be summarized under three headings:

1. Violation of existing laws in the purchase of airplanes and aircraft materials.

2. Unsound estimates made to the Post Office Department as to the condition of readiness of the Army Air Corps to fly the air mail.

3. Incorrect, unfair, and misleading statements to a congressional committee.

The Inspector General found with regard to these allegations, first, that the evidence adduced did not establish that General Foulois violated existing laws in the purchase of airplanes and aircraft materials; second, that there was no cause for censure in General Foulois' opinional statements with regard to the capacity of his corps to fly the air mail; and third, General Foulois did depart from the ethics and standards of the service by making exaggerated, unfair, and misleading statements to a congressional committee.

The Inspector General recommended that General Foulois be reprimanded for his unethical conduct under heading 3. The Secretary of War has approved the recommendation of the Inspector General.

This completes all of the special investigations which the Inspector General has been conducting.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
June 14, 1935.

EXHIBIT E

JUNE 14, 1935.

Hon. JOHN J. MCSWAIN,
Chairman Military Affairs Committee,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: As I informed you by letter of December 13, 1934, following our conversation of that date during which you reported your committee had received evidence indicating that Maj. Gen. Benjamin D. Foulois, Chief of the Air Corps, had misconducted himself in his official capacity, I immediately directed the Inspector General to initiate a searching investigation into the case, and he has just completed that investigation.

It is affirmatively established that General Foulois violated the ethics and standards of the military service in making statements before your committee which were not only unfair and misleading to the committee itself but which also seriously reflected upon the integrity of his brother officers, and that in general, during his appearance before your committee, he evinced a lack of team spirit and a tendency to make exaggerated and inexact statements.

The other allegations made against General Foulois were not substantiated by the evidence brought forth in the investigation.

For the offenses above indicated, I have administered a reprimand to General Foulois.

The Inspector General reports that your committee has been most helpful in the matter of this investigation, and I am deeply grateful for their assistance to him.

Sincerely,

GEORGE H. DERN,
Secretary of War.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota rises in opposition to the pro forma amendment and is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

Mr. MCFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, if there is going to be any speaking out of order, the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ROGERS] is going to do it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order. Is there objection?

Mr. MCFARLANE. I object.

Mr. RANKIN. I object.

Mr. MAAS. I would like the RECORD to show it was a Democrat who objected.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the RECORD show that I, JOHN RANKIN, a Democrat, objected to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS] speaking out of order.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BACON: Page 1, lines 6 and 7, strike out the words "including the acquisition of lands."

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, this amendment is offered in all seriousness to the bill under consideration. The bill provides for the building of a residence for our American official representative to the Philippine Islands. I have moved, however, to strike out the permission or the authorization for the acquisition of lands.

The United States Government owns several hundred thousand acres of land in the Philippine Islands, and all of this land eventually will be turned back to the Philippine Islands for nothing; and I believe that the Philippine government should provide the sites on which these buildings are to be erected. We have had considerable discussion about this particular matter before the Appropriations Committee, and I think it is the sense of the Appropriations Committee that the site on which this building should be erected should be acquired by the Philippine government, and I have simply moved to strike out the authorization for the acquisition of a site or for the buying of land.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. BACON. I yield.

Mrs. KAHN. I have simply asked the gentleman to yield because I would like it to go on record that the applause on the Republican side a few minutes ago——

Mr. McFARLANE. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the statement of the gentleman from New York in discussion of his amendment, and the Chair understands that the gentleman from New York yielded to the gentlewoman from California.

Mr. McFARLANE. But she is not discussing the amendment.

Mrs. KAHN. I would like to say that the applause on the Republican side was a tribute to the fairness and justness and ability of the Speaker. [Applause.]

Mr. McFARLANE. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is for the gentleman from New York to discuss the amendment.

Mr. BACON. I will simply say, Mr. Speaker, I have been discussing a serious amendment to the bill that is before the House, and I may say that I regret very much the gentlewoman from California should have injected an extraneous matter into my remarks. I simply ask that the amendment I have offered be given serious consideration.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I would like to read to the gentleman from New York excerpts from a letter written by Gen. Creed F. Cox, Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs of the War Department:

It is not expected that it will be necessary to expend any money for the purchase of land, but there will be costs in connection with the preparation of land on whatever site may be selected. The amount requested is based on a careful study of the costs of our diplomatic establishments in a number of foreign countries, the one in Tokyo, Japan, being considered the most typical, as its construction is based on costs considered more nearly comparable to those prevailing in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, there is nothing in my amendment that would prevent them from preparing the site or digging foundations or anything like that. I used the word "acquisition" and not "preparation of land" in my amendment.

Mr. TRUAX. If I may continue—

While it is not expected it will be necessary to acquire this site by actual purchase, it is estimated that the preparation of a suitable area along the waterfront will cost from $60,000 to $75,000. This represents the minimum that should be made available for acquisition and preparation of the land in Manila.

I take it, Mr. Speaker, that should the gentleman's amendment prevail, there would be no funds available for making the site suitable for the erection of the building.

Mr. BACON. If the gentleman will permit, I think the gentleman is mistaken. All I strike out is the authorization to acquire new land. I am not touching the amount carried in the bill, and I am not limiting them in any way in the preparation of the site. I may say further to the gentleman, if he will permit, that I have simply offered this amendment to make the authorization in the bill conform to the action that the Appropriations Committee has already taken in the subcommittee.

Mr. TRUAX. Will not the gentleman admit that if his amendment prevails there will be no funds available for the purpose mentioned herein, namely, the preparation of a suitable area that is donated by the Philippine government to the United States?

Mr. BACON. I think there will be plenty of money available, and they can do anything they want so far as the preparation of the area is concerned.

Mr. TRUAX. Not under their present plans, because they will require about $500,000 for the establishment in Manila and for the summer home they will require about $200,000, which will leave them a leeway or a margin of only $50,000 to take care of the expected overrun in the cost of these establishments. I believe it is perfectly within the prerogative of the War Department to make a determination as to whether something should be spent to make the area suitable for the erection of the building, and I believe the gentleman's amendment would be a handicap to the successful operation of this bill, and I therefore ask the House to vote down the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING THE NAVAL RESERVE ACT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5731) to amend in certain particulars the act approved February 28, 1925, entitled "An act to provide for the creation, organization, administration, and maintenance of a Naval Reserve and a Marine Corps Reserve", as amended, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Reserving the right to object, this is a very involved matter, and I ask that it be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MAAS. Will the gentleman withhold that request? As a matter of fact this is not involved. The main provision is one to give protection to reservists who may be injured or killed in line of duty on a volunteer drill. Much drilling is done at times other than that specified as training duty for which there is protection provided by the Federal Employees' Compensation Act. For instance, Sunday is not a paid drill day, and if these boys are injured while performing military duty on Sunday, they can get no relief. They not only cannot receive employees' compensation, but they cannot even be admitted to a Government hospital. Much of the reserve training is on week-ends, and it is only fair to protect these volunteers. If this bill goes over the gentleman knows that it is only fair to protect these volunteers. If this bill goes over the gentleman knows that it is not possible to pass it at this session.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Congress will not adjourn for 2 months, and there will be sufficient time to consider the bill later.

Mr. MAAS. I doubt that very much.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I renew my request that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GRAZING RESERVE FOR FORT M'DERMITT, NEV.

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 4126, to reserve certain public domain lands in Nevada and Oregon as a grazing reserve for Indians of Fort McDermitt, Nev.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill be passed over without prejudice. I am waiting for a reply from Oregon in regard to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

TRANSFERRING CERTAIN NATIONAL FOREST LANDS TO THE ZUNI INDIAN RESERVATION, N. MEX.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6141) transferring certain national forest lands to the Zuni Indian Reservation, N. Mex.

There being no objection, the bill, S. 1831, was substituted for the House bill.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the lands in townships 8 and 9 north, ranges 16 and 17 west, of the New Mexico principal meridian, New Mexico, comprising the Miller Division of the Cibola National Forest, are hereby eliminated from the Cibola National Forest and withdrawn as an addition to the Zuni Indian Reservation, subject to any valid existing rights of any persons thereto.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The House bill was laid on the table.

CREATION OF AN INDIAN VILLAGE IN THE SHOALWATER INDIAN RESERVATION, WASH.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6236) to authorize the creation of an Indian village within the Shoalwater Indian Reservation, Wash., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DEFINING EXTERIOR BOUNDARIES, NAVAJO INDIAN RESERVATION, N. MEX.

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 6542, to define the exterior boundaries of the Navajo Indian Reservation in New Mexico, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX, Mr. McFARLANE, and Mr. ZIONCHECK objected.

SETTING ASIDE RICE LAKE FOR USE OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS, MINNESOTA

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6963) to amend an act entitled "An act setting aside Rice Lake and contiguous lands in Minnesota for the exclusive use and benefit of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota", approved June 23, 1926, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

KANOSH BAND OF INDIANS, UTAH

The Clerk called the bill (S. 380) to reserve 80 acres on the public domain for the use and benefit of the Kanosh Band of Indians in the State of Utah.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the west half southwest quarter section 10, township 23 south, range 5 west, Salt Lake meridian, Utah, be, and the same is hereby, reserved for the sole use and occupancy of the Kanosh Band of Indians of Utah: Provided, That the rights and claims of any bona fide settler initiated under the public-land laws prior to the approval hereof shall not be affected by this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider the vote was laid on the table.

JURISDICTION OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS OVER OSAGE INDIAN DRUG ADDICTS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6625) conferring jurisdiction on United States District Courts over Osage Indian drug and liquor addicts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to clear up some things in my own mind. I ask the author of the bill if the parentheses on page 2, line 12, are not a typographical error. Is there any definite purpose in putting those parentheses in there?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. The parentheses should not be there.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And on page 3, lines 14 and 15, as the bill is now written, the imposition of fine and imprisonment are made mandatory with the court. Should not the fine and imprisonment be optional with the court?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I think it should be optional.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then the committee might accept an amendment to change the word "and" in line 14 to "or", and after the figures "$500" in line 15 insert "or both in the discretion of the court."

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. That would be acceptable.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio that the bill go over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

PAYMENT TO OSAGE INDIANS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6682) authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Osage Tribe of Indians, on account of their lands sold by the United States.

The SPEAKER. This bill requires three objectors. Is there objection?

Mr. McFARLANE, Mr. TRUAX, and Mr. COSTELLO objected.

FEDERAL PRISONS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3430) to amend the act approved May 14, 1930, entitled "An act to reorganize the administration of Federal prisons; to authorize the Attorney General to contract for the care of United States prisoners; to establish Federal jails; and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 9 of the act approved May 14, 1930, chapter 274 (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 753h), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. Any person committed to the custody of the Attorney General or his authorized representative, or who is confined in any penal or correctional institution pursuant to the direction of the Attorney General, or who is in custody by virtue of any process issued under the laws of the United States by any court, judge, or commissioner, or who is in custody of an officer of the United States pursuant to lawful arrest, who escapes or attempts to escape from such custody or institution, shall be guilty of an offense and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment of not more than 5 years. The sentence imposed hereunder shall be in addition to and independent of any sentence imposed in the case in connection with which such person is held in custody at the time of such escape or attempt to escape. If such person be under sentence at the time of such offense, the sentence imposed hereunder shall begin upon the expiration of, or upon legal release from, any sentence under which such person is held at the time of such escape or attempt to escape."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, lines 7 and 8, strike out "and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment of not more than 5 years", and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"If the custody or confinement is by virtue of an arrest on a charge of felony, or conviction of any offense whatsoever, the offense of escaping or attempting to escape therefrom shall constitute a felony and any person convicted thereof shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 5 years or by a fine of not more than $5,000, or both; and if the custody or confinement is by virtue of an arrest or charge of or for a misdemeanor, and prior to conviction, the offense of escaping or attempting to escape therefrom shall constitute a misdemeanor and any person convicted thereof shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 1 year or by a fine of not more than $1,000, or both."

The committee amendment was agreed to and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CREDITING INDIAN TRIBES WITH SUMS HERETOFORE EXPENDED

The Clerk called the bill (S. 1531) to credit certain Indian tribes with funds heretofore expended from tribal funds on Indian irrigation work.

The SPEAKER. This bill requires three objections. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX, Mr. COSTELLO, and Mr. McFARLANE objected.

AMENDMENTS TO BANKRUPTCY ACT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 5452) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States, approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto."

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, since the recent decision of the Supreme Court declaring unconstitutional the Frazier-Lemke Act, to pass this bill would be meaningless. This bill is an amendment to that bill. It is, therefore, a dead letter and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CREDIT OF SERVICE RENDERED BY PERSONNEL

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6512) to authorize the crediting of service rendered by personnel (active or retired) subsequent to June 30, 1932, in the computation of their active or retired pay after June 30, 1935.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE LEGISLATIVE POWER OF CONGRESS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an address delivered by my colleague from New York [Mr. SISSON] over the National Broadcasting Co. on June 14, 1935.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address by Representative FRED J. SISSON made over the National Broadcasting Co. network on Friday, June 14, 1935:

On May 31, I introduced in the House of Representatives Resolution No. 234, entitled "To investigate the legislative power of Congress." This resolution, as a reading of it will show, involves a study of the general question of the power of the Federal judiciary, including the Supreme Court, to pass upon the constitutionality of laws passed by Congress and to annul or declare them invalid. It contemplates an investigation by the Judiciary Committee of this question and a report by such committee of the results of such investigation. I introduced this resolution not upon my own initiative alone, but at the request of a number of other Members of Congress, all lawyers of high standing and ability, several of whom, together with other lawyers, teachers of law, and historians in this country have for some time, particularly during the past few years, been investigating this subject. If you are interested, write to your Member of Congress or Senator for a copy of House Resolution 234.

Congressman DAVID J. LEWIS, of Maryland, author of the first workmen's compensation law passed in the United States, also father of the Parcel Post System of this country, and one of the ablest constitutional lawyers in Congress, will speak on this subject in the House, probably early next week. Be sure to read his speech in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I commend also to your attention two bills recently introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressman ROBERT L. RAMSAY, of West Virginia, directed to the same general purpose as the inquiry which I am attempting to advance. These bills are H. R. 7997 and H. R. 8054. Write your Congressman for copies. I am in sympathy with their purpose.

A resolution for a constitutional amendment restricting the manner of the exercise of this power by the Supreme Court has also been recently introduced in the Senate by Senator NORRIS, of Nebraska. This provides in substance that to declare invalid a law passed by Congress, the vote of more than two-thirds of the Justices of the Supreme Court would be required.

I fully appreciate that inasmuch as this inquiry is startling in its nature to the majority of our people, lawyers as well as laymen, who have not made a careful study of the history of the framing of our Federal Constitution, the purposes of its makers, the effects of the assumed power of nullification by the judicial branch of the Government of laws passed by another distinct coordinate branch of the Government, the legislative, approved by another distinct coordinate branch of the Government, the executive, as well as the resistance and the propaganda that will be set on foot by privileged special interests in this country to oppose any inquiry into any of the sources protecting them in their privilege, that I shall be accused not only of attacking the Supreme Court but of seeking to undermine and destroy the Federal Constitution. I shall not attempt to argue with those who know the historical facts but who, despite that, "sin against the light" and oppose this inquiry. I wish to address this statement to the others, honest, well-intentioned, but who may be temporarily misled by such propaganda. And I ask them to get all the facts and listen to or read the several other speeches in addition to mine that will be made by other Members of Congress and teachers of law before they make up their minds as to the necessity and justice of what we propose.

We are not attacking the Supreme Court. No one more fully recognizes the character and ability typified by its membership, not only now but generally throughout our history, as well as its usefulness in our dual scheme of government. It is my purpose to add to, not to detract from, the usefulness of the Court and the respect for it on the part of our people. I am not trying to destroy the Constitution. I am trying in my humble way to help preserve the Court and preserve our present form of National Government. However, I do not agree either with those who would mislead or with the many more who are unwittingly misled that there is anything so sacred about the Supreme Court as to make it immune against constructive criticism, or anything so immutable about each and all of the parts of the Constitution as to condemn any of us who suggest changes in that noble instrument to meet the changed conditions of modern times. If that be treason, let the advocates and beneficiaries of privilege make the most of it. The Declaration of Independence tells us, in substance, that governments, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, are instituted among men to secure the inalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and that when any government becomes subversive of those ends, it is the right and the duty of the people to alter or abolish it. We subscribe to those statements.

Our Constitution was prepared and adopted among other purposes to carry out such ends.

Jefferson said that the people must from time to time "be attentive to amendments to the Constitution, to make it keep pace with the advances of the age in science and experience." He added that if reformation, adding to the powers of the Government, be resisted, it is to be expected that the people will "undertake it themselves by force, their only weapon, and work it out through blood, desolation, and long-continued anarchy."

So much for those who now call themselves Jeffersonians, whether they are Democrats or Republicans, and who would have you believe that Jefferson opposed such extension of the national powers as might be found necessary in changing times to keep pace with changing conditions.

But the purpose of this preliminary talk is not to discuss the necessity of constitutional amendments, whether required by the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the Schechter case, in order to save for the country what has been gained by the National Recovery Act, or otherwise. I apprehend that there will be required and that the people will demand an extension of the national powers if necessary to preserve such benefits, whether an amendment is necessary or not; and, if so, what, will in the coming weeks be brought to your attention by several other Members of Congress—Messrs. LEWIS of Maryland, RAMSAY, MAVERICK, and others.

It may be that after Congress and the country have heard the exposition of the welfare clause of the Constitution by Congressman LEWIS of Maryland, and what its correct interpretation will mean with respect to the powers of the National Government, that Congress and the country may decide that no change whatever is necessary in the Constitution, save only a clarifying amendment, or, perhaps only a clarifying statute passed by Congress itself, restating in the light of our political history, the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, the legislative power of Congress, and thereby recapturing the powers which the framers of the Constitution intended the legislative branch of our National Government to have, and which the Original Thirteen States understood the legislative branch to have when they ratified the Constitution. In 20 minutes allotted for this talk I can give you only the merest outline of our purpose. Insofar as mine is concerned, it is merely introductory. But I do ask you to subject my statements to the test of recorded history. I said that my resolution would be startling to the great majority of our people; unfortunately so. I appreciate that we have to overcome established prejudices, long-time acquiescence in the misstatement of fact, of law, of history, of the Constitution itself, of its provisions whether expressed or implied.

My first point is that the Supreme Court has no power either under the expressed or implied powers of the Constitution to adjudge unconstitutional a law passed by the legislative branch, the Congress, or in any suit between private litigants to pass upon the constitutionality thereof.

That the power of judicial nullification is conferred in the Constitution itself, no one of reputation as a lawyer or student of our Government and its origin will dare publicly assert, and if anyone so asserts, ask him to point you to that part of the Constitution which either in words, or impliedly, confers upon the judicial branch of the Government power to override the legislative and, as in most cases, the executive branch of the Government. So much for the expressed power.

That I am right about this is as demonstrable as any mathematical proposition, or that 2 and 2 make 4.

It is equally demonstrable: That no such power to the Supreme Court is implied in the Constitution or was so intended by the makers thereof or was understood by the Thirteen Original States when in their several conventions they ratified the Constitution and entered into the Federal Union.

NOW AS TO THE INTENTION OF THE FRAMERS OF THE CONSTITUTION

Our Federal Constitution in the form in which it was submitted to the 13 States was prepared in the Constitutional Convention of 1787. That Convention composed of delegates from the Thirteen Original States carefully and during its many weeks of deliberation considered among other things as one of its most important questions what check or safeguard, if any, should be provided against the passage of laws by the legislative branch of the Federal Government, that were beyond the Federal powers. Various measures were from time to time proposed, some of which were brought to a vote in the Convention.

The plan to give the judicial branch the power to override a law passed by the legislative branch, thereby making the act of the legislative branch (approved by the executive branch as was finally decided upon in the Convention) a nullity was never, in that Convention, seriously enough considered as to bring it to a vote. After much discussion of this question it was proposed in a resolution that a council of revision should be established for the purpose of passing upon the constitutionality of laws passed by Congress. This council of revision was to be composed of the members of the judicial branch when established (now the Supreme Court) and the executive branch (now the President); in other words, to annul a law passed by Congress the concurrence was necessary, not of the Court alone, but also of the President. This was the only proposal looking to a judicial veto that was even brought to vote by the framers of our Constitution. It was also proposed in the same resolution that in the event a law passed by Congress was decided by such council of revision to be unconstitutional that the Congress might then repass the law by a two-thirds majority of each of the branches thereof. This resolution, a much more guarded and less drastic form of judicial veto or nullification by the Court than now employed, was rejected by the Convention by a vote of 8 States to 2 in favor of the Executive veto. (Madison's Notes on the Convention. Haines Doctrine of Judicial Supremacy, p. 144.)

In short, the framers of the Constitution relied in the Constitution which they presented to the Thirteen States upon the method of the well-known, so-called "checks and balances", whereby one of the two branches of Congress should be a check upon the other both as to hasty or unwise action and also as to unconstitutionality, and whereby the Executive, the President, through his veto power, should have a check upon both. No judicial check upon unconstitutional action by the legislative branch was submitted or intended.

The advocates of judicial nullification, however, make the historical argument of long-time acquiescence and rely in effect not upon a written, but upon an unwritten constitution. Relying upon the saying that the law is what the judges say it is, they go back to Chief Justice Marshall's opinion in Marbury v. Madison (1 Cranch 137), decided in 1803. They rely upon the oft-repeated statement that Marshall here asserted the power of judicial veto, and that it has never since been disputed. This case merely involved the appointment of a justice of the peace of the District of Columbia and did not, except so far as the jurisdiction of the Court was concerned, involve the constitutionality of an act of Congress. That part of Marshall's opinion in which he went out of his way to declare that the Supreme Court had the power to annul an act of Congress as being unconstitutional was pure dictum. That is, it was not essential to the decision of the case. Incidentally, Marbury finally lost the case anyway. There was no opportunity to challenge or contradict Marshall's statement except to say that it was unfounded, which Jefferson, then President, most pointedly did.

The power was never again attempted to be exercised upon any law of general application until the well-known Dred Scott decision of 1857, when the Supreme Court decided that the Missouri Compromise Act of 1820 was unconstitutional, an act which had been in effect for 37 years and in which Congress had provided that all other territory north of the southern boundary of Missouri should be kept free. This law was an effort to preserve the Union from dissension and disseverance over the extension of slavery in the free territory.

This decision of the Supreme Court unnecessarily deciding an act of Congress unconstitutional, an act which had been in effect 37 years and which had been passed by Congress, to preserve the Union in the judgment of most students of history, did more to bring on our great unnecessary Civil War than all other causes combined. I venture to say that no Southern State would have repudiated the agreement made between the two sections in the Missouri Compromise and it remained only for the Supreme Court in a political decision unnecessarily to cause this great evil. This decision of the Court, the Court itself and its assumed power of judicial nullification of laws was criticized and attacked by Abraham Lincoln in his first inaugural address of 1861.

The storm of criticism following upon the Supreme Court's Dred Scott decision, as well as the Civil War as a result thereof, kept the Supreme Court from again asserting the power of judicial veto until the Legal Tender cases in 1870. The United States in order to finance the Civil War, caused in large part by the decision of the Supreme Court in the Dred Scott decision, had, by act of Congress, made the notes of the Government legal tender.

In a private suit in 1870 the Court declared the Legal Tender Act of Congress unconstitutional. Grant was President and he not only challenged the power of the Court but he filled up the Supreme Court, i. e., "stacked" it so to speak, so that the Court in the same year reversed itself and declared the Legal Tender Act of Congress unconstitutional. Had this decision of the Supreme Court been made during the war and been acquiesced in by the executive and legislative branches of the Government, it would have rendered the Government impotent and helpless to preserve the Union from disseverance.

In the income-tax decision of 1894 the Supreme Court for a third time adjudged an act of Congress unconstitutional and again in making its decision exercised a legislative rather than a judicial function. Mr. Justice Field, in writing for the Court in that decision, said, "it discriminates between those who receive an income of $4,000 and those who do not * * * whenever such a distinction is made and the law imposes a tax under it, * * * it is class legislation * * *." That there was a difference between the levy of a 5-percent tax on the income of a man receiving $4,000 or more a year and upon another man having an income scarcely large enough to furnish his family with the barest necessities of life never occurred to the distinguished member of the Supreme Court who wrote the opinion. This decision was cured by constitutional amendment. The two former decisions of which I spoke had been cured, one by the Civil War and the other by the Court's reversal of its own decision.

The Supreme Court later (in 1906) by a 5 to 4 decision adjudged the Federal Employer's Liability Act, passed by Congress, as unconstitutional. When sometime afterward Congress reenacted this law it was sustained by the Supreme Court. But in the interval there were some thousands of men killed or maimed, and they or their families left without remedy through the doubtful exercise of what the Supreme Court itself declared to be its power.

The majority of the Court has been usually extremely solicitous of the right of freedom of contract in decisions involving the right of parents to sell the labor of their children, and generally in denying the power of Congress to protect women, children, and labor in general as to minimum wages and maximum hours, and has more frequently asserted and exercised the power of judicial veto.

Time does not permit me to discuss these instances in detail.

Suffice it to say, in conclusion, I stand upon the following propositions which I believe the majority of the Congress will sustain and which I believe a majority of our people will uphold when informed upon these propositions:

1. That the exercise by the Supreme Court in any suit of the power to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional, whether between private parties or otherwise, is in itself not warranted by any power conferred in the Constitution, either expressed or implied, and, therefore, such power does not legally exist under our Constitution or scheme of government.

2. That the power of judicial veto is not necessary in our scheme of government and ought not to exist.

3. That its exercise by the Supreme Court has resulted not in protecting the States or the people in their rights, but, on the contrary, has been harmful to our scheme of government and has lessened the respect of our people for their Government and Constitution and their support thereof.

4. That the remedy is that together with whatever necessary amendments clarifying the welfare clause of the Constitution or extending the national powers where needed to meet the conditions of modern times, there should be a restatement by an act of Congress of its own legislative powers, as well as of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court with respect to its power to pass upon the constitutionality of acts of the legislative branch of the Government.

In summary: There are conditions as to labor of children, of women, hours of labor, living wage, and conditions of work affecting the health and morals of the worker, vital parts of the Nation's life, the general welfare, in which the States are helpless to protect the people. These matters of right are and ought to be within the national powers. There should be no gap between the State powers and the National powers, a "no man's land" wherein those unable to protect themselves may be exploited with impunity. Federal legislation on these matters is now subject to the hazard that laws in force for years may be wiped out by judicial nullification. The welfare clause of the Constitution, as my good friend LEWIS of Maryland will show you in the next speech in Congress upon this subject, was intended to give and does give Congress the power to guard this gap, and no judicial veto of that power should ever again be permitted.

CONSENT CALENDAR

RESIDENT ALIEN WORLD WAR VETERANS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7170) to authorize the naturalization of certain resident alien World War veterans.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, S. 2508 will be substituted for the House bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the racial limitations contained within section 2169 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended (U. S. C. title 8, sec. 359), and within section 14 of the act of May 6, 1882, as amended (U. S. C., title 8, sec. 363), any alien veteran of the World War heretofore ineligible to citizenship because not a free white person or of African nativity or of African descent may be naturalized under this act if he—

(a) Entered the service of the armed forces of the United States prior to November 11, 1918;

(b) Actually rendered service with the armed forces of the United States between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918;

(c) Received an honorable discharge from such service for any reason other than his alienage;

(d) Resumed his previous permanent residence in the United States or any Territory thereof; and

(e) Has maintained a permanent residence continuously since the date of discharge and is now a permanent resident of the United States or any Territory thereof; upon compliance with all the requirements of the naturalization laws, except—

(f) No certificate of arrival and no declaration of intention shall be required;

(g) No additional residence shall be required before the filing of petition for certificate of citizenship; and

(h) The petition for certificate of citizenship shall be filed with a court having naturalization jurisdiction prior to January 1, 1937.

SEC. 2. Certificates of citizenship heretofore issued and heretofore granted by any court having naturalization jurisdiction under the provisions of the act of May 9, 1918, or of the act of July 19, 1919, to any alien veteran who is eligible to be naturalized under the provisions of section 1 of this act, and orders or judgments authorizing such certificates, are hereby declared to be valid for all purposes insofar as the race of the veteran is concerned. Such certificates may be stamped, declaring their validity under this act, by the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization upon submission of satisfactory proof to establish identity.

Certificates declared valid under the foregoing paragraph, which have been lost, mutilated, destroyed, or surrendered to any official of the United States may be replaced by a new certificate bearing date of original certificate upon compliance with the provisions of section 32 (a) of the act of June 29, 1906, as amended.

SEC. 3. On applications filed for any benefits under this act, the requirement of fees for naturalization documents is hereby waived.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

PERTH AMBOY, N. J.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5789, for the relief of the city of Perth Amboy, N. J.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I object.

RESERVATION OF TIMBER, MINERALS, ETC., STATE OF NEW MEXICO

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4541, to extend the provisions of section 2 of the act of February 28, 1925, authorizing reservations of timber, minerals, or easements to exchanges of lands in the State of New Mexico, under the act of February 14, 1923, and the act of February 7, 1929.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a similar Senate bill (S. 1066) will be substituted for the House bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 2 of the act of Congress approved February 28, 1925 (43 Stat. 1090; U. S. C., title 16, sec. 486), authorizing reservations by either party to an exchange under the act of Congress approved March 20, 1922 (42 Stat. 465; U. S. C., title 16, sec. 485), are hereby extended and made applicable to exchanges of lands under the acts of Congress approved February 14, 1923 (42 Stat. 1245), and February 7, 1929 (45 Stat. 1154), which authorize the United States to acquire privately owned lands situated within certain townships in the Lincoln National Forest in the State of New Mexico, by exchanging therefor an equal value of unreserved and unappropriated public lands within said State.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

PARK, PARKWAY, AND RECREATIONAL-AREA PURPOSES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6594, to aid in providing the people of the United States with adequate facilities for park, parkway, and recreational-area purposes, and to provide for the transfer of certain lands chiefly valuable for such purposes to States and political subdivisions thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McLEAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] is interested in this bill. He is absent on account of illness. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

LOANS TO PUERTO RICO

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 129, to amend the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of Porto Rico", approved December 21, 1928, to permit an adjudication with respect to liens of the United States arising by virtue of loans under such joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House joint resolution?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

MEMORIAL TO THE SURVIVORS OF THE DIRIGIBLE "SHENANDOAH"

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6321, authorizing the erection of a memorial to the survivors of the dirigible Shenandoah.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, I want to call attention to the fact that I have previously announced on the call of this calendar that I would object to permitting any of these bills from this committee to be passed which did not have a report. This bill has no report that gives us any information. I have no objection to its going over without prejudice, but in the future I will object to the bill unless a report is sent to us telling us what it is all about.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I thoroughly agree with the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. ZIONCHECK]?

There was no objection.

CRATER LAKE NATIONAL PARK

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7566, to amend an act entitled "An act to accept the cession by the State of Oregon of exclusive jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Crater Lake National Park, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman withhold his request? If the gentleman will be good enough to inquire of me now I will be glad to explain anything he desires to know about this bill.

Mr. TRUAX. What does the Comptroller General say about the bill?

Mr. MOTT. I do not know that the Comptroller General has anything to do with it.

Mr. TRUAX. He has withheld the salaries of the present commissioner and the former commissioner for the time they resided without the boundaries of the park.

Mr. MOTT. That is true. He was obliged to do that under existing law.

Mr. TRUAX. May I ask the gentleman this question: This bill provides for a commissioner to act for the court, is that not true?

Mr. MOTT. There is already a United States commissioner for Crater Lake National Park. He is obliged to remain in Crater Lake National Park continuously because that is his legal residence. Under existing law he is not allowed to reside any place else at any time during the year. But Crater Lake National Park is 7,000 feet high, and beginning about September in each year the snow comes, and after that it is impossible to either go in or out of the park; so the commissioner, during those winter months, has to live outside of the park or else be snowed in all winter. This bill simply permits him to reside outside the boundaries of the park when it is impossible to reside inside.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield? I would like to make a little statement.

Mr. MOTT. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I am familiar with the situation there. It is utterly impossible and it is utterly useless for the commissioner to stay in that park when the snow is 10 or 15 feet deep. I do not know anything about this particular bill, but I feel it is a reasonable request for him to be allowed to remain outside of the park when the snow is so deep and nobody can get in there.

Mr. MOTT. That is the only purpose of the bill.

Mr. MILLARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield.

Mr. MILLARD. The salary is very small, is it not?

Mr. MOTT. Very small.

Mr. TRUAX. Well, how much is it?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The salaries of all of them are $2,000 a year.

Mr. TRUAX. And this does not provide for any increase or any new position?

Mr. MOTT. Oh, no.

Mr. TRUAX. Then I will withdraw my request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a similar Senate bill, S. 2185, be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6, paragraph 1, of an act entitled "An act to accept the cession by the State of Oregon of exclusive jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Crater Lake National Park, and for other purposes", approved August 21, 1916 (39 Stat. L. 523), be amended so as to read:

"SEC. 6. That the United States District Court for Oregon shall appoint a commissioner, who shall reside within the exterior boundaries of the Crater Lake National Park or at a place reasonably adjacent to the park, the place of residence to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior, and who shall have jurisdiction to hear and act upon all complaints made of any violations of law or of the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Interior for the government of the park and for the protection of the animals, birds, and fish, and objects of interest therein, and for other purposes authorized by this act."

SEC. 2. That section 9 of the said act be amended by striking out the words, "Provided, That the said commissioner shall reside within the exterior boundaries of said Crater Lake National Park, at a place to be designated by the court making such appointment."

SEC. 3. Any commissioner heretofore appointed under authority of the said act shall be entitled to receive the salary provided by law, which may have accrued at the date this act becomes effective, without regard to whether such commissioner or commissioners may have resided within the exterior boundaries of the Crater Lake National Park.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

FREDERIC A. DELANO

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 195, to provide for the reappointment of Frederic A. Delano as a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to explain that I shall ask unanimous consent to substitute Senate bill 117, which is an identical bill. Two regents are to be appointed. Mr. Frederic A. Delano has been regent of the Smithsonian Institution for 12 years and ought to be continued in this post because he is most effective.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If the gentleman will bear with me a moment I think he will see the logic of my position. The committee has not filed a report on this bill and on one or two other bills. I think this committee, as well as all others, should comply substantially with the rules of the House, which provide that a report shall be filed with a bill. This is the reason I am making this request that the bill may be passed over without prejudice, to allow the committee to file a report so the entire Membership of the House may know what the bill is about.

Mr. KELLER. A report on the subject was made some weeks ago and has been published.

Mr. WOLCOTT. But a report should accompany this bill so that the Members generally may have it for their information. I notice that the gentleman's committee has been somewhat remiss on three or four bills in this particular.

Mr. TRUAX. There is a report here on this bill consisting of five lines.

Mr. KELLER. I am right here ready to give the gentleman any information he desires.

Mr. WOLCOTT. We want the complete report, the usual report it is customary to file with bills.

Mr. KELLER. I am right here. If the gentleman will tell me what information he wants, I shall try to furnish it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. My point is that the information should be furnished in a report that is available for the benefit of all Members of the House.

Mr. KELLER. I shall be glad, indeed, to make the customary report, but in the case of a man of the prominence of Frederic A. Delano, who has been serving for 12 years, it did not strike me that anything more need be said than simply to ask that he serve longer.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The House rules provide that information be given for the benefit of all the Members. There are certain Members who might not know Mr. Delano as well as does the gentleman from Illinois. For this reason I must insist that the Committee on the Library follow the rules of the House and submit information for the benefit of all Members.

Mr. KELLER. I shall be delighted to file such a report, although I know it will not be read.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. I would like to say to the gentleman from Michigan that we are neither crystal gazers nor mind readers. The gentleman from Illinois may have all this information in his head, but we members of the committee do not.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The gentleman's committee should file a report so we can form our conclusions concerning the merits of the bill. Now, I would suggest that the gentleman pursue that course on this bill.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I shall be delighted to. I shall write such a beautiful report that these gentleman who make this suggestion will want to take the floor and make a speech on it.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. COSTELLO. Does this particular office carry any salary?

Mr. KELLER. No.

Mr. COSTELLO. That is not shown in the report.

Mr. KELLER. It is so provided in the law, and this committee is supposed to know that law.

Mr. COSTELLO. Failure of committees to file reports only requires extra research and study on the part of the members of the committee.

Mr. KELLER. I assure the gentleman I shall write a beautiful report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FILING AND INDEXING SERVICE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4015, authorizing the establishment of a filing and indexing service for useful Government publications.

Mr. COSTELLO and Mr. McFARLANE objected.

CLACKAMAS COUNTY, OREG.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5058, to convey certain lands to Clackamas County, Oreg., for public park purposes.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the author of the bill the reason for the change in the amendment appearing in the bill on page 2. I notice that the committee report states the Secretary of the Interior has recommended an amendment, but the committee has substituted an entirely different amendment.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, the amendment substituted by the committee has the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. COSTELLO. It does not show that. It seems that the money to be derived from the sale of timber is to be disposed of in a different manner. Is that correct?

Mr. MOTT. Yes; it is. The money from the sale of timber would be disposed of in accordance with the Oregon and California land-grant law.

Mr. COSTELLO. Under the amendment that is now contained in the bill?

Mr. MOTT. Yes; and that is in the usual way. First there was suggested a different method of disposing of the money by the Secretary, but when I called his attention to the fact that this was in accordance with the usual method for disposing of Oregon and California timber he gave his consent to this amendment.

Mr. COSTELLO. In the amendment which the Secretary recommended it was provided that the money should be disposed of according to the Oregon-California land-grant law. The gentleman's amendment as submitted here does not show that it is to be disposed of in that manner.

Mr. MOTT. This bill provides that the sale must be handled under the provisions of the act of 1916, and that tells what is done with the money. So that it has the approval of the Secretary in the form in which it now appears.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

To convey certain lands to Clackamas County, Oreg., for public-park purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to convey by quitclaim deed to Clackamas County, Oreg., on behalf of the United States, the south half southwest quarter and the west half northeast quarter southwest quarter section 11, township 3 south, range 4 east, Willamette meridian, in the State of Oregon, containing 100 acres, more or less, on condition that such county shall accept and use such lands solely for public-park purposes; but if such county shall at any time cease to use such lands for public-park purposes, or shall permit the use of such lands for any other purpose, or shall alienate or attempt to alienate them, they shall revert to the United States.

With the following committee amendments:

Line 4, strike out the words "convey by quitclaim deed" and substitute in lieu thereof the following language: "issue a patent."

Line 5, following the comma after the word "States", insert "for."

Line 14, change the comma to a semicolon and insert the following:

"Provided, That there shall be reserved to the United States, its patentees or their transferees, the right to cut and remove therefrom the merchantable timber, reserving to Clackamas County, Oreg., when such sale is made under the provisions of the act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. 218), a preference right to purchase the timber at the highest price bid."

Add the following section, to be known as "section 2":

"SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe all necessary regulations to carry into effect the foregoing provisions of this act."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SHOSHONE RECLAMATION PROJECT, WYOMING

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6867, providing for the allocation of net revenues of the Shoshone power plant of the Shoshone reclamation project in Wyoming.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

PRESERVATION OF HISTORIC AMERICAN SITES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6670, to provide for the preservation of historic American sites, buildings, objects, and antiquities of national significance, and for other purposes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

ADJUSTMENT OF BOUNDARIES OF THE CHELAN NATIONAL FOREST, WASH.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3061, to authorize the adjustment of the boundaries of the Chelan National Forest in the State of Washington.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 20, 1922 (42 Stat. 465; U. S. C., title 16, sec. 485), be, and the same are hereby, extended and made applicable to any lands within 4 miles of the boundaries of the Chelan National Forest. Lands conveyed to the United States under this act, shall, upon acceptance of title, become parts of the Chelan National Forest and subject to all laws relating thereto. Any lands in public ownership lying within the area described in this act and found to be valuable for national-forest purposes may, upon recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture, be added to the Chelan National Forest by proclamation of the President: Provided, however, That nothing contained herein shall affect prior valid existing claims or entries or prior existing withdrawals or reservations.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 6, before the word "boundaries", insert the word "present."

On page 2, line 2, strike out the words "Secretary of Agriculture", and insert in lieu thereof the words "Secretaries of Agriculture and of the Interior."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INSCRIPTION ON PEDESTAL OF THE BUST OF FORMER SPEAKER JOSEPH G. CANNON

The Clerk called the next business, House Resolution 117, to suitably inscribe the bust of former Speaker Joseph G. Cannon.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I say to my colleague, the gentleman from Texas, that it seems to me this is a reflection on a former distinguished Speaker of the House and he should not make the request.

Mr. TRUAX. This is a reflection on a committee, not on a former Speaker.

Mr. ASHBROOK. It is a reflection on the former Speaker, Joseph G. Cannon, under whom I served many years ago. I had great admiration for him, even though he was known as the "czar of the House." I hope the gentleman will withdraw his request.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does the gentleman want it passed over or does he want me to object? The report gives us no information. This is all the report contains:

The committee has had under consideration and respectfully reports the same back with the recommendation that it pass.

They do not tell us how much it is going to cost. We do not know whether they are going to give the former Speaker proper honor or respect or just what they are going to do. The committee ought to be able to write a report that is intelligent. They have not done it in this instance, and I am going to object to all such bills in the future that are reported by that or any other committee that does not give us full information about the bill.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I take exception to such language. The gentleman does not know how to read if he makes that statement.

Mr. TRUAX. I wonder if the gentleman from the Seventeenth Ohio District endorses the so-called "cannonism"?

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I referred to Speaker Cannon as the former "czar of the House", but he was a Speaker of the House of Representatives and an able statesman, and I consider this action a reflection upon his name and memory.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas to pass this bill over without prejudice?

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE] or anyone else that makes the statement the gentleman just made. When he says this committee does not write intelligent reports, he does not know what he is talking about. If he will read the reports I have written, he will find they are intelligent. I am not responsible for one who cannot understand the English language, however.

Mr. McFARLANE. In answer to the gentleman's statement, may I say that this is the third one of these reports which contains one single sentence. All during this session of Congress we have had such reports from this Library Committee that tell us nothing. Since the gentleman has made such remarks, I call his attention to the fact that we are tired of it, and it is going to stop if he and his committee want to get bills through this House.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. TRUAX. This report consists of about 23 words. May I say the reports of this committee are intelligent and understandable, but I think the gentleman from Illinois and the committee have a lack of time in which to give us the reports which we would like to have.

Mr. McFARLANE. In other words, the gentleman thinks they are working too hard?

Mr. TRUAX. I think so.

Mr. McFARLANE. Well, let it stand that way.

Mr. KELLER. If the gentleman will read the reports I made on the other pending bills, he would make no such remark.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I say that the reports from that committee are understandable, they are lucid, and the most interesting reports I have read in my life, when they are made, proving to me that the committee has the intelligence, ability, and perhaps the time to write a very interesting and lucid report. That is why I object, because I so enjoy reading the reports that the committee makes. I want them to make reports.

Mr. McFARLANE. The gentleman made some remarks a while ago about several reports from the same committee.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I said there were four bills on this calendar concerning which the committee said nothing, and that is why I was objecting.

Mr. EKWALL. I would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER] that he make his reports in words of one syllable after this so that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE] may be able to understand them.

Mr. McFARLANE. It is not a question of understanding them. It is a question of giving us the reports that we ought to have, so that we may have the necessary information in reference to the bills that come before this House for consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

TRANSFER OF LAND IN THE CITY OF ANDERSON, S. C.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6983, to provide for the transfer of certain land in the city of Anderson, S. C., to such city.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to transfer to the city of Anderson, S. C., all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a certain portion of the post-office site in such city, described as follows: A strip of land 7 feet in width, fronting on north Main Street and extending for a distance of 150 feet from Federal Street (being the entire length of the post-office site fronting on north Main Street). Such strip of land is required by such city for the widening of north Main Street.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 1, after the parenthesis, insert a comma and the following: "upon the payment by the city to the United States of such amount as the Secretary of the Treasury in his discretion considers to be the fair value of the land conveyed to the city for street-widening purposes."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GEN. ROBERT E. LEE

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 232, authorizing the erection of an equestrian statue of Gen. Robert E. Lee in the Arlington National Cemetery.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over out of respect to the distinguished author, who is not here today.

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this bill has a very complete and comprehensive report of nearly three pages, and, for one, I shall not object to the passage of the bill because of the lack of a report from the Committee on the Library.

Mr. McFARLANE. We have been seeing for the last 2 days pictures in the local papers of the author of this bill. I wonder he is not on the floor looking after his legislation instead of out playing tennis.

Mr. MILLARD. If the gentleman will permit, he was here, but did not think the bill would be reached on the calendar.

Mr. McFARLANE. Is that the reason? I thought, perhaps, he was out again running for President.

Mr. MILLARD. I think I can get him here if the gentleman wants him.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the fact that I wrote this report. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES MEMORIAL FUND

The Clerk called the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 237) for the establishment of a trust fund to be known as the "Oliver Wendell Holmes Memorial Fund."

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Joint resolution for the establishment of a trust fund to be known as the "Oliver Wendell Holmes Memorial Fund"

Whereas by the will of the late Oliver Wendell Holmes, admitted to probate on March 9, 1935, in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the United States Government has been made the residuary legatee; and

Whereas the Treasurer of the United States will receive such bequest and it will be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts unless the Congress enact legislation for its application to a more specific purpose; and

Whereas that purpose should be a living and useful memorial of the testator, symbolic of his interest and achievements; and

Whereas he also left by his will his own private library to the Library of Congress, a large portion thereof consisting of books on jurisprudence; and

Whereas there could be no more fitting memorial of the distinguished jurist than a collection, developed upon the one thus bequeathed, of the fundamental works in the field of jurisprudence, to be maintained in the National Library, which serves also the Supreme Court of the United States, and to be perpetually known as the "Oliver Wendell Holmes Collection of Jurisprudence": Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the residuary fund from the estate of the late Oliver Wendell Holmes be received by the Treasurer of the United States and immediately credited to the Library of Congress Trust Fund Board, as a special fund to be known as the "Oliver Wendell Holmes Memorial Fund", and to be administered in accordance with section 1 of the act of March 3, 1925 (2 U. S. C. 157), creating such Trust Fund Board. The income of this fund shall be used for the purpose of building up and maintaining a collection of legal literature in the law division of the Library of Congress to be known as the "Oliver Wendell Holmes Collection of Jurisprudence."

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 12, strike out the words "law division" and insert in lieu thereof "law department."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXPEDITION OF HERNANDO DE SOTO

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 265, pertaining to an appropriate celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the expedition of Hernando De Soto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I have an objection to the amount of $10,000. If the author of the joint resolution will consent to the amount being cut down to $5,000 for this commission I shall have no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Consideration of the joint resolution had already been agreed to, had it not, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington was on his feet when the Chair put the question.

Mr. RANKIN. All right; will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes; I will reserve my objection.

Mr. RANKIN. I shall take but a moment or two of the time of the House.

We are approaching the four hundredth anniversary of the expedition of Hernando De Soto, one of the most colorful, dramatic, and important expeditions in all the history of America. We are simply asking here that this be not an appropriation but an authorization. It is probable that not a dollar of it will be called for, but the gentleman who was before the committee from the Smithsonian Institution—Dr. Swanton—suggested that many of these records are in Madrid. Let me say to the gentleman from Washington that there were four reports written of De Soto's expedition. Three of them were written by men who were with De Soto—Biedma, the King's factor; Rangel, De Soto's secretary; and one by a man who called himself the "gentleman from Elvas", a highly educated Portuguese, who wrote a most intelligent report of the expedition. Later there was a report written by a man who called himself "Garcilasso de la Vega" (the Inca), a Peruvian descendant of one of Pizarro's men. These are the only reports, and from these reports we have been trying to get definite information.

Some of these records are in Spain. We do not contemplate sending anyone over there, but possibly having some of the records translated.

I suggested $5,000, but Dr. Swanton thought we ought to make it an authorization of not to exceed $10,000. Frankly, I do not think this money all will be spent, and it cannot be spent without Congress passing on the appropriation at the request of the President.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. It has been my opinion that $10,000 is an excessive amount to prepare reports and make recommendations to Congress following the preparation of such reports.

Mr. RANKIN. This is for gathering the information on which they propose to base their recommendation.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. If $5,000 proves to be inadequate, the gentleman can certainly come back and get a further appropriation.

Mr. RANKIN. I understand that; but I see no objection to leaving the amount as it is in the bill.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. There is going to be objection to the bill if $10,000 is included in the measure.

Mr. RANKIN. Of course, I will have to agree to the amendment if the gentleman insists.

Mr. MILLARD. Is this celebration going to be in connection with that great battle of all time which the gentleman mentioned a short while ago?

Mr. RANKIN. No.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. If it is understood that the amount is to be reduced, as suggested, there is no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Then, Mr. Speaker, it is agreed that the bill is to be amended, reducing the amount to $5,000.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas we are approaching the four hundredth anniversary of the expedition of Hernando De Soto, the first and most imposing expedition ever made by Europeans into the wilds of North America; and

Whereas it is desired that this four hundredth anniversary of that great expedition be properly celebrated and markers placed at such points along the route of said expedititon as may be definitely determined and established after thorough investigation; and

Whereas it is necessary to have a committee or commission to make a proper study and report back to Congress its recommendations for such a celebration: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a commission consisting of not fewer than five nor more than seven members, to make a thorough study of the subject of De Soto's expedition and to report back to the next session of Congress its recommendations for a suitable and appropriate celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of said expedition, including the erection of such markers, monuments, and so forth, as said commission may deem proper for the marking of the path followed by said expedition.

That in order to meet the necessary expenses of said commission there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum or sums as may be necessary to pay the expenses of said commission in making this investigation, preparing and filing its reports and recommendations to Congress, not to exceed $10,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, beginning in line 9, after the word "expedition", strike out the comma and the remainder of the line and all of lines 10, 11, and 12.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Zioncheck: Page 2, line 19, strike out "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks just made on the De Soto expedition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

RELIEF OF UNEMPLOYMENT IN MINING DISTRICTS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7958) to relieve unemployment in mining districts, increase the monetary gold and silver reserve of the United States, and to develop strategic, deficiency, and noncompetitive mineral resources of the Nation, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I object.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will.

Mr. TRUAX. I commend the motives of the committee that have reported this bill favorably, but I want to call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that this bill authorizes the sum of $75,000,000, to be taken from the relief works bill, the $4,800,000,000 bill that has passed the House and the Senate. All of these funds are to be allotted by the Allotment Board appointed by the President, consisting of Mr. Hopkins, Mr. Ickes, and Mr. Wallace.

Here is a bill designed worthily for the relief of unemployed miners. It is sectional. It would take at one sweep $75,000,000 from this fund. That is entirely too large an amount to be considered in this manner. It is a poor way to legislate. I suggest to the sponsors of this bill that they get the approval of this Allotment Board, and the approval of the President of the United States, and then bring it back to the Congress in an intelligent way so that Members can determine whether or not it should be passed.

I thank the gentleman from Michigan for withholding his objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I renew my objection.

TO AUTHORIZE THE FURNISHING OF STEAM FROM THE CENTRAL HEATING PLANT TO THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7652) to authorize the furnishing of steam from the Central Heating Plant to the Federal Reserve Board, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior through the National Park Service be, and he is hereby, authorized to furnish steam from the central heating plant for the use of the Federal Reserve Board on the property which has been acquired by it in squares east of 87 and east of 88 in the District of Columbia: Provided, That the Federal Reserve Board agrees to pay for the steam furnished at reasonable rates, not less than cost, as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That the Federal Reserve Board agrees to provide the necessary connections with the Government mains at its own expense and in a manner satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 2. That hereafter the rates to be paid for steam furnished to the Corcoran Gallery of Art, the buildings, old and new, of the Pan American Union, the American Red Cross buildings, and such other non-Federal public buildings as are or hereafter may be authorized to receive steam from the central heating plant shall be determined by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 3. That all acts and parts of acts which may be inconsistent or in conflict with this act are hereby repealed to the extent of such inconsistency or conflict.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BIG BEND NATIONAL PARK

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6373) providing for the establishment of the Big Bend National Park in the State of Texas, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the bill S. 2131 was substituted for the House bill.

The Clerk read the Senate bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when title to such lands as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior as necessary for recreational park purposes within the boundaries to be determined by him within the area of approximately one million five hundred thousand acres, in the counties of Brewster and Presidio, in the State of Texas, known as the "Big Bend" area, shall have been vested in the United States, such lands shall be, and are hereby, established, dedicated, and set apart as a public park for the benefit and enjoyment of the people and shall be known as the "Big Bend National Park": Provided, That the United States shall not purchase by appropriation of public moneys any land within the aforesaid area, but such lands shall be secured by the United States only by public and private donations.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion and upon submission of evidence of title satisfactory to him, to accept, on behalf of the United States, title to the lands referred to in the previous section hereof as may be deemed by him necessary or desirable for national-park purposes: Provided, That no land for said park shall be accepted until exclusive jurisdiction over the entire area, in form satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, shall have been ceded by the State of Texas to the United States.

SEC. 3. The administration, protection, and development of the aforesaid park shall be exercised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by the National Park Service, subject to the provisions of the act of August 25, 1916 (39 Stat. 535), entitled "An act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes", as amended: Provided, That the provisions of the act of June 10, 1920, known as the "Federal Water Power Act", shall not apply to this park.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The House bill was laid on the table.

TO PROMOTE THE DEVELOPMENT OF INDIAN ARTS AND CRAFTS AND TO CREATE A BOARD TO ASSIST THEREIN, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6468) to promote the development of Indian arts and crafts and to create a board to assist therein, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know what the gentleman's objection is to the bill.

Mr. TRUAX. The Director of the Budget says that he sees no reason for money being taken out of the Treasury for this purpose.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. The board does not receive any salary.

Mr. TRUAX. My objection to the bill is this: It is an extension of bureaucracy. It proposes to set up another bureau of executive officers. It is creating more jobs and additional burdens on the taxpayers.

I have been fighting all of my life against this extension of bureaucracy. The democratic platform promised to cut the bureaucracy and reduce its expenses 25 percent. Yet we have bills brought in here every day, and every session of this calendar and of the Private Calendar, extending and expanding bureaucracy with more governmental jobs, more burdens upon the taxpayers. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. It is time to call a halt on further expansion of bureaucracy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McFARLANE. I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

AMENDING THE FILLED-MILK ACT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6361) to amend the Filled-Milk Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, this is another bill setting up more bureaucracy, $10,000 annually for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act. I object.

NON-INDIAN CLAIMANTS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7741) to authorize an appropriation to pay non-Indian claimants whose claims have been extinguished under the act of June 7, 1924, but who have been found entitled to awards under said act, as supplemented by the act of May 31, 1933.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

INDIANS OF TAOS PUEBLO, N. MEX.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6910) to amend section 4 of the act of May 31, 1933, enacted to safeguard the interests and welfare of Indians of the Taos Pueblo, N. Mex., in certain lands within the Carson National Forest.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of the act of May 31, 1933 (48 Stat. 108), enacted to safeguard the interests and welfare of the Indians of the Taos Pueblo in certain lands utilized by them for livestock, wood, religious ceremonials, and other purposes, be, and the same is hereby, amended to embrace the lands within the metes and bounds description hereinafter set forth, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, with the approval of the governing authorities of the Taos Pueblo, N. Mex., to disburse from the funds in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of this pueblo, including those authorized to be appropriated, so much thereof as may be necessary to purchase the cattle and improvements belonging to non-Indian stockmen operating within the additional areas herein involved and not included in the description appearing in the said section 4 of the act approved May 31, 1933, supra, and upon the consummation of such purchase the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to administer the additional area for the benefit of the Indians of the Taos Pueblo in the manner prescribed in section 4 of the act of May 31, 1933:

Beginning at the northeast corner of the Pueblo de Taos Grant; thence northeasterly along the divide between Rio Pueblo de Taos and Rio Lucero to the protracted position of the line between unsurveyed sections 9 and 10, township 26 north, 14 east; thence north on the line between sections 9 and 10 and between unsurveyed sections 3 and 4 to the boundary of the Antonio Martinez or Godoi Grant, which is the boundary of the Carson National Forest; thence northeasterly and northerly along the boundary of the Godoi Grant to the divide between Rio Lucero and Rio Hondo; thence northeasterly along said divide and easterly along the divide between Rio Lucero and Red River and between Rio Pueblo de Taos and Red River to the west boundary of the Maxwell Grant; thence southerly along the west boundary of the Maxwell Grant to the north boundary of township 25 north, range 15 east; thence west on the north boundary of township 25 north, range 15 east, to the northwest corner thereof; thence south on the west boundary of township 25 north, range 15 east, to the divide between Rio Pueblo de Taos and Rio Fernandez de Taos; thence westerly along said divide to the east boundary of the Pueblo de Taos Grant; thence north to the point of beginning; containing approximately 39,000 acres, more or less.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

OMAHA TRIBE OF INDIANS, NEBRASKA

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7202) to investigate the claims of and to enroll certain persons, if entitled, with the Omaha Tribe of Indians.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EASTERN AND WESTERN CHEROKEES

The Clerk called House Resolution 125, pertaining to the Eastern and Western Cherokees.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX and Mr. BACON objected.

EMERGENCY FARM MORTGAGE ACT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 6776) to amend section 36 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I call the attention of the author of the bill to the fact that the bill seeks to amend the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act. Just yesterday I received a letter from one of the largest farmers of Ohio, who is about to be foreclosed and dispossessed because of the recent Supreme Court decision. There are at the present moment bills introduced in this body by the coauthor of the bill declared unconstitutional, Mr. LEMKE, which seeks to correct the features and sections of the bill that were pronounced unconstitutional. I ask the distinguished gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] to consent to pass this bill over without prejudice for further information, and until we can secure positive action on the bills introduced by the gentleman from North Dakota, Mr. LEMKE. This bill is now being considered by the Committee on the Judiciary and I hope that that Committee will give it an early and favorable report. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. PIERCE. This bill in no way is connected with the bill the gentleman refers to. I agree with him upon the necessity of some action on that Lemke mortgage-bankruptcy bill. This simply gives to a few nonprofit mutual irrigation companies the same right to make their claims before the R. F. C. for a loan that has been exercised by other companies. Two years ago we passed an act appropriating several million dollars to finance irrigation and drainage companies. It was attached to the Farm Mortgage Act, and through a technical decision of the legal department of the R. F. C., mutual and nonprofit irrigation districts were barred from filing their claims. This affects only four or five districts. It loans no money. It simply gives them the right to present claims to the R. F. C. One district in Oregon, with perhaps a thousand people affected, with claims of a million dollars against them, if they could get the money could settle for 10 cents on the dollar. The money is available to them if the R. F. C. could receive their applications.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. To state to the gentleman from Ohio that I happen to be a member of the subcommittee that gave this bill consideration. It was unanimously approved by the subcommittee and by the full Committee on Agriculture. I think if the gentleman will look further, he will realize that this bill in no way affects the problem he refers to.

Mr. TRUAX. I understand; but let me ask the gentleman from Wisconsin this question: What consideration or attention is the Committee on Agriculture giving to the present deplorable situation? A quarter of a million farmers will be dispossessed in 1 year.

Mr. BOILEAU. In reply to that, I may say that the Committee on Agriculture, after much work on the part of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE], and some of the rest of us, reported the Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage refinancing bill, and if a few more Members will sign the petition, we will discharge the Rules Committee from consideration of that measure and bring it on to the floor for consideration.

Mr. McFARLANE. Why did they not ask the Rules Committee for a rule so that we could consider the bill?

Mr. TRUAX. That is what I want to know.

Mr. PIERCE. We have done so.

Mr. TRUAX. The lady who wrote this letter states that the Federal courts are holding these cases in abeyance, pending the action of Congress. The Federal judges, whom I have had occasion to criticize, as you Members know, are holding these cases in abeyance because they expect this Congress to do something, to take some action. In the city of Lima, Ohio, the court has over 800 cases pending. It is time for this Congress to not only be sympathetic, but to take some action, to take some real, tangible interest. Therefore, I am going to renew my request, Mr. Speaker, that this bill be passed over without prejudice until we can get action on this other matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX]?

Mr. BOILEAU. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE], has been more than fair in trying to do the very thing to which the gentleman has referred. There is no Member of this House who has worked more constantly to relieve the distressed farmers than has the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE]. An objection to passing this bill will not in any way hurry the results which the gentleman from Ohio wishes to secure, and I certainly hope the gentleman will not use this method in trying to get the gentleman from Oregon to support the legislation to which he refers, because he has gone as far as the gentleman or I or any other Member in that direction. To hold up this bill will not accomplish the purpose which the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, at this juncture I ask unanimous consent to insert this letter in the RECORD, together with an extension of remarks, and I will withdraw my request to have this bill passed over without prejudice.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. There are 189 signatures on the petition to discharge the Rules Committee from further consideration of the Frazier-Lemke farm-mortgage refinance bill, and if some of the Members who are always talking for the farmers and favoring agriculture will sign that petition, so that we can discharge the committee and bring that legislation before Congress for consideration, they will be doing these farmers a real service, which will help save their farms and their homes.

Mr. TRUAX. Even so, I would remind the gentleman from Texas that the passage of the Frazier-Lemke refinancing bill does not save this quarter of a million farmers who are about to be foreclosed and their farms confiscated. The only vehicle that will save them is a measure that will be declared constitutional by the Supreme Court, which will give them a moratorium for at least 3 years. That is what this new bill proposes to do. The gentleman from Texas, I am sure, classes in the same group that he mentions as those who are sympathetic toward the needs of agriculture. That is the same group which is always sympathetic to the soldiers, but when it comes to votes, they vote against them.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does the gentleman intimate that I am one of those?

Mr. TRUAX. Oh, no; no.

At this juncture I insert the letter from Mrs. Arthur Swartz, Walbridge, Lucas County, Ohio, near Toledo:

WALBRIDGE, OHIO, June 10, 1935.

DEAR MR. TRUAX: I am sorry I have to write to you again, but there are a few things we would like to know. It sure was a hard blow to us farmers when they knocked out that Frazier-Lemke Act. We are in a worse condition now than before. Now, we haven't anything to our name. All we was allowed was $900 after we went bankrupted. What they gave us for our $900 was the household goods; 2 cows; the old tractor, almost worn out; 50 Ancona chickens; the corn we had left which we hadn't sold yet, which was around $165; and the wheat crop, which is in the ground. Otherwise all our farm machinery has been taken away from us, even our horses. You see that law gave us 5 years in which to buy our machinery back, which was all right, but now, since the Frazier-Lemke bill was thrown out, we poor farmers are in an awful fix.

It is just like HUEY LONG says, the rich are getting richer and the poor are getting poorer. If it wasn't for that bankruptcy law we never would of went bankrupted; but we were forced into it; that was the only thing we could do to save our farm. Do you know if they are trying to pass something now to take the place of the Frazier-Lemke Act? I don't know whether I spell that right or not. I am sure they could do something to get us back on our feet so we could get our farm machinery back again. They could pass a law and keep those bankers, or stop them from selling these farms. These bankers are running our Government and it has to be stopped or there will be war. I can see that, can't you?

Now, I am not blaming you for a bit of this. We ought to have a few more men like you and this Nation would not be where it is today. You can take this letter and read it to the President or anyone you care to. What they should of done was pass that bonus bill and what they should do is make new money and pay up these tight bankers and give the farmers at least a chance. If they do this they would have two of their main objects settled. We haven't been benefited in no way whatever over this new deal.

All we see and read about is how they have helped the farmers. I am writing to tell you how the farmers feel about it. We belong to Farmers' Union and know how the farmers around all the United States, you might say, thinks of this new deal. The soldiers are joining the farmers and you know that will be some army, and there won't be nothing but war. It wasn't our fault 4 years ago when we first got behind, we only got $80 for 25 acres of corn and 17 cents a bushel for oats, and the worst of that we couldn't even sell our oats; we were sent home from the elevator because there wasn't no sale for oats.

This is the reason we got behind and now we could pay them a little more but our bankers won't take nothing until we give them what we owe from 4 years ago. I think they could pass that Frazier-Lemke Act and leave the scaling part out, don't you, and give the farmers at least 10 or 15 years instead of 6 years? These bankers aren't so hard up.

I will tell you what our bankers are doing, they take these farms away from people and if they want them they keep them for themselves, but if they don't want them they sell them to someone for $1,000 down; well then this man can't keep up his interest so they sell it to someone else for $1,000 down. All they do is take everything they can get, all these people have is $1,000 and in that way they lose that, and that is something else that ought to be stopped.

Well, I will close, and I hope you can make out this letter, I should of copied it over but maybe it wouldn't be any better. We are so worried the fix we are in, so all I ask of you is are they trying to pass some new law to help the farmers? Our only hope is some law to help us. The Federal court is doing their part; they are holding farms to see if Congress passes a new law; so will you do your part and do what you can for us? Write and let us know what you know or let the Federal court know. Hoping to hear from you. Thank you.

MRS. ARTHUR SWARTZ Walbridge, Ohio.

You will note that this letter comes from the heart. There is no propaganda, no demagoguery, no camouflage. Modest as all farm folk are, this good lady only asks to remain on the farm that she has helped to build up and to retain the farm machinery so they can carry on in their time-honored vocation. Is that not a modest request? Is this lady asking Congress something that they cannot or should not do? Is she asking Congress too much when she asks for the retention of her home and her farm? Is she not asking less than has previously been requested by bankers, insurance companies, 36-percent loan sharks and other Shylocking moneylenders? All she desires is a place to live—a home—"that spot of earth supremely blessed, a dearer, sweeter spot than all the rest."

The lady is right when she contends that bankers are running our Government. She is right when she says bankers as a class are tight. They are not only tight, but they are selfish, greedy, and avaricious. Of course, my good woman, you have not been benefited as yet by the new deal. We must admit, however, that the A. A. A. is responsible for a remarkable advance in the selling price of farm commodities. Give the farmer a chance to raise a good crop this year, 1935, to harvest that crop, to haul it to the market, to sell it, to feed that grain into high-priced hogs and cattle and thus market the grain through livestock. Give him this opportunity and he will be back on his feet again.

Deny him this opportunity. Deny him the right to live on his farm, to till the soil, to raise grain and crops for his livestock and to haul the livestock to the market. Deny him all this and take away his farm; confiscate his home, obtain deficiency judgments and mortgage his whole future life to the bankers, insurance companies, and other moneylenders, and you have perpetrated the most grave and worst injustice ever meted out to any class of deserving citizens. I admit, Mrs. Swartz, with never a struggle that you are positively right in your contention that it was not your fault 4 years ago when you first became delinquent on your farm. Twenty-cent corn, 10-cent oats, and 2-cent hogs were enough provocation, panic, and depression to rend the whole country asunder, and as usual the farmers were penalized and sacrificed.

They are sacrificed now on the bloody altar of the Court decision in favor of racketeering bankers, selfish insurance companies, and other plundering money lenders. Congress and Congress alone can save from further destruction, confiscation, and tragedy these patient, tolerant, modest tillers of the soil.

My dear Mrs. Swartz, I am with you and for you 100 percent. I congratulate your Federal court in their wisdom and sense of fair play in holding farm foreclosures in abeyance to see what Congress will do. If Congress does nothing, however, then the blood is not upon your hands, but the blood of these wholesale confiscations and foreclosures is upon the hands of those who are guilty of indecision, inaction, and ineptitude.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio that he be permitted to revise and extend his remarks and include therein a letter to which he referred?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first two sentences of section 36 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, are amended to read as follows:

"The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans as hereinafter provided, in an aggregate amount not exceeding $125,000,000, including commitments and disbursements heretofore made, to or for the benefit of drainage districts, levee districts, levee and drainage districts, irrigation districts, and similar districts, mutual nonprofit companies and incorporated water-users' associations duly organized under the laws of any State, and to or for the benefit of political subdivisions of States which have or propose to purchase or otherwise acquire projects or portions thereof devoted chiefly to the improvement of lands for agricultural purposes. Such loans shall be made for the purpose of enabling any such district, political subdivision, company, or association (hereafter referred to as the "borrower") to reduce and refinance its outstanding indebtedness incurred in connection with any such project; or, whether or not it has any such indebtedness, to purchase, acquire, construct, or complete such a project or any part thereof, or to purchase or acquire additional drainage, levee, or irrigation works, or property, rights, or appurtenances in connection therewith, and to repair, extend, or improve any such project or make such additions thereto as are consonant with or necessary or desirable for the proper functioning thereof or for the further assurance of the ability of the borrower to repay its loan: Provided, That it is not intended that additional lands will thereby be brought into production."

SEC. 2. Such section is further amended by striking out the sentence therein which reads as follows: "When any loan is authorized pursuant to the provisions of this section and it shall then are thereafter appear that repairs and necessary extensions or improvements to the project of such district, political subdivision, company, or association are necessary or desirable for the proper functioning of its project or for the further assurance of its ability to repay such loan, and if it shall also appear that such repairs and necessary extensions or improvements are not designed to bring new lands into production, the Corporation, within the limitation as to total amount provided in this section, may make an additional loan or loans to such district, political subdivision, company, or association for such purpose or purposes."

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 25, strike out the word "are" and insert in lieu thereof the word "or."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION OF PURGATOIRE AND APISHAPA RIVERS, COLO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7870, to provide a preliminary examination of the Purgatoire (Picketwire) and Apishapa Rivers, in the State of Colorado, with a view to the control of their floods and the conservation of their waters.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary examination to be made of the Purgatoire (Picketwire) River, west of the city of Trinidad, Colo., and the Apishapa River, west of the town of Aguilar, all in the county of Las Animas, in the State of Colorado, with a view to the control of the floods and the conservation of the waters of said rivers, in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for control of floods of the Mississippi River, and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes", approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

IMPORT DUTY ON COFFEE IMPORTED INTO PUERTO RICO

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 290, to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the ratification of Joint Resolution No. 59 of the Legislature of Puerto Rico, approved by the Governor May 5, 1930, imposing an import duty on coffee imported into Puerto Rico", approved June 18, 1934.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the House joint resolution as follows:

Whereas in enacting the act approved June 18, 1934, ratifying the taxes and duties imposed by Joint Resolution No. 59 enacted by the Legislature of Puerto Rico, and approved by the Governor of Puerto Rico May 5, 1930, the Congress understood and intended in ratifying such Joint Resolution No. 59 of the Legislature of Puerto Rico that the "import duty" thereby and by subsequent acts of the Legislature of Puerto Rico "levied on all coffee imported into Puerto Rico" included and was intended to be levied upon all coffee brought into Puerto Rico whether from a foreign country or from any State, Territory, district, or possession of the United States, or other place subject to its jurisdiction: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the act of Congress entitled "An act providing for the ratification of Joint Resolution No. 59 of the Legislature of Puerto Rico, approved by the Governor May 5, 1930, imposing an import duty on coffee imported into Puerto Rico", approved June 18, 1934, be, and it is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That the taxes and duties imposed by the Legislature of Puerto Rico by Joint Resolution No. 59 approved by the Governor of Puerto Rico May 5, 1930, and by Act No. 77 approved by the Governor of Puerto Rico May 5, 1931, as amended by Act No. 7 approved by the Governor April 9, 1934, including therein such taxes and duties on coffee heretofore or hereafter brought into Puerto Rico from any State or Territory or district or possession of the United States, or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, are legalized and ratified, and the collection of all such taxes and duties made under or by authority of either of said acts of the Puerto Rican Legislature, including such taxes and duties on coffee heretofore or hereafter brought into Puerto Rico from any State, Territory, district, or possession of the United States, or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, is legalized, ratified, and confirmed as fully to all intents and purposes as if the same had, by prior act of Congress, been specifically authorized and directed."

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING CRIMINAL CODE

The Clerk called the next business, Senate Joint Resolution 42, to amend section 289 of the Criminal Code.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 289 of the Criminal Code (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 468) be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 289. Whoever, within the territorial limits of any State, organized Territory, or district, but within or upon any of the places now existing or hereafter reserved or acquired, described in section 272 of the Criminal Code (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 451), shall do or omit the doing of any act or thing which is not made penal by any laws of Congress, but which if committed or omitted within the jurisdiction of the State, Territory, or district in which such place is situated, by the laws thereof in force on April 1, 1935, and remaining in force at the time of the doing or omitting the doing of such act or thing, would be penal, shall be deemed guilty of a like offense and be subject to a like punishment."

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SALE OF PROPERTY UNDER UNITED STATES COURTS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2688, to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the manner in which property shall be sold under orders and decrees of any United States courts", approved March 3, 1893, as amended.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 1, 2, and 3 of the act entitled "An act to regulate the manner in which property shall be sold under orders and decrees of any United States courts", approved March 3, 1893 (ch. 225, 27 Stat. 751, as amended; U. S. C., title 28, secs. 847, 848, and 849), be, and they hereby are, amended by inserting before the period at the end of each of said sections 1, 2, and 3 the following: "or by receivers or conservators of banks, appointed by the Comptroller of the Currency."

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SALE OF FEDERAL BUILDING, DALLAS, TEX.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7926, to repeal the limitation on the sale price of the Federal building at Maine and Ervay Streets, Dallas, Tex.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a similar Senate bill (S. 2780) be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso in the fifteenth paragraph under the caption "Projects outside the District of Columbia under section 5, Public Buildings Act approved May 25, 1926", of title 1 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, and for other purposes", approved March 5, 1928, relating to the minimum price for which the Federal building and site at Main and Ervay Streets, Dallas, Tex., may be sold, is hereby repealed.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 7926) was laid on the table.

MEDITERRANEAN FRUIT FLY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1419, to provide for an investigation and report of losses resulting from the campaign for the eradication of the Mediterranean fruit fly by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I object. This is the same bill we had up last year. We had it up several times. For this reason I think I shall have to object.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I withhold my objection for the time being to permit the gentleman to make a statement.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. As the report shows, this bill calls for an investigation only and cannot possibly be construed as imposing any legal or moral obligation on the Government of the United States. I call the gentleman's attention further to the fact that the authorization has been reduced from $25,000 to $10,000. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, at the last session of Congress the Senate passed this bill. We went before the Committee on Agriculture and had full and complete hearings. The Committee on Agriculture reported the bill out.

At this session the Senate again passed this bill, and we went before the Committee on Agriculture at this session. Again we had full and complete hearings, and the committee reported the bill out.

This bill does not bind the Government morally or legally for one dime. It asks only for the authorization of $10,000 to make an investigation. It will not bind the Government legally, and I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House of the principle involved. I think the Members should know about this. My objection is not captious. Some years ago we spent several million dollars trying to find out whether there was the pest known as the "Mediterranean fruit fly" in Florida, but we never found a single one. Our good friend, the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee at that time, the late Mr. Will Wood, went down there and showed up what an unreasonable campaign was being carried on down there.

Here is what this bill seeks to do, and I want the membership to know about it. It seeks to have the United States Government put up the money to make an investigation to determine how many people down in Florida have good claims to bring forward against the Government sometime in the future. In other words, you are paying a man to hire a lawyer to work up a case against you.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. SEARS. I know the gentleman wants to be fair.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. SEARS. We have the testimony; we simply want to impound it. Now, it is true the Government went down there and destroyed $10,000,000 worth of our property. We did not complain for we thought it was to help not only Florida but the whole country. We were helpless. Take my own case, the Government destroyed five acres of my tomatoes, pulled them up and threw them over the fence and could not find a single fly and then sent back a report that the tomato was not a host of the fruit fly. I gathered up my tomato plants and tried to put them back, but tomatoes will not grow in Florida after they have been once pulled out, no matter how hard we try to make them grow. Now, the Government should be fair in cases like that. I am not seeking any relief for myself.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Those people had their remedy; they should have prosecuted their cases in the Court of Claims.

Mr. SEARS. They could not prosecute their cases in the Court of Claims unless the Government allowed them to go there.

We are asking to have this bill passed. It does not bind the Government for one nickel, morally or legally.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It does bind the Government to the extent of $10,000.

Mr. SEARS. But that is only for an investigation. The Government caused a vast amount of property to be destroyed and there should be an investigation.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. You have already made a check.

Mr. SEARS. It was made with the National Guard over us.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That eradication campaign was 5 or 6 years ago.

Mr. SEARS. As I say, we are only asking for an investigation.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. I wish to state to the gentleman from Ohio that when this matter came before the Committee on Agriculture, the members of the Committee were almost unanimously in opposition to it. When these gentlemen from Florida presented their case the membership were unanimously in favor of expending $10,000 to give them an opportunity to impound their evidence.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection and ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice to the next call of the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

SPANISH WAR MEMORIAL PARK

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7085, to provide for the creation of a memorial park at Tampa, in the State of Florida, to be known as the "Spanish War Memorial Park", and for other purposes.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

PENSIONS TO CERTAIN WAR VETERANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6995, granting pensions to veterans of the Spanish-American War, including the Boxer Rebellion and the Philippine Insurrection, their widows and dependents, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all laws in effect on March 19, 1933, granting pensions to veterans of the Spanish-American War, including the Boxer Rebellion and the Philippine Insurrection, their widows and dependents, are hereby reenacted into law and such laws shall be effective from and after the date of the approval of this act.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with or inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, the bill just passed by the House of Representatives, H. R. 6995, by Mr. SMITH of Washington, is one of the most meritorious bills that has received favorable action in this session of Congress. The bill provides that all laws in effect on March 19, 1933, granting pensions to veterans of the Spanish-American War, including the Boxer Rebellion and the Philippine Insurrection, their widows and dependents, are hereby reenacted into law, and such laws shall be effective from and after the date of the approval of this act.

This bill reenacts into law the act of June 2, 1930. It extends benefits to persons who served in the Spanish-American War, including the Boxer Rebellion and the Philippine Insurrection, between April 21, 1898, and July 4, 1902, who have not been able to prove service connection for their disabilities, as well as their widows and dependents. The average monthly payment being received by such veterans on June 30, 1934, was $32.17. This bill increases that amount to an average monthly pension award of $42.85. The average age of such veterans is 61 years and 8 months. Widows will receive a monthly increase of $7.50. The bill does not affect any pension award for service-connected disabilities. It repeals that part of the so-called "Economy Act" dealing with Spanish War veterans whose disabilities are nonservice connected.

As a member of the Committee on Pensions it was my privilege to vote for the favorable report of this bill by the committee. Following the favorable report by the committee, the Committee on Rules was requested to grant a rule for the consideration of the bill in the regular manner. The requested rule was not granted. The procedure of the House today now makes it needless to apply for a rule. The bill has now passed the House and only needs favorable action by the Senate and the signature of the President of the United States to cause it to be enacted into law. I am indeed happy to have been instrumental in its support and in its passage by the House of Representatives on June 15, 1935

On this same day I dispatched a telegram to Mr. Albert L. Daniels, commander of Disabled American Veterans of Ohio, regretting my inability to accept the invitation of the convention to meet with them and address them, giving as my reason the importance of the legislation that was to be considered in the House today and Monday. Since the passage of this bill, I now feel that my reasons for not accepting the invitation were sound and fully justified. Accordingly, I am inserting in the RECORD at this point the letter received from Commander Daniels, together with my telegraphic reply to same.

DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS OF THE WORLD WAR,
DEPARTMENT OF OHIO,
Cincinnati, Ohio, May 13, 1935.

Hon. CHARLES V. TRUAX,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. TRUAX: The fourteenth annual department convention of our congressionally chartered organization will be held in Portsmouth, Ohio, on June 14, 15, and 16, the first business session opening at 10 Saturday forenoon, June 15, followed by a banquet that evening at 6:30. The convention sessions and banquet will be held in Radioland ballroom, which is being operated by radio station WPAY.

You are cordially invited to be in attendance at the business sessions of our convention and at our convention banquet, at which time we should appreciate an opportunity to listen to a message from you.

We believe that your attendance at this jubilee convention would prove interesting to you, but we are particularly anxious to have your assurance that you will at least find it possible to be with us and to address us at our convention banquet, or at some time during the business sessions of our convention, Saturday or Sunday, whichever is more convenient for you.

Kindly advise us the probable time you will arrive in order that we may arrange our schedule.

Very sincerely,

ALBERT L. DANIELS,
Department Commander.

Official:

BRIAN J. THORNTON,
Department Adjutant.

JUNE 15, 1935.

ALBERT L. DANIELS,
Department Commander, Disabled American Veterans, Portsmouth, Ohio:

Thanks sincerely for invitation to attend and address your convention. Important sessions today and Monday in the House of Representatives prevent my leaving. Kindly assure your comrades that I am with you in spirit if not in person, and as you fought for your country in its hour of need, I am fighting for you in your hour of need until every injustice, including bonus, is fully corrected and paid.

CHARLES V. TRUAX,
Congressman at Large.

CONVEYANCE OF GOVERNMENT LAND TO THE BOROUGH OF STROUDSBURG, PA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5920, to authorize the conveyance of certain Government land to the borough of Stroudsburg, Monroe County, Pa., for street purposes and as a part of the approach to the Stroudsburg viaduct on State Highway Route No. 498.

There being no objection the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, empowered and authorized to convey, by the usual quit-claim deed, to the borough of Stroudsburg, Monroe County, Pa., for street purposes and as a part of the approach to the Stroudsburg viaduct on State Highway Route No. 498 and no other, that portion of the post-office site in said borough, bounded and described as follows, to wit: Beginning at the southwest corner of the intersection of Seventh and Ann Streets, in the borough of Stroudsburg, said corner being opposite station 1224 plus 97 and 16 feet from the center line of the said Seventh Street; thence along the west side of said Seventh Street, south 20°36′ east 124.44 feet to a point; thence by land of United States Government, of which this parcel is a part along a curved line to the right having a radius of 186.6 feet, a distance of 57.54 feet and subtended by a chord north 29°26′ west 57.31 feet to a point on tangent; thence by the same, north 20°36′ west, 67.96 feet to a point on the south line of Ann Street; thence along the same, north 70°24′ east 8.8 feet to the beginning, containing twenty-one one thousandths acre: Provided, That the land conveyed shall be used for street purposes and as a part of the approach to the Stroudsburg viaduct on State Highway Route No. 498 and no other, to be cared for and maintained as are other public streets in said borough; and in the event that the premises shall cease to be so used as herein stated, the right, title, and interest in the land herein authorized to be conveyed shall revert to the United States, and the deed or instrument of conveyance shall recite such limitation and reversionary right.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 3, strike out the figures "1224" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "1244."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HIGHWAY BRIDGE ACROSS SABINE RIVER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 6988, authorizing the State of Louisiana and the State of Texas to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Sabine River at or near a point where Louisiana Highway No. 21 meets Texas Highway No. 45.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask if this is a free bridge?

Mr. McFARLANE. It is.

Mr. TRUAX. It is not a toll bridge?

Mr. McFARLANE. No. We believe in treating people right down in Texas.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, the State of Louisiana and the State of Texas be, and are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Sabine River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near a point where Louisiana Highway No. 21 meets Texas Highway No. 45, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the State of Louisiana and the State of Texas all rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 5, strike out the words "be, and are hereby" and insert in lieu thereof the words "be and are hereby."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS SABINE RIVER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7044, authorizing the State of Louisiana and the State of Texas to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Sabine River at or near a point where Louisiana Highway No. 6 in Sabine Parish, La., meets Texas Highway No. 21 in Sabine County, Tex.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, the State of Louisiana and the State of Texas be, and are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Sabine River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near a point where Louisiana Highway No. 6 in Sabine Parish, La., meets Texas Highway No. 21 in Sabine County, Tex., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the State of Louisiana and the State of Texas all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Amend the title so as to read:

A bill authorizing the State of Louisiana and the State of Texas to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Sabine River at or near a point where Louisiana Highway No. 6 in Sabine Parish, La., meets Texas Highway No. 21 in Sabine County, Tex."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TOLL BRIDGE ACROSS DELAWARE RIVER AT EASTON, PA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 7346, authorizing the Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission of the State of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Delaware River at a point between Easton, Pa., and Phillipsburg, N. J.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman withhold his request a moment?

Mr. COSTELLO. Yes.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, may I say that during the Seventy-third Session the authority to construct this bridge was given by the Congress. Subsequently the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania authorized a commission to construct, maintain, and repair all of the bridges along the Delaware River. This very authority has been given, but there is some question about the validity of the bonds that will be issued in payment for the bridge. In order to meet this question before it arises, it has been deemed advisable to change the name and give the authorization to the commission rather than to the States, as was the case in the act that passed during the Seventy-third Session. I trust that the gentleman will not insist upon his request.

Mr. COSTELLO. What tolls are being charged for going across the bridge?

Mr. WALTER. Five cents for local traffic and up to 50 cents on trucks.

Mr. COSTELLO. Is there a free bridge located in the vicinity of this bridge?

Mr. WALTER. Yes; about two blocks away.

Mr. COSTELLO. Is there any necessity then for this legislation covering a toll bridge?

Mr. WALTER. It is very badly needed. There is a convergence at the site of the proposed bridge of four highways.

Mr. COSTELLO. It does not seem to me to be necessary to have a toll bridge right alongside of a free bridge.

Mr. WALTER. The idea is to eliminate a grade crossing at one end of the present structure and also to relieve the traffic on the William Penn Highway, all of which goes through the city of Easton and converges at the free bridge.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

I may say that in my judgment toll bridges today are a relic of the oxcart age. They are abominations and there is no justifiable reason for toll bridges being authorized today. There was some justification 40 years ago. This bill authorizes the exaction of tolls for 40 years to come. During the life of a generation they must pay tolls to some corporations.

Mr. McLEAN. The gentleman is laboring under a misapprehension.

Mr. TRUAX. In the State of Ohio we pay 4 cents a gallon gasoline tax, and the gasoline tax collected in Ohio and in every State of the Union ought to build all the bridges we need in this country from now on. There should be no toll bridges. I do not care whether they are sponsored by States, corporations, or municipalities. The use of bridges should be free to the traveling public.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does not the gentleman know that the tolls exacted from the people are one of the juiciest plums that the holders of these bonds have?

Mr. TRUAX. Of course, I know that. Webster defines the word "toll" as "a tax paid for some liberty or privilege, as passing over a road or bridge." This definition has been in the dictionary for decades, yet they come in here and want us to authorize the construction of additional new toll bridges so that the generation that lives today and the generation to come will have to pay toll, will have to pay a tribute and a tax to these fellows who own the bridges. I am opposed to that.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. There is no real necessity to go over this toll bridge. There is a free bridge within a couple of blocks of this one.

Mr. TRUAX. Why authorize this one?

Mr. WALTER. Because it is badly needed to relieve a situation that has been bad there for the last 15 years.

Mr. TRUAX. Is it badly needed in order to relieve the stockholders?

Mr. WALTER. I may say that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in all probability will take the bonds that are issued by the two States.

Mr. TRUAX. I may say to the gentleman that in my judgment——

Mr. WALTER. I do not know of any public improvement that we have had under consideration during this Congress that is more worth while than this proposed bridge, not only from the standpoint of necessity, but also because it will provide employment for many, many people in this community.

Mr. TRUAX. All right; make it a free bridge and let the people who travel the public highways use it free. Every time I go back to Ohio, which is not often, I have to pay toll on bridges that have stood there for 40 or 50 years. They ought to be free. These toll bridges ought to be abolished and we should pay for the construction of bridges through the gasoline tax that we all pay.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield.

Mr. McLEAN. The gentleman from Ohio is speaking without adequate knowledge——

Mr. TRUAX. No; he is not. I have full knowledge.

Mr. McLEAN. Without adequate knowledge of the situation which exists in and around the metropolitan district. The New York Port Authority, for example, and other similar authorities are joint commissions of adjoining States, New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania, organized to construct highways, tunnels, and bridges of great benefit to the people of the entire country and they have been built under a program whereby the users of these facilities pay the bills and they do not become a burden upon the tax-paying public.

Mr. TRUAX. And they pay a nice profit.

Mr. McLEAN. The bonds are the bonds of the State of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and New York, as the case may be, and when the receipts from the tolls charged are sufficient to pay the bonds, it is anticipated that the facilities will be turned over for the free use of the people of the country.

Mr. TRUAX. Let me ask the gentleman this question. Before they will be turned over for the free use of the people, they have to pay toll and pay tribute for 40 years, because that is what is stated right in the bill. The bill states that they shall include a reasonable interest charge and financial costs and that it shall be amortized in not to exceed 40 years from the completion thereof. I say make them free now and turn them over to the public.

Mr. McLEAN. The language is "not to exceed 40 years", and when the receipts from these facilities are sufficient to liquidate the bonds, they will be liquidated and the facilities turned over to the public. This is pursuant to State policy adopted a few years ago by the States of Pennsylvania, New York, and New Jersey, which has greatly redounded to the benefit of the people of the whole country, one of the most progressive steps that was ever taken in the handling of traffic or the granting of traffic facilities to automobiles on the public highways, and it is an injustice and an improper thing for a Member of the Congress to reflect upon the States involved.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I refuse to yield further. I may say that the statements the gentleman has made are no doubt true, but my contention is we should make them free and let the Government pay for them, either Federal, State, municipal, or county. We are spending millions of dollars every year for public improvements and for the improvement of the public highways. We ought to continue this work, but we should not set up a corporation of private ownership to make profits out of the travel of the people.

Mr. WALTER. This is not a private corporation. This commission was set up by the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania by acts of the legislatures of the two States, and I may say that 90 percent of the people in the community affected are enthusiastically urging the construction of the toll bridge.

Mr. TRUAX. That does not make it right, simply because two State legislatures ratified it.

Mr. WALTER. They did not ratify it, they set up this commission. This is not a private corporation, and I would call the gentleman's attention to the fact that since this commission was created they have freed every bridge along the Delaware River except the one from Camden to Philadelphia, and that bridge is being maintained and operated under the same kind of authority.

Mr. TRUAX. They ought to free them all and not wait for 40 years to free this particular one.

Mr. WALTER. May I also call the gentleman's attention to line 13, page 3, of the bill—

> After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls.

So the moment there is enough money collected from these tolls the bridge will become public property and there will not be one penny of profit made by anybody.

Mr. TRUAX. But the bill gives them 40 years, and my experience has been that the time is never less than the time authorized.

Mr. WALTER. The language is "not to exceed 40 years." In the opinion of the engineers and the experts, this bridge will be free in 18 years.

Mr. TRUAX. I would suggest to the gentleman that they borrow the money now and make it a free bridge. That can be done.

Mr. WALTER. That is exactly what we are doing.

Mr. TRUAX. Can you not go to the R. F. C. or some other Government agency and get the money?

Mr. WALTER. That is what we are seeking to accomplish; and, if the gentleman does not interfere, that is what we will accomplish.

Mr. McLEAN. This is one of the self-liquidating projects the Government has been talking about.

Mr. WALTER. This is one of the self-liquidating projects that the gentleman has been seeking to provide, and that the gentleman provided for when he voted for the big appropriation.

Mr. TRUAX. I did not vote for any toll bridge.

Mr. SABATH. I think the gentleman is sincere and honest, but he should realize the distinction between a privately owned bridge and a bridge that is demanded and urged and requested by two States, namely, the State of New Jersey and the State of Pennsylvania. No one will make any profit and the people of both of the States who are going to use the bridge are not only interested but pleading for the construction of this bridge.

Mr. TRUAX. All right; but, I say, make it a free bridge now and not wait for 40 years.

Mr. SABATH. They need the bridge now.

Mr. WALTER. I should like to have the gentleman suggest a way to do that.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman will be pleased to do that, provided the gentleman will agree to the unanimous-consent request to pass this bill over without prejudice for further information and study.

Mr. WALTER. I do not think that is necessary at this time.

Mr. TRUAX. I think it is necessary.

Mr. WALTER. I may say to the gentleman that the plans for this bridge have been examined by the public works engineers of the States of New Jersey and Pennsylvania, as well as the Federal engineers, and they are now ready to commence work.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE POTOMAC RIVER BETWEEN OLD TOWN, MD., AND GREEN SPRING, W. VA.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7395) authorizing M. R. Carpenter, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Potomac River between Old Town, Md., and Green Spring, W. Va.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MONONGAHELA RIVER

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 7591) granting the consent of Congress to the cities of Donora and Monessen, Pa., municipal corporations, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Monongahela River between the two cities.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, is it the intention of the gentleman to object to all of these bills authorizing the construction of bridges?

Mr. TRUAX. To the construction of all toll bridges.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then I question whether there is any further use in going on with the Consent Calendar.

Mr. TRUAX. Except that we are obtaining further information about the bridges owned by the States.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have understood that the leadership is not to go any farther than Calendar No. 253. If that is the intention there is no use in calling any more bills, because that is the last bridge bill.

Mr. TRUAX. I renew my request that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, I suggest that the gentleman from Ohio make a blanket request that all bills up to and including Calendar No. 253 be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. TRUAX. I will say that the Chair has ruled that that cannot be done on the Consent Calendar or the Private Calendar.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not think the Chair has ruled that way if you call the bills by number.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a unanimous consent request that bills, Calendar Nos. 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, and 253, be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CHAPMAN. I object to the unanimous-consent request to include them en bloc.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 7982. An act to amend the Migratory Bird Hunting Stamp Act of March 16, 1934, and certain other acts relating to game and other wildlife, administered by the Department of Agriculture, and for other purposes.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on the following dates present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

On June 14, 1935:

H. R. 2756. An act authorizing the Tlingit and Haida Indians of Alaska to bring suit in the United States Court of Claims, and conferring jurisdiction upon said court to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment upon any and all claims which said Indians may have, or claim to have, against the United States, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6836. An act to provide for the printing and distribution of Government publications to The National Archives.

On June 15, 1935:

H. R. 7982. An act to amend the Migratory Bird Hunting Stamp Act of March 16, 1934, and certain other acts relating to game and other wildlife, administered by the Department of Agriculture, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until Monday, June 17, 1935, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON THE POST OFFICE AND POST ROADS

(Monday, June 17, 10 a. m.)

Subcommittee will hold hearings on bill (H. R. 2793) pertaining to appointment of postmasters.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. MONTET: Committee on Military Affairs. S. 2265. An act extending the benefits of the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act of May 24, 1928, to provisional officers of the Regular Establishment who served during the World War; without amendment (Rept. No. 1234). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLAND: Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. S. 2556. An act to amend and supplement the steering rules respecting orders to helmsmen on all vessels navigating waters of the United States, and on all vessels of the United States navigating any waters or seas, in section 1 of the act of August 19, 1890, section 1 of the act of June 7, 1897, section 1 of the act of February 8, 1895, and section 1 of the act of February 19, 1895; without amendment (Rept. No. 1237). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. BLAND: Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. S. 2743. An act to authorize the erection of a suitable memorial to Maj. Gen. George W. Goethals within the Canal Zone; with amendment (Rept. No. 1238). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN: Committee on the Judiciary. H. R. 8214. A bill to incorporate the American National Theater and Academy; without amendment (Rept. No. 1240). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. JONES: Committee on Agriculture. H. R. 8492. A bill to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes; with amendment (Rept. No. 1241). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. WOOD: Committee on War Claims. H. R. 3790. A bill for the relief of Walter W. Johnston; without amendment (Rept. No. 1235). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. WOOD: Committee on War Claims. S. 2520. An act for the relief of T. D. Randall & Co.; without amendment (Rept. No. 1236). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. DORSEY: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 2308. A bill for the relief of Fay A. Cushman; without amendment (Rept. No. 1239). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BURDICK: A bill (H. R. 8511) to provide funds for cooperation with Cannon Ball School District, Sioux County, N. Dak., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8512) to provide funds for cooperation with Fort Yates School District, Sioux County, N. Dak., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8513) to provide funds for cooperation with Trenton School District, Williams County, N. Dak., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8514) to provide funds for cooperation with White Bird School District, Sioux County, N. Dak., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8515) to provide funds for cooperation with Sanish School District No. 1, Mountrail County, N. Dak., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8516) to provide funds for cooperation with Porcupine School District, Sioux County, N. Dak., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. COLDEN: A bill (H. R. 8517) to provide for the establishment of a home for retired merchant seamen; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 8518) to regulate advertising of imported articles; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MILLER: A bill (H. R. 8519) requiring contracts for the construction, alteration, and repair of any public building or public work of the United States to be accompanied by a performance bond protecting the United States and by an additional bond for the protection of persons furnishing material and labor for the construction, alteration, or repair of said public buildings or public works; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MEAD: Resolution (H. Res. 261) for the investigation of the operating methods of air mail contractors from the standpoint of safety; to the Committee on Rules.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Florida, supporting H. R. 3416; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ARNOLD: A bill (H. R. 8520) for the relief of Mary Payne; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. SCOTT: A bill (H. R. 8521) for the relief of Elsie O'Brine; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

8858. By Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota: Petition of Joe Estling, president, of Greenbush, and Daniel Danielson, secretary, of Malung, Minn., of the Roseau County Farm Holiday Association, in behalf of their members, all praying for passage into law of House bill 6977, the flax bill amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act; to the Committee on Agriculture.

8859. By Mr. FOCHT: Petition of William D. Jones, of Middleburg, Snyder County, a part of the Eighteenth Pennsylvania Congressional District, and numerous other residents of Snyder County in support of House bill 2827, the workers' unemployment, old-age, and social insurance bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

8860. By Mr. GOODWIN: Petition of the Maritime Association of the Port of New York, New York, N. Y., opposing proposed legislation to transfer the supervision of harbor and river work from the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army to another Government department; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

8861. By Mr. PFEIFER: Petition of the American Manufacturing Co., Brooklyn, N. Y., concerning the Sumner bill (H. R. 7940) prohibiting transportation of prison goods into the United States where the sale of prison goods is prohibited; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

8862. Also, petition of Edward White, president New York Photo Engravers' Union, No. 1, concerning the Wagner-Connery bill; to the Committee on Labor.

8863. Also, petition of Mailers' Union, No. 6, International Typographical Union, New York City, concerning the Wagner labor-disputes bill; to the Committee on Labor.

8864. Also, petition of Woman Investors in America, Inc., New York City, concerning the Rayburn-Wheeler public-utility bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

8865. By Mr. RUDD: Petition of New York Photo Engravers' Union, No. 1, New York City, concerning the Wagner-Connery labor-disputes bill; to the Committee on Labor.

8866. Also, petition of Mailers' Union, No. 6, New York City, concerning the Wagner labor-disputes bill; to the Committee on Labor.

8867. By Mr. TRUAX: Petition of the International Institute of the Young Women's Christian Association, Toledo, Ohio, by their executive secretary, Mrs. Edward J. Lorenz, urging support of the Kerr bill (H. R. 8163), which corrects the injustices and inhumanities of the present law regarding deportation of aliens; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

8868. Also, petition of Hard Rubber Workers' Local Union, No. 18395, Akron, Ohio, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, by their financial secretary, J. D. Coberly, urging support of the Wagner-Connery labor-disputes bill; to the Committee on Labor.

8869. Also, petition of the National Association of Letter Carriers, John T. Mugavin Branch, No. 43, Cincinnati, Ohio, by their secretary, Albert A. Seifert, urging support of House bills 5583 and 8002, both beneficial to the postal employee; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

8870. Also, petition of the International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths, Drop Forgers, and Helpers, Cleveland, Ohio, by their secretary, W. T. Hill, urging support of the Wagner labor-disputes bill, the Black 30-hour-week bill, and Guffey coal-regulation bill; to the Committee on Labor.

SENATE

MONDAY, JUNE 17, 1935

(Legislative day of Monday, May 13, 1935)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Saturday, June 15, 1935, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. LEWIS. I note the absence of a quorum, and ask for a roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Coolidge	Logan	Reynolds
Ashurst	Copeland	Lonergan	Robinson
Austin	Costigan	Long	Russell
Bachman	Davis	McAdoo	Schall
Bailey	Dickinson	McCarran	Schwellenbach
Bankhead	Donahey	McGill	Sheppard
Barkley	Duffy	McKellar	Shipstead
Bilbo	Fletcher	McNary	Smith
Black	Frazier	Maloney	Steiwer
Bone	George	Metcalf	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Gerry	Minton	Townsend
Brown	Gibson	Moore	Trammell
Bulkley	Guffey	Murphy	Truman
Bulow	Hale	Murray	Tydings
Burke	Harrison	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrd	Hastings	Norbeck	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Hatch	Norris	Wagner
Capper	Hayden	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Caraway	Johnson	Overton	Wheeler
Chavez	King	Pittman	White
Clark	La Follette	Pope
Connally	Lewis	Radcliffe

Mr. LEWIS. Let me announce that my colleague, the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] are necessarily detained from the Senate, and that the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] is absent on important public business.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] on account of illness, and I desire that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] are necessarily absent from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills and joint resolution of the Senate:

S. 380. An act to reserve 80 acres on the public domain for the use and benefit of the Kanosh Band of Indians in the State of Utah;

S. 1066. An act to extend the provisions of section 2 of the act of February 28, 1925, authorizing reservations of timber, minerals, or easements to exchanges of lands in the State of New Mexico, under the act of February 14, 1923, and the act of February 7, 1929;

S. 1831. An act transferring certain national forest lands to the Zuni Indian Reservation, N. Mex.;

S. 2131. An act to provide for the establishment of the Big Bend National Park in the State of Texas, and for other purposes;

S. 2185. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to accept the cession by the State of Oregon of exclusive jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Crater Lake National Park, and for other purposes";

S. 2278. An act authorizing the construction of buildings for the United States representative in the Philippine Islands;

S. 2508. An act to authorize the naturalization of certain resident alien World War veterans;

S. 2688. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the manner in which property shall be sold under orders and decrees of any United States courts", approved March 3, 1893, as amended;

S. 2780. An act to repeal the limitation on the sale price of the Federal building at Main and Ervay Streets, Dallas, Tex.; and

S. J. Res. 42. Joint resolution to amend section 289 of the Criminal Code.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 3061. An act to authorize the adjustment of the boundaries of the Chelan National Forest in the State of Washington;

H. R. 3430. An act to amend the act approved May 14, 1930, entitled "An act to reorganize the administration of Federal prisons; to authorize the Attorney General to contract for the care of United States prisoners; to establish Federal jails; and for other purposes";

H. R. 5058. An act to convey certain lands to Clackamas County, Oreg., for public-park purposes;

H. R. 5360. An act providing for punishment for the crime of robbing or attempting to rob custodians of Government moneys or property;

H. R. 5920. An act to authorize the conveyance of certain Government land to the borough of Stroudsburg, Monroe County, Pa., for street purposes and as a part of the approach to the Stroudsburg viaduct on State Highway Route No. 498;

H. R. 6776. An act to amend section 36 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended;

H. R. 6910. An act to amend section 4 of the act of May 31, 1933, enacted to safeguard the interests and welfare of Indians of the Taos Pueblo, N. Mex., in certain lands within the Carson National Forest;

H. R. 6983. An act to provide for the transfer of certain land in the city of Anderson, S. C., to such city;

H. R. 6988. An act authorizing the State of Louisiana and the State of Texas to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Sabine River at or near a point where Louisiana Highway No. 21 meets Texas Highway No. 45;

H. R. 6995. An act granting pensions to veterans of the Spanish-American War, including the Boxer Rebellion and the Philippine Insurrection, their widows and dependents, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7044. An act authorizing the State of Louisiana and the State of Texas to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Sabine River at or near a point where Louisiana Highway No. 6 in Sabine Parish, La., meets Texas Highway No. 21 in Sabine County, Tex.;

H. R. 7652. An act to authorize the furnishing of steam from the central heating plant to the Federal Reserve Board, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7870. An act to provide a preliminary examination of the Purgatoire (Picketwire) and Apishapa Rivers, in the State of Colorado, with a view to the control of their floods and the conservation of their waters;

H. J. Res. 237. Joint resolution for the establishment of a trust fund to be known as the "Oliver Wendell Holmes Memorial Fund";

H. J. Res. 265. Joint resolution pertaining to an appropriate celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the expedition of Hernando De Soto; and

H. J. Res. 290. Joint resolution to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the ratification of Joint Resolution No. 59 of the Legislature of Puerto Rico, approved by the Governor May 5, 1930, imposing an import duty on coffee imported into Puerto Rico", approved June 18, 1934.

REFUNDING OF TAXES TO BUILDING-AND-LOAN ASSOCIATIONS—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 71)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 279, an act to extend the time for the refunding of certain taxes erroneously collected from certain building-and-loan associations.

This bill authorizes the filing of claims for the refund of taxes which were, under the principle laid down by the United States Supreme Court in United States v. Cambridge Building & Loan Co. (278 U. S. 55), erroneously assessed and collected, regardless of the fact that claims for refund thereof were not filed within the prescribed statutory period for filing such claims.

Congress has determined that it is sound policy to include in all the revenue acts statutes of limitations, by the operation of which, after a certain period of time, it becomes impossible for the Government to collect additional taxes or for the taxpayer to obtain a refund of an overpayment of taxes. This bill selects a small class of taxpayers for special treatment by excepting them from this policy. The whole body of Federal taxpayers is thus discriminated against, and a precedent is established, opening the door to relief in all cases in which the statute operates to the prejudice of a particular taxpayer, while leaving the door closed to the Government in those cases in which the statute operates to the disadvantage of the Government.

I know of no circumstances which would justify the exception made by S. 279 to the long-continued policy of Congress, and do not believe that the field of special legislation should be opened to relieve special classes of taxpayers from the consequences of their failure to file claims within the period fixed by law.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 14, 1935.

JURISDICTION OF FISH AND GAME IN INDIAN RESERVATIONS IN NEW YORK—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 70)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Senate:

I return without my approval the act, Senate 1942, "An act to repeal the act entitled 'An act to grant to the State of New York and the Seneca Nation of Indians jurisdiction over the taking of fish and game within the Allegany, Cattaraugus, and Oil Spring Indian Reservations', approved January 5, 1927."

The status of game and fish protection by law in the three Indian reservations mentioned in this act prior to the act of January 5, 1927, for the repeal of which this act has been passed, was somewhat chaotic, for the reason that, while theoretically the conservation laws of the State of New York applied to hunting and fishing in the reservations such laws were unenforceable with respect to the tribal Indians hunting therein, the Indians being wards of the National Government and Congress not having authorized the enforcement of the State conservation laws against them. Persons other than Indians hunting and fishing on such reservations were still subject to the New York conservation laws.

Repeal of the act of January 5, 1927, which was intended to set up an orderly and more nearly uniform administration of the conservation laws of New York throughout the State, would restore the chaotic situation to which I have referred.

It is highly desirable in this day of rapid disappearance of our wildlife, particularly the game species, that hunting and fishing throughout the land be restrained within those limits deemed by legislatures and responsible conservation officials essential for the preservation and perpetuation of the Nation's stock of wildlife.

I can perceive no reason why, at this time, tribal Indians in the State of New York should not be subject to the restrictions of the State conservation laws which apply to all other persons hunting or fishing in the same territory, certainly those features of the conservation laws which limit the seasons during which hunting and fishing may be indulged in and the numbers of game and fish that may be taken within fixed periods. It is manifest that numbers of species, especially of game birds, are only temporarily or periodically resident on the Indian reservations, passing therefrom to other portions of the State and in numbers of cases to other portions of the United States. It is, therefore, strictly true to say that the Indians are no more vested with a property interest in this game than are the people of the rest of the State or country.

Furthermore, game produced naturally or artificially in territory adjacent to the reservations inevitably pass back and forth between such territory and the reservations, as to which game it cannot with reason be contended that the Indians should have the privilege of taking it regardless of State law applicable to everybody else. The Indians are fully safeguarded against discriminative State law by the act of January 5, 1927, and by that act enjoy exemption from the hunting-and-fishing license feature of the State conservation law, and, in addition, are vested with the exclusive right to authorize the taking of game and fish within their reservations, and if they permit hunting and fishing, to issue the permits and licenses therefor.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 15, 1935.

Mr. FRAZIER. I move that the veto message of the President be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

ELSIE SEGAR

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2218) for the relief of Elsie Segar, which was, on page 1, line 5, after the word "appropriated", to insert "and in full settlement of all claims against the United States."

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

DINO CARBONELL

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1325) for the relief of Dino Carbonell, which was, on page 1, line 7, to strike out the word "representing" and insert "in full settlement of all claims against the United States for."

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN W. DADY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2333) for the relief of John W. Dady, which was, on page 1, line 10, after the word "work", to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following memorial of the Legislature of the State of Florida, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Senate Memorial 23

To the President and Congress of the United States:

Whereas St. Johns Bluff on the St. Johns River in Duval County, Fla., was selected as a strategic location for fortifications by five different nations of the world; and

Whereas the first battle between white races on North American soil was fought there for the possession of the vast region then known as Florida (1565); and

Whereas there the first colony of Protestants in North America was planted; the first Protestant woman and children landed; and the first child born in that faith; and

Whereas through the centuries following, St. Johns Bluff, the site of old Fort Caroline, continued to be the scene of varied national and international events of great importance, many of which are noted in general histories; and

Whereas this historic site of national and international interest is in every way worthy of possession by the General Government for strategic and historical purposes; and

Whereas there is pending in the Congress of the United States a bill designated as H. R. 3416 and entitled "An act to establish the Fort Caroline National Monument in Duval County, Fla." The purpose of which is to create and designate St. Johns Bluff as "Fort Caroline National Monument", authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to acquire, on behalf of the United States, this area of land comprising approximately 118 acres, situated on the St. Johns River, in Duval County, Fla.: Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of Florida, That the Congress of the United States is hereby memorialized to enact the above entitled bill into law: Be it further

Resolved, That United States Senators FLETCHER and TRAMMELL, and Representatives WILCOX, SEARS, GREEN, PETERSON, and CALDWELL, are hereby urged to use their most vigorous efforts to bring about the saving of this first-known landing place of the white race in the United States for future generations: Therefore be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the State of Florida is hereby directed to transmit a copy of this memorial, under the great seal of State, to the President of the United States, to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of Congress, to the Secretary of the Interior, and each member of the Florida delegation in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Board of Commissioners of the City of Galveston, Tex., favoring the enactment of legislation to establish a naval training station on the 900 acres of Government-owned land on Pelican Spit; to establish an adequate antiaircraft artillery base on the 600 acres, east end of the city of Galveston, given to the Government by the Galveston City Co. and Maco Stewart, and to construct a 200-foot canal from Fort Crockett and Offatt's Bayou westward to San Luis Pass, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate papers in the nature of petitions from several citizens of New York City, N. Y., praying for the enactment of House bill 7688, for the benefit of substitute postal employees who have served the Government from 4 to 14 years, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also laid before the Senate a petition of sundry citizens of New York City, N. Y., praying for an investigation of charges filed by the Women's Committee of Louisiana relative to the qualifications of the Senators from Louisiana (Mr. LONG and Mr. OVERTON), which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. WALSH presented a resolution adopted at a meeting of 32 citizens of the League for Peace Action, of Stoneham, Mass., favoring the enactment of legislation to control private profit in peace time and war time, with no inclusion of conscription, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a paper in the nature of a petition from the Lynn (Mass.) Chamber of Commerce, praying for the enactment of House bill 7022, the so-called "air-defense bill", which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from the directors of the Boston (Mass.) Chamber of Commerce, signed by E. L. Hefron, secretary Committee on Aviation, praying for the enactment of House bill 6511, providing that rates of pay for the carriage of air mail be regulated by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

FEDERAL GASOLINE TAX

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a resolution from the executive committee of the Mid-Continent Oil and Gas Association, urging that the Federal gasoline tax of 1 cent a gallon be not renewed in the tax bill which will come before us in the near future.

This tax, as I have said before on the floor of the Senate, is generally recognized as a discriminatory, unjust, and outrageous tax; it should have been repealed long ago. In fact, it never should have been levied. It invades a field that not only belongs to the States but already also has been more than filled by the States. The various taxing bodies have levied taxes on auto and truck owners that amount to a 25-percent annual tax on their property.

A fairly heavy tax on gasoline, to be used exclusively for highway purposes, is justified. Users of the highways should pay for highway construction and maintenance. But they already are doing so. We have motor-car owners and operators paying more than a billion dollars a year in taxes. This extra Federal gasoline tax is too much, and I hope will not be renewed. I send the resolution to the desk, with the request that it be printed as a part of these remarks.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, KANSAS-OKLAHOMA DIVISION, MID-CONTINENT OIL AND GAS ASSOCIATION, TULSA, OKLA.

To the Finance Committee of the Senate, in the Congress of the United States, Greeting:

Whereas the Congress of the United States has levied an emergency Federal tax of 1 cent per gallon on sales of gasoline, the revenues from which are utilized for general-fund purposes; and

Whereas such Federal gasoline tax constitutes a double assessment on motor-vehicle operators, in view of the fact that the 48 States of the United States had already levied State taxes on sales of gasoline when the said Federal gasoline tax was imposed, and such tax is in fact an invasion of the rights of the States; and

Whereas the use for general-fund purposes of the said revenues derived from such Federal gasoline tax constitutes in effect a usurpation and diversion of funds that should rightfully accrue to the States for road construction and maintenance; and

Whereas the assessment of this tax by the Federal Government is highly detrimental to the interests of the States in that it now tends to make the total gasoline tax in many States prohibitive, and is causing in some States diminished returns; and

Whereas, contrary to the intent and purpose of the gasoline-tax principle as originally recognized by the States and later subscribed to by the Congress of the United States in the Hayden-Cartwright Act of 1934, the Federal gasoline tax also encourages diversion and evasion of gasoline taxes in the States; and

Whereas revenues from the taxation of gasoline sales were intended properly to belong to the States, for the construction and maintenance of roads, and must be restored to them, particularly in view of the necessity for matching future Federal-aid funds, as soon to be provided under the Hayden-Cartwright Act of 1934; and

Whereas for the foregoing reasons, and in view of the fact that the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, the Finance Committee of the Senate, and the Vinson Subcommittee on Double Taxation have each previously recognized the unfairness of the Federal gasoline tax, and have stated that it ought to be eliminated; and

Whereas we believe that the said tax should be allowed to expire at the expiration of the present fiscal year, on June 30, 1935, and the taxation of gasoline hereafter left to the States for their exclusive use as a means of providing funds for highways: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Kansas-Oklahoma Division of the Mid-Continent Oil and Gas Association in special meeting assembled, in the city of Tulsa, Okla., on June 12, in this, the year 1935, That the above committees and both Houses of Congress be, and hereby are, memorialized on behalf of the members of this organization to allow the Federal gasoline tax to expire at the close of the present fiscal year, June 30, 1935, in accordance with the declared intent at the time it was passed; that it be not levied again in any way whatsoever, and that the Federal Government permanently withdraw from the field of gasoline taxation and leave to the States exclusively the power and right to tax gasoline sales in the future; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, to be laid before the members of the committee, and to the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Finance, to be laid before the members of that committee, and likewise to both Senators from this State and the Members of the House of Representatives from this district and State, and such other Congressmen as may be necessary, urging them to use their utmost endeavors to carry out our desires as expressed in the letter and spirit of this resolution, and thus afford to our members and all those who operate motor vehicles or are consumers of gasoline, commercially or privately, the greatly needed relief which they demand from an excessive burden of discriminatory taxation, due largely to the combined high tax on gasoline in State and Nation.

CLAREL B. MAPES,
Secretary Kansas-Oklahoma Division,
Mid-Continent Oil and Gas Association.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. COPELAND, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6732) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 893) thereon.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 427) authorizing the reimbursement of Edward B. Wheeler and the State Investment Co. for the loss of certain lands in the Mora Grant, New Mexico, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 894) thereon.

Mr. MINTON, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 2496) to amend the Railway Labor Act, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 895) thereon.

Mr. McADOO, from the Committee on Patents, to which was referred the bill (S. 3047) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyright", approved March 4, 1909, as amended, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 896) thereon.

Mr. DUFFY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1103) for the relief of William K. Beldin, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 897) thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on the 14th instant that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions:

S. 410. An act to provide fees to be charged by the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

S. 2100. An act to amend an act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia", approved March 3, 1901, as amended, by adding three new sections, to be numbered 802 (a), 802 (b), and 802 (c), respectively;

S. J. Res. 112. Joint resolution extending the effective period of the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act, 1933; and

S. J. Res. 113. Joint resolution to extend until April 1, 1936, certain provisions of title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, and for other purposes.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HARRISON:

A bill (S. 3065) granting a pension to Nannie M. Buckley; and

A bill (S. 3066) granting a pension to Cornelia M. Campbell; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BLACK:

A bill (S. 3067) for the relief of A. J. Watts; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BONE:

A bill (S. 3068) to authorize the revision of the boundaries of the Snoqualmie National Forest, in the State of Washington; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. McGILL:

A bill (S. 3069) granting a pension to Otis H. Dorsett; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 3070) for the relief of Ethelyn Chrane; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3071) providing for the placing of improvements on the areas between the shore and bulkhead lines in rivers and harbors; to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (S. 3072) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. BULOW (by request):

A bill (S. 3073) amending the act of August 23, 1912 (37 Stat. 413), relating to preference in reduction of force granted to persons entitled to military preference; to the Committee on Civil Service.

By Mr. BAILEY:

A bill (S. 3074) for the relief of Edgar M. Barber, special disbursing agent, Paris, France, and Leo Martinuzzi, former customs clerk (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3075) for the relief of John L. Summers, former disbursing clerk, Treasury Department, and various former Treasurers of the United States (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SCHWELLENBACH:

A bill (S. 3076) for the relief of W. B. Greeley; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma (by request):

A bill (S. 3077) for the relief of Constantin Gilia; and

A bill (S. 3078) for the relief of C. R. Whitlock; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 3079) for the relief of Beryl Elliott; to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and request that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the joint resolution will be received and referred as indicated by the Senator from Nebraska.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 149) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in passing upon the validity of acts of Congress; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED

The following bills and joint resolutions were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 3061. An act to authorize the adjustment of the boundaries of the Chelan National Forest in the State of Washington; and

H. R. 5058. An act to convey certain lands to Clackamas County, Oreg., for public-park purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

H. R. 5360. An act providing for punishment for the crime of robbing or attempting to rob custodians of Government moneys or property; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

H. R. 5920. An act to authorize the conveyance of certain Government land to the borough of Stroudsburg, Monroe County, Pa., for street purposes and as a part of the approach to the Stroudsburg viaduct on State Highway Route No. 498;

H. R. 6983. An act to provide for the transfer of certain land in the city of Anderson, S. C., to such city; and

H. R. 7652. An act to authorize the furnishing of steam from the central heating plant to the Federal Reserve Board, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

H. R. 6776. An act to amend section 36 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

H. R. 6910. An act to amend section 4 of the act of May 31, 1933, enacted to safeguard the interests and welfare of Indians of the Taos Pueblo, N. Mex., in certain lands within the Carson National Forest; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

H. R. 6995. An act granting pensions to veterans of the Spanish-American War, including the Boxer Rebellion and the Philippine Insurrection, their widows and dependents, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Pensions.

H. R. 6988. An act authorizing the State of Louisiana and the State of Texas to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Sabine River at or near a point where Louisiana Highway No. 21 meets Texas Highway No. 45;

H. R. 7044. An act authorizing the State of Louisiana and the State of Texas to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Sabine River at or near a point where Louisiana Highway No. 6 in Sabine Parish, La., meets Texas Highway No. 21 in Sabine County, Tex.; and

H. R. 7870. An act to provide a preliminary examination of the Purgatoire (Picketwire) and Apishapa Rivers, in the State of Colorado, with a view to the control of their floods and the conservation of their waters; to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 3430. An act to amend the act approved May 14, 1930, entitled "An act to reorganize the administration of Federal prisons; to authorize the Attorney General to contract for the care of United States prisoners; to establish Federal jails; and for other purposes"; and

H. J. Res. 237. Joint resolution for the establishment of a trust fund to be known as the "Oliver Wendell Holmes Memorial Fund"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. J. Res. 265. Joint resolution pertaining to an appropriate celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the expedition of Hernando De Soto; to the Committee on the Library.

H. J. Res. 290. Joint resolution to amend an act entitled "An act providing for the ratification of Joint Resolution No. 59 of the Legislature of Puerto Rico, approved by the Governor May 5, 1930, imposing an import duty on coffee imported into Puerto Rico", approved June 18, 1934; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO SOCIAL-SECURITY BILL

Mr. BORAH and Mr. O'MAHONEY each submitted an amendment, and Mr. RUSSELL submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to House bill 7260, the so-called "Social Security Act", which were severally ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

CORRECTION OF ERROR IN SENATE BILL 1611

Mr. BYRD. I ask unanimous consent to submit a concurrent resolution to correct an error in a local bill, and I also ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 18) was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, in the enrollment of the bill (S. 1611) to authorize an exchange of lands between the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Co. and the United States at Quantico, Va., to make the following correction, viz: On page 5, line 22, of the Senate engrossed bill, in lieu of the numeral "4", insert the numeral "14."

JAPANESE POLICY IN MANCHURIA AND CHINA

Mr. KING. I submit a resolution and ask to have it read. It is very brief.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 154), as follows:

Whereas by the Kellogg Peace Pact, signed at Paris on August 27, 1928, the high-contracting parties (including the United States and Japan) solemnly declared that they condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies; and

Whereas by the Nine Power Treaty, signed at Washington on February 6, 1922, the contracting powers (including the United States and Japan) agreed to respect the sovereignty, the independence, and the territorial and administrative integrity of China and to refrain from taking advantage of conditions in China in order to seek special rights or privileges which would abridge the rights of subjects or citizens of friendly States; and

Whereas it is alleged that the policy pursued by Japan in Manchuria in establishing the Manchukuoan Government, in setting up a government oil monopoly of foreign oil interests, and the refusal by Manchukuo, as stated in the Japanese press, to observe the open-door policy except as to nations according her recognition, is a violation of the above treaties; and

Whereas it is alleged that more recently Japan has invaded and taken possession of Provinces in China proper south of the Great Wall, and has made demands upon China which, if insisted upon, will violate the sovereignty and independence, the territorial and administrative integrity, and the honor of China, in violation of the above treaties: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to examine into the policy pursued by Japan in Manchuria and in China proper, as set forth above, with a view to determining whether such policy has violated any of the provisions of the Kellogg Peace Pact or the Nine Power Treaty, and to submit such recommendations as in their judgment are warranted by the facts.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-fourth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $5,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I suggest that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. KING. I had intended to make that request, and I do so now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask permission to have inserted in the RECORD, following the resolution which I have just submitted, an editorial which appeared in the Washington Post of Monday, June 17, 1935, entitled "China's Last Stand", which is a condemnation of the policy of Japan.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post of June 17, 1935]

CHINA'S LAST STAND

Ever since Japan began her conquest of Manchuria in 1931 the Chinese Government has followed a conciliatory policy. For a brief period President Chiang Kai-Shek's troops resisted the Japanese at Shanghai and in the northern Provinces, but these battles were only an interlude in the general trend toward acceptance of Japanese domination. The authorities at Nanking realize that their poorly equipped and undisciplined recruits are no match for the Japanese Army. Consequently, they have tried to avoid open hostilities by gradually yielding to Tokyo's demands.

In view of the internal dissension in China and the weakness of the Nanking Government, this policy may be readily defended by those patriots who are working toward national unity. Yet it has played directly into the hands of the Japanese. As soon as China has accepted one set of demands another has been presented as a test of Chinese "sincerity." Each fresh encroachment finds China less able to resist than before. The result is, of course, gradual extension of Japanese control without effective resistance.

China's hope of achieving national unity has already been shattered, and her national independence is hanging in the balance. If the latest demands of Japan should be accepted, China would become a vassal state subject to ultimate control from Tokyo. Moreover, it is apparent that the area north of the Yellow River, including the two strategic cities of Peiping and Tientsin, is going the way of Manchuria. Where will the Japanese invasion stop? China does not know. She faces the dismal alternative of resisting with what strength she can command or risking extinction as an independent nation.

It is this desperate situation which has brought forth a new appeal for aid to the western powers. The foreign ministry at Nanking is trying to minimize the importance of the conversations in foreign capitals, for Japan has threatened China with "serious consequences" if the nine-power pact should be invoked. Nanking probably sees in this treaty, however, the last possibility of arresting the invasion. The militarists of Japan may penalize China for her efforts, but even weak resistance in a cause that is so eminently right is preferable to ignominious surrender.

The extension of Japanese control over Hopei, Chahar, Shansi, and parts of northern Shantung, Honan, and Suiyuan is unquestionably a violation of the nine-power treaty guaranteeing the independence and territorial integrity of China. When the puppet state of Manchukuo was established Japan offered the excuse that this region was not a part of China proper. What can she say with regard to the present encroachment upon the ancient Chinese capital and adjacent territory that has been under control of Chinese governments for at least 2,000 years?

Japan is anxious to keep this question in the background, for it involves conclusive evidence of Japanese aggression. For the same reason, however, the Chinese must press it to the fore. And if organized efforts to prevent imperialistic conquests and preserve world peace mean anything, it is impossible to see how the signatories to the Nine Power Pact can ignore China's appeal.

JOHN MONROE JOHNSON

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, as in executive session, that I be permitted to move to recommit to the Commerce Committee the nomination of Col. John Monroe Johnson to be Assistant Secretary of Commerce.

In doing so, I will state that when I asked unanimous consent on Saturday for the immediate consideration of this nomination, I did not know that there would be any objection. Objection was made, and I desire to have the committee have ample opportunity to consider the nomination. Therefore, I move that it be recommitted to the Commerce Committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, in connection with the statement the Senator from South Carolina has just made, I wish first to thank him for the action he has taken. Secondly, I desire to suggest that it should be added that there is nothing in the recommittal which in any way reflects upon Mr. Johnson. On the contrary, this action is for the purpose of undertaking to determine what the full facts are, in the light of the recent statements which have been made by Mr. Mitchell.

Mr. BYRNES. I know nothing about the facts; but inasmuch as any question at all is raised about the nomination, I wish to have it recommitted to the committee so that consideration may be had.

ADDRESS BY SECRETARY OF STATE HULL AT PENNSYLVANIA MILITARY COLLEGE

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Honorable Cordell Hull, Secretary of State on June 10 delivered an interesting and enlightening address at the commencement exercises of the Pennsylvania Military College, at Chester, Pa. I ask unanimous consent that his address may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, I feel highly honored to receive at your hands the degree of doctor of laws and shall treasure not only that unforgettable evidence of your consideration but the words with which it was presented. I shall always associate with it the thought that it was given me at the end of the period that the Pennsylvania Military College, with all its traditions, was a private institution and when the family of Hyatt was celebrating the perhaps unparalleled record of having guided the destinies of the college for 78 consecutive years.

As I look about me and see the graduating class ready to enter the world of action, I cannot help being struck with the attributes of good citizenship which they have gained in this institution. There is in a military college the opportunity for training in discipline, in hardiness, and in fortitude such as is rarely found in other types of schools. We have been singularly fortunate in this country in that the training in our military colleges has emphasized the very elements which they can best give and has avoided the two pitfalls sometimes found in other parts of the world, namely, the creation of a rigid military mentality and the creation of a military caste.

The core of American policy has always been that the military is a servant of the civil government, and in turn that the duty of the civil government is to have at its disposal an adequate and efficient force for national defense, but to make every effort not to have to use it by resorting to war.

We have seen in certain countries just as we did prior to the dreadful conflagration in 1914 a military caste working on the popular mind until it glorified, not as a means but as an end, military power and achievement; we have seen that same military caste carrying armaments and the preparations of war to a point that well nigh paralyzes productive effort within the national borders; we have seen a given nation cite another nation's armaments as a continuing excuse to increase its own until there has been set up a vicious circle of greater and ever greater armaments, which in the long run can only lead to impoverishment and economic suicide. We have even seen instances where the military has assumed direction of foreign policy.

This recrudescence of the military spirit is all to prevalent in the world today. It is encumbent on those nations which recognize its menace to the atmosphere of peace, and economic stability, and international sanity, to turn the spotlight of publicity on those guilty of such policy and to reiterate with all their power that excess armaments can only lead to disaster.

Right here I wish to demolish the argument that is advanced from time to time from prejudicial sources that tremendous armaments will bring prosperity. Carried to its logical conclusion, this theory would make the peace seeker the depression's worst ally and the public enemy of both capital and labor. Somewhere, somehow, you all realize that there is something fundamentally wrong with that strange theory. It is true that a large percentage of the billions which are now being spent in many countries on armament goes back into wages and to that extent temporarily reduces unemployment and increases purchasing power. Another proportion goes into profits of various industries and to that extent helps to keep them on their feet and give them confidence. This is true of all Government expenditures of whatsoever nature. But nations must consider the return for what they spend. If the people's money is simply used to keep alive and sheltered those in need without their doing useful work, it may be possible to reduce suffering but beyond that there is little to show for it. If unemployed labor is put to useless labor—say to reduce the matter to an ultimate absurdity, to producing goods not one wants and then burning them up in order to start the process over again, once more perhaps suffering is alleviated but at the same time raw materials and human energy are thrown away to no advantage. Now armaments are in this category in that they are definitely not selfliquidating and are wholly unproductive in any material sense. To the extent that they protect the nation's independence and discourage aggression, they serve the highest purpose that can be imagined; to the extent that they exceed the minimum needed for defense they are a dangerous expedient; to the extent that they encourage war and become instruments of aggression, they sacrifice the finest ideals and the most cherished possessions of humanity. Not only are they themselves destroyed in war, like useless goods that are burned, but they destroy in addition unmeasured other material values and uncounted lives and lead to the kind of wholesale devastation caused by the World War. All of this seems so elementary that I would not have gone into it at such length were it not that the issue of excess armaments is so frequently confused by the introduction of fallacious economic argument.

We have always had in mind the negotiations of an international agreement for the limitation and reduction of arms, either quantitatively or qualitatively, or both. Since 1926 our Government has taken a leading part in this movement. We have attended the Preparatory Commission for the Disarmament Conference and all sessions of the Disarmament Conference itself. On more than one occasion we have taken the initiative in presenting a plan which we felt would break the deadlock of international suspicions and rivalries. This has not been a partisan policy but a national policy. The world has not yet succeeded in solving this problem, in many ways the most complicated it has ever been called to face. This is partly so because to be effective unanimity is required on the part of all the major powers of the world, and partly because disarmament is closely intertwined with the political problem of security. The nations of Europe have been groping to evolve some system of collective action. We, of course, being removed from the scene of possible conflict, and being unwilling to abandon or limit our independence of judgment or decision, could never participate in such a collective system, but we can and do help in the efforts that others are making. We have based our foreign policy upon the tenets of the Kellogg-Briand Pact, and I would recall to you that this not only provides that the nations shall renounce war as an instrument of national policy, but, what is fully as important, that they shall seek the settlement of any dispute by pacific means only. We have suggested the conclusion of a universal nonaggression pact which cuts through the maze of technicalities and provides a simple definition of aggression; namely, the passage of frontiers by armed forces. We have made an offer contingent on the achievement of real disarmament that if a state has been judged guilty of aggression and we, using our own judgment, agree with the verdict, then we will refrain from any action which would tend to defeat collective efforts taken against the aggressor. We have associated ourselves with the League's consultation procedure both in connection with the Sino-Japanese dispute over Manchuria and the Peruvian-Colombia dispute over Leticia.

So often as opportunity offers, we shall seek occasion, without abandoning the traditions of our policy or trammeling our independence of judgment or action, to assist in the prevention of war and in the preservation and promotion of peace. We have not to my knowledge overlooked any opportunity that has been offered and we shall not overlook any such opportunity in the days to come.

Mr. President, the young men who are graduating today and stepping out from their academic life into wider fields of competition and action form the nucleus of our new generation which I hope can translate many of the ideals we have before us into realities. Strong, physically and morally, having learned to obey and hence having fitted themselves to command, they should prove leaders in their various walks of life. Their opportunities for service are great and I for one, in spite of the problems and obstacles before us, have the firm conviction that with time and effort and unflagging will power the problems will be solved and the obstacles overcome. They and thousands of others of our youth who are now closing their work at educational institutions throughout the country are the trustees of posterity and to a great extent they will be enabled to make the future what they will, and let us hope that it will be a future marked by peaceful conditions and a large measure of happiness and prosperity.

THE FUTURE OF THE NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL RECOVERY ACT—ADDRESS BY SENATOR WAGNER

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered over the radio by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] during the National Radio Forum, on Thursday night, June 13, 1935, on the subject, "The Future of the National Industrial Recovery Act."

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Friends of the radio audience: The recent decision of the Supreme Court setting aside portions of the National Industrial Recovery Act, and the controversy within Congress and throughout the country regarding the future of that law, make it timely to review the entire subject in the light of its surrounding facts.

In order to understand the spirit and intent of the recovery program, we must turn our memories backward to the dreary days of early 1933. The small business man was being bled white by the cutthroat competition of an arrogant and heartless minority, and even the mighty corporation was groggy from the repeated blows of tremendous losses. The farmer, after mortgaging his home to finance his crops, and watering his fields with the sweat of his brow for wearisome months in the broiling sun, was finding the harvest less valuable than the seed. Thousands of evictions tore families asunder and wrenched the home owner from his long-cherished hearthstone. Savings stored up during a lifetime of struggle and self-denial were imprisoned in closed banks or vanished over night in the bursting bubble of the stock market. Banks and other financial institutions, bearing the cumulative burden of all these tragedies, moved onward toward the gloomy week in March when confidence died and our whole monetary system came to an awful pause.

Although his plight was long obscured by more spectacular events, it was the average worker who became the chief target for the slings and arrows of misfortune. The losses suffered by banker and business man and farmer may be recaptured upon the return of better times. But nothing can ever erase from body or soul the scars of hunger or the humiliating brand of unemployment. Upon millions of laboring people were visited trials and tribulations that can never be understood fully except by those whose own personal experiences have subjected them to poverty and its terrible insecurity. With 15,000,000 already unemployed, 500,000 new victims every month were being severed from their source of livelihood and flung heartlessly upon the streets. Many who retained their jobs were speeded up to the health-shattering pace of 60 or 70 hours a week. The pay envelop became thinner and thinner, until in some instances it reached the unbelievable figure of three or four dollars a week. In the search for the cheapest labor, children of 14 or 15 years of age were drawn into factories by the thousands. And at times these frail reeds for the support of whole families were paid 2 or 3 cents an hour. As conditions grew ever worse, public morals were shattered, the strongest seemed powerless to act, and an entire Nation descended into the gloomy vale of abandoned hopes.

When we ask ourselves the challenging question why the forces of revival lay cold and still, what answer suggests itself? Surely there was no lack of natural resources. Surely the strength and energy and genius of our people had not perished. The main obstacle to recovery was an outworn philosophy of government that had been suited to the oxcart era, but that was totally unadjusted to the machine age. It was a dogma insisting upon extreme individualism at a time when the individual had become the helpless victim of forces too big and too powerful for him to control. It was a dogma that failed to perceive the need for national action although our mighty industries had burst the bounds of conventional State lines and were country-wide or even international in their scope. It scoffed at the possibilities of Nation-wide cooperation although cooperation was the only safeguard against social disintegration on one hand or radical overthrow on the other.

Finally there came to power a leadership which grasped the realities of the situation, which knew that we must sink or swim as a united Nation, and which put into effect a program embodying this ideal.

The record of that program is written indelibly into the lives of our people. Systematic and sympathetic relief has redeemed the pledge that no one in America shall be allowed to starve. Comprehensive public works have gone even further by recognizing the principle that insofar as possible the willing worker shall have the right to work. The farmer is again rejoicing in the fruits of his efforts. The home owner is again secure and happy in the warmth of his domestic circle.

The average citizen with a thousand daily cares may have found it hard to grasp all the complexities of governmental machinery. But there has been one parcel of legislation standing out like the sun at high noon, visible to all except the blind. This legislation was fundamental because it came to grips with causes as well as results. It appealed to thoughtful business men because it provided an opportunity to create order out of chaos, to manufacture and sell goods with a better knowledge of the market, and to restrain the demoralizing practices of the price slasher and the wage cutter. It appealed equally to workers because it recognized that the real dynamo of industry was not closed banks and idle factories, but the human materials of America.

Its first and guiding principle was that recovery was neither possible nor worth while unless it meant the rehabilitation of the workers of this country. With its promise of fuller employment, shorter hours, better wages and the right to bargain collectively, the National Industrial Recovery Act drove its appeal to the hopes and aspirations of nameless men and women from coast to coast.

One does not have to delve into volumes of statistics to prove that the Recovery Act has been helpful to business. Every observant person knows that the last 2 years have changed losses into profits and converted despair into hope. It will be enough to mention that the earnings of 1,435 representative industrial and trading establishments rose from $640,000,000 in 1933 to $1,071,000 in 1934, showing a gain of over 64 percent.

The benefits that have been conferred upon the common man are known wherever working people congregate. If we glance at random at a cross section of industry, we find that employment has been increased by 100,000 in cotton textiles, by 50,000 in the clothing industry, by 30,000 in hosiery manufacturing, by 90,000 in iron and steel, and by 180,000 in the retail trade. In all, not less than 3,500,000 people have been transferred from the pavements to their customary occupations. A quarter of a million children have been withdrawn from the sweatshop. Hours of labor have been notably reduced. Forty or fifty cents an hour, low though that may be, are now being paid in occupations where 3 or 4 cents an hour was the rule 2 years ago. The annual volume of wages has increased by $600,000,000. The greatest gains, however, cannot be conveyed by cold figures. They are evidenced by the renewed faith that our Government has returned to its original purposes as a humane instrument for the protection and advancement of all the people of the country.

It is unthinkable that in the face of these results we should return to the destructive planlessness which existed 2½ years ago. Yet that is precisely the direction in which the captains of reaction are trying to steer the country. If they advanced concrete proposals to cure the imperfections that naturally exist in any new experiment, we should welcome their advice. But not one of them has a single constructive substitute. United they stand in blowing the bugle of retreat into the tanglewood of disorganization and chaos.

In seeking to vindicate their position before the American people, these captains of reaction have again mounted the hobby horse of supposed State rights. Every time the Federal Government takes a step they have a nightmare about the overthrow of our system of Government. Why do not these gentlemen wake up and look at economic realities. Did the misery and discontent of 3 years ago show a fine respect for State lines? Was it possible to keep wages in one section up when competitive wages in other sections were tumbling down toward zero? Did the manufacturers of the East have a ready market for their products when the agricultural West was in ruins? Until the Federal Government acted 2 years ago, the States were utterly powerless to prevent the trend toward complete social disintegration. These people know that a return to State action will mean no action at all. They are opposed to Federal action, not because it has failed, but because it has succeeded—succeeded in laying the foundation for a better distribution of opportunity among nameless millions of Americans.

On May 27 the Supreme Court of the United States handed down its decision in the Schechter case, invalidating certain portions of the National Industrial Recovery Act. Before nightfall of that day the opinion of the court, hastily read and distorted to suit selfish purposes, was seized upon by all the forces of reaction as a mandate requiring the complete abandonment of our Federal program. Anyone who has studied the history of our country will not be surprised to find some people misconstruing and misrepresenting language of the Supreme Court and of the Constitution itself in an attempt to make both serve as instruments for oppression, rather than as the guardians of freedom that they truly are.

We do not utter a word of disapproval of the decision of the Supreme Court in the Schechter case. We disapprove only of the erroneous constructions that have been placed upon it by designing people. We retain our enduring faith in constitutional government and our confidence in the wisdom and statesmanship of our highest Court. It is our intent to follow the Schechter decision, not to disobey or circumvent it. We recognize that the Court, in its severe criticism of the delegation of legislative power to a wide variety of private agencies unanswerable to the people, has taught us a lasting lesson in good government. We are thankful for the services that have been performed by the Court in ordering Congress to chart a clearer and more defined course as to what affects interstate commerce and what does not. We are prepared to make plans for changes in legislative detail and in administrative organization that will conform to the Supreme Court's decision.

We do not believe that there is a single letter in the Schechter decision which makes it impossible for the Federal Government to cope in any way with economic problems that challenge the whole Nation. We find no evidence in the decision that our Constitution compels us to bow our heads before the dreadful consequences that inaction would bring. During the past few weeks I have received hundreds of letters from people in all walks of life, mailed during the first days after the Recovery Administration was shorn of its powers. These letters tell a moving story of what will happen if the old conditions are allowed to return. One small business man writes: "N. R. A. helped us give employment for necessary repairs and improvement to our store. It has put us in a frame of mind of still expanding our store and so give more employment. But now we are uncertain. We fear the thought of returning to the bitter cutthroat conditions that existed before N. R. A. Senator WAGNER, I'm sure that you will act to protect small business gains."

Another communication, from a worker, says: "In the past year I saw the light of day; I enjoyed the luxury of a free weekend with my family. Now, the inferno is roaring again, the sweat pouring again. It is all gone. My pay has been reduced, my hours have been lengthened, and I have been told to report on Saturdays. All this in the short space of 2 days—it is very bewildering."

Congress does not intend to surrender. The first evidence of its determination to go ahead came last month, when the Senate by an overwhelming vote passed the national labor relations bill, designed to make section 7 (a) of the Recovery Act permanent law and to dignify it with adequate enforcement powers Under the breakdown of section 7 (a) the vast majority of American workers were deprived of their precious right to bargain collectively. They saw the pledge made by the Government they trusted violated with impunity. They breathed the heavy atmosphere of discrimination, and they were denied just participation in the rebuilding of America.

This condition was a menace to every worker in America, to those who were free as well as to those held in economical bondage. No worker anywhere could regard his future with serenity so long as millions of his fellows were subjected to oppression, and so long as the Government was not ready to vindicate that portion of the law which meant most to working people. No enlightened business man had a sense of security so long as workers were unable to help him combat the depression-producing practices of the sweatshop and the wage exploiter. Nor could any business man feel comfortable so long as the causes for industrial strife were running rampant throughout the land.

On the ashes of disappointment and frustration regarding section 7 (a), Congress is now prepared to raise a sounder structure to safeguard industrial liberty. For 2 years the national labor relations bill ran the opposition of every brand of false propaganda. Finally, public sentiment became overwhelmingly conscious of the fact that the company-dominated union was a sham and a delusion, and that the right of workers to be free men in fact as well as in name was a precious heritage that should be unflinchingly protected. Without question, action by the House will make this bill law before the adjournment of Congress.

The second step was taken when the House passed the social security bill, designed to afford protection against unmerited unemployment, neglected childhood, and destitute old age. Action by the Senate within a few days is a certainty.

The third step forward was taken this morning when the Senate, following the House, passed a resolution partially extending the National Recovery Act until April 1, 1935. This legislation will afford an opportunity for additional study and reflection upon the mistakes as well as the accomplishments of the past 2 years. It will break the ground for permanent legislation at the next session of Congress, if not later during this session. In the meantime it will permit the continuation of the principles of the National Recovery Act upon a voluntary basis.

But let us bear in mind that additional legislation there must be. We must not permit the stalemate of our Nation-wide struggle to maintain decent standards for the business men and working people of America. We must repudiate for all time the type of recovery that is based upon wrecking honest enterprise by the foul methods of unfair competition, or upon the degradation and exploitation of labor. Neither the sweatshops' day nor the paupers' pay can be countenanced again. Never again shall our children be drawn from the school into the factory.

The fundamental issues today are the same as they were several years ago. Is the protection of the human element in industry to be a principle of government? Is a fair level of wages to be safeguarded against the assault of the cutthroating exploiter? Are children to be chained to the factory bench? Are sweatshops to flourish? Is business to be stabilized, and are profits to be made secure by establishing order in industry? Are the instrumentalities for social justice to be preserved from the onslaught of reactionary influences? This cause is not the cause of a particular party or of a particular administration, but the cause of humanitarianism in America.

SOCIAL SECURITY

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 7260) to provide for the general welfare by establishing a system of Federal old-age benefits, and by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for aged persons, dependent and crippled children, maternal and child welfare, public health, and the administration of their unemployment compensation laws; to establish a Social Security Board; to raise revenue; and for other purposes.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask permission to send to the desk an amendment to the pending measure, which I shall call up today or tomorrow. I ask that it may be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I desire to discuss for a little while certain portions of the pending measure. I desire to cover briefly those provisions which relate to the granting of aid to States. Then I desire to call attention to the discriminations in the bill in favor of the old as against the young, the possible effect of such discriminations, the possibility of maintaining the huge reserve provided for, the cost of the plan under title II, and, lastly and very briefly, to title III relating to unemployment insurance.

I think the social security bill presented to the Senate by the committee is a very great improvement over the original bill, known as "S. 1130."

In my judgment, this bill is the most important bill that has been presented to this session of Congress. It maps out for the country an entirely new program. It is new in three particulars.

First, it is new in the assistance granted to States for old-age assistance, for aid to dependent children, for aid in maternal and child welfare, and for public-health work.

The Federal Government has for many years been making grants to States for the building of highways. There have been other appropriations made of comparatively small amounts for other purposes, but the large item has been for the purpose of building roads.

We are now entering into a field which heretofore has been wholly a State responsibility. Effort has been made heretofore to have the Congress give some aid to the States to take care of their needy aged people. Many bills have been presented to the Congress having this as their purpose, but the Congress has never acted favorably upon them.

This bill comes to us not only as a recommendation of the President of the United States, but comes at a time when the recollection and distress of the depression is fresh in our minds and the existence of such distress is still in our very midst. More than that, it comes at a time when the individual States are laboring under a strained financial condition, with many of them believing that they cannot take care of their own. This feeling upon the part of the State authorities undoubtedly is partially due to the precedent of the Federal Government in furnishing huge sums of money to take care of the needy in the States. That it was necessary for the Federal Government to do something along this line is admitted by all; the question which has caused much debate in and out of Congress is the plan and method employed in giving such aid.

The conditions which I have recited and the precedent we have established make it exceedingly difficult to oppose this part of the pending bill. I have, after much consideration, reached the conclusion that it is necessary to support these grants to the States for the purposes set out in the bill. In doing so I do not overlook the great dangers which such action on our part at this or any other time will bring to the principles upon which our Government was founded. When the Federal Government adopts as a permanent policy a plan to contribute from the Federal Treasury any substantial sum for the care of the needy people of the States it immediately begins breaking down the independence of the States by making them more responsible to a centralized government.

I do not protest, for a protest would be of no avail. I yield, as every elective legislator must yield under our form of government, to what I believe to be the demand of the great majority of the people of every State.

I should not be so much disturbed in consenting to the grants set up in the bill for the purpose mentioned if I knew that the precedent thereby fixed by the Congress would not be enlarged upon by the Congresses that are to follow. I know, however, that this is only the beginning; and I know that the same public sentiment which supports this much of the program will continue until the amounts which are to be granted by the Federal Government will be increased and the scope of the relief greatly enlarged. This demand will continue from time to time until it will become such a burden upon the American people that the increasing or decreasing of the amount will become a serious political issue.

The only hope left, in my judgment, is that the Congress shall confine itself always to doing for a State and for the people of the State only so much as that State does for itself and its own people. In other words, the only safety we have in this new program is through making certain that the State does its full share. If we stick to that principle, we may save ourselves from some of the serious consequences that otherwise will come out of this plan.

Of course, Mr. President, there is nothing in this plan that is so complicated as to prevent it from being easily abandoned if and when the country so recovers from the depression that such contributions on the part of the Federal Government are found to be unnecessary. In other words, we may treat this matter at the present time under this plan as an emergency, which may or may not develop into a permanent policy, all of which, including the amount of the appropriation, would depend upon the conditions existing from year to year.

I say with perfect frankness that I have but little hope that the plan would be abandoned for the reasons I have stated. I merely point out the ease with which it could be abandoned, in order that I may compare it with other features of the bill which I cannot support.

I have called attention to the fact that there are three parts of this bill which are entirely new. I have been discussing only one that is contained in titles I, IV, V, and VI, and another title relating to the blind.

FEDERAL OLD-AGE BENEFITS

Title II, found on page 7, refers to Federal old-age benefits, and is perhaps the most complicated and far-reaching legislation in which the Congress has ever indulged. It is an effort to write into law a forced annuity system for a certain class of persons. My recollection is that it affects about 50 percent of the persons who are gainfully employed. There will be found on page 9 of the majority report a table which shows that in 10 years there will be accumulated in this reserve fund a little less than $10,000,000,000, in 18 years a little more than $22,000,000,000, and in 43 years the balance in reserve will be something like $47,000,000,000. The accumulation of this amount of money in a democratic form of government like our own is unthinkable.

It must be remembered that this effort to create an old-age reserve account to take care of all persons in the future is not a contract that can be enforced by anybody. What we do here is merely to pass an act of the Congress, which may be changed by any Congress in the future, and has in it nothing upon which American citizens can depend. Does anybody believe that such a huge sum of money, accumulated for any purpose, could be preserved intact? Does anybody doubt that it would be subjected to all kinds of demands? I can think of nothing so dangerous as an accumulation of the huge sum of $47,000,000,000 for the purpose of taking care of persons who have not yet arrived at the age where they can participate in the fund.

It must be borne in mind in this connection that this huge fund will have been accumulated for the purpose of taking care of only about one-half of the persons who will have been gainfully employed.

There will be found in the majority report, on page 9, this very significant statement:

> To reduce the cost of free pensions for these groups in the population, we deemed it desirable that the bill should include provisions for annuity bonds to be issued by the Treasury.

I think this statement is somewhat misleading. The reference is made to title XI, which provides that the Federal Government may issue annuity bonds. The statement is made in the report that it is believed that such authority to issue annuity bonds will reduce the cost of free pensions for the persons who are not included in the other plan. There can be no hope, in my judgment, of this accomplishing any such purpose.

I may say in that connection that, so far as I know, there is no particular advantage in annuities of this kind over annuities of the kind which have been issued by insurance companies in the past, and are being issued today.

If it be true that the annuity plan suggested in the bill will take care of one-half of the people who are not now being taken care of, it seems to me we might very well apply it to the entire class that is to be taken care of.

DISCRIMINATIONS

Now, Mr. President, in some detail and perhaps with some tediousness I shall point out some of the discriminations in the bill, and I do it for more than one reason. I do it not only for the purpose of showing the unfairness of the bill itself but for the purpose of calling to the attention of the Senate what some future Congress will need when faced with the discriminations which will be practiced under the bill.

I think it desirable to point out the many discriminations. They are against the young man and in favor of the older man. In my comparisons, unless otherwise stated, I shall assume that the wage received is $100 per month in each instance, and that the employee makes full time.

Under the plan as set out in the bill at the bottom of page 9, if a man begins to pay in January 1, 1937, and pays in for 5 years, he will have paid on an earned income of $6,000. In order to find out how much he gets each month we take one-half of 1 percent of the first $3,000, which makes $15 per month, and we take one-twelfth of 1 percent of the other $3,000, which makes $2.50 per month, or a total of $17.50 per month. If this man is 60 years of age when he begins to pay in, he may retire at the age of 65 and get $17.50 per month.

There has been contributed for him and by him during these first 5 years $144, being 2 percent for the first 3 years, and 3 percent for the next 2 years. If this sum were paid to an insurance company, it would purchase an annuity of $1.17 per month.

The mortality table shows that a man 65 years of age is expected to live for a period of 12 years.

If we should take the $17.50 per month allowed him under this bill, he would be paid $210 per year, and for a period of 12 years it would amount to $2,520. If we should place it upon a sound basis, however, and pay him $1.17 per month, he would receive $14.04 per year, or a total for the 12 years of $168.48; so that particular person, whether he be in need or not, would get from some source $2,351.52 more than the money contributed by himself and his employer would earn.

Take another instance, and assume that the man who goes in on January 1, 1937, is 55 years of age. It will be observed in the majority report on page 8 that that man will be entitled to $22.50 per month. During the 10 years he will earn $12,000, and there will be paid in by him and for him $384. That $384 with interest at 3 percent will purchase an annuity of $3.76 per month. If he lives for 12 years and draws $22.50 per month, or $270 a year, he will receive $3,240, while if he only drew the amount that the $384 and interest at 3 percent would provide, namely, $3.76 per month, or $45.12 per year, he would draw $541.44, a difference of $2,698.56 for each particular person in that class.

But let us take the man who goes in at 50 years of age and pays in for 15 years. There will be paid in by him and for him $720, and this sum will purchase an annuity of $7.67 per month, whereas under the plan of the bill he would be entitled to $15 per month on his first $3,000 of earnings and $12.50 per month on the balance of his earnings, or a total of $27.50 per month, or $330 per year; and assuming that he lived for a period of 12 years he would draw $3,960; while his annuity of $7.67 per month, or $92.04 per year, for a period of 12 years would make a total of $1,104.48, which amount deducted from the $3,960 under the plan leaves $2,855.52, which must be paid from some other source to every person in this particular class, regardless of whether or not he is in need.

But suppose he goes in at 35 years of age, and payments are made by him and for him for a period of 30 years. For the first 15-year period the amount paid in amounts to $720, but for the next 15-year period the rate is uniform at 6 percent. The additional amount, therefore, paid in that could be used to purchase an annuity would be $1,080, making a total of $1,800. Under the plan he gets $42.50 per month, or $510 per year, and assuming that he lives 12 years, and, of course, it may be more or less, he would receive a total of $6,120. The annuity that could be purchased for him with $1,800 that has been paid in for him and by him would amount to $25.72 per month, or $308.64 a year, or a total of $3,702.68. This subtracted from the amount that he would get under the plan leaves a difference of $2,417.32.

Assuming that the man goes in at the age of 25 years and pays in for 40 years, there will be paid in by him and for him $2,520, and this sum will purchase an annuity of $44.10 per month, or $529.20 a year. Under the plan he would be entitled to $51.25 per month, or $615 per year, or a total of $7,380, if he lived out his expectancy. The annuity that could be purchased for him would be $529.20 per year, or $6,350.40, leaving a balance that must be made up from some source of $1,029.60. It will be observed that even if he goes in at 25 years of age he still gets an advantage of $1,029.60 if everything happens that is expected to happen.

If a man goes in at the age of 20 years and pays in for 45 years, there will be paid for his account $2,880; and that will purchase an annuity of $55.82 a month, or $669.84 per year, or a total for 12 years of $8,038.08. Under the plan he would get $53.75 per month, or $645 a year, and for a period of 12 years would receive $7,740. The persons in this class would, therefore, get $298.08 less under the plan than they would have coming to them from the ordinary life-insurance annuity.

Let us take another illustration, and suppose that a man does not reach the earning age until 1949; 1949 is the year in which the full tax becomes effective. He does not begin to pay in until he is 20 years of age, in 1949, and under the plan he pays in for 45 years. During that time he will have earned $54,000, and under the plan will be entitled to $53.75 per month, or $645 a year, and for 12 years will receive a total of $7,740. There will be paid in for him and by him $3,240, which will purchase him an annuity of $68.50 per month, or $822 a year, which over 12 years would make a total in payment to him of $9,864. Under this plan he gets only $7,740, and therefore loses $2,124.

As I have said, all of the illustrations I have given have been based upon a salary of $100 per month. But let me emphasize that illustration by taking the man who reaches the earning age in 1949, who earns $250 per month, and pays under the plan for a period of 45 years. During that time he will have earned $135,000, and under the plan will be limited in pension to $85 per month, or $1,020 a year; and if he lives out his expectancy, he will receive $12,240. There will be paid in for his account, however, the sum of $8,100, which, with interest compounded at 3 percent, would purchase him an annuity of $171.25 a month, or $2,055 per year, which over a 12-year period would give him a total of $24,660. Under the plan he would get $12,240, so that there is a difference of $12,420 which the young man, who starts in in 1949 and pays in for a period of 45 years and earns during the whole of that time $250 per month, will lose.

PAYMENTS UPON DEATH

Mr. President, let me call attention to another discrimination, with respect to the payments upon death, which will be found on page 11 of the bill. Section 203 provides that for any person dying before the age of 65, his estate shall be entitled to 3½ percent of the total wages paid to him after December 31, 1936.

If a man, therefore, enters this plan at the age of 60 and earns $1,200 per year for 5 years, he will have earned a total of $6,000. If he dies just as he reaches the age of 65 his estate will be entitled to have paid to it a lump sum of $210.

The amount this particular employee has paid in, plus the accumulated interest at 3 percent, will only amount to $76.92, making an overpayment to the estate of $133.08.

If he has been in the plan for 15 years, the amount his estate will receive will be $630, while the amount paid in by him with accumulated interest will equal only $432.72, making an overpayment of $197.28.

If he has paid in for a period of 25 years, his estate will receive $1,050, while the amount he has paid in with accumulated interest will be only $999.60, making an overpayment of $50.40. So the only person who is treated with entire equity is the man who has paid in for 25 years and dies. His estate gets back just about what it is planned ought to be gotten back.

If he pays in for 35 years, however, his estate will receive only $1,470, and the amount he has paid in plus the accumulated interest will amount to $1,761.72, showing a loss to the estate of $291.72.

I may call attention to the fact that these figures are based upon what the employee contributes, and have nothing to do with what the employer contributes.

If he pays in for 45 years and dies just at the age of 65, his estate will be entitled to $1,890 under the plan, while the amount he has paid in plus the accumulated interest will amount to $2,785.92, showing a loss to his estate of $895.92.

The above illustrations are based upon the assumption that he began to pay in at the end of 1936, when the rates would be less than the maximum for the first 12 years.

If we take the illustration of a man who starts to pay in in the year 1949 and pays in for a period of 45 years, we will find that his estate is entitled to the same $1,890, although the amount the employee has contributed to the fund with its accumulated compounded interest would amount to $3,383.52, showing a loss to his estate of $1,493.52.

I have called attention to the fact that the youth who enters this plan in 1949 and pays in for a period of 45 years and retires at the age of 65 and then lives out his expectancy of 12 years, will receive under the plan only $53.75 per month, while if the same amount had been paid in on some annuity plan he would receive $68.50 per month, making a total loss to him during the 12 years of $2,124.

The same youth is penalized if he should pay in for 45 years and then dies at the age of 65, in that his estate would receive only $1,890, whereas the amount that he has paid in with accumulated interest would be $3,383.52, or a difference of $1,493.52, so that if he lives for 12 years, or until he is 77, and draws his pension, he has a loss of $2,124, while if he dies at 65 before beginning to draw his pension his estate is out $1,493.52.

This discrimination is further emphasized if, instead of taking a figure of $100 per month as the wage earner's pay we take $250 per month. I have shown that in such a case if the man lived and drew his pension under this plan, instead of drawing what he would be entitled to under a regular annuity contract, he would lose $12,420. If the same $250 per month man, however, pays in for 45 years and dies just as he reaches the age of 65, his estate would get back $4,725, while if the same amount of money had been paid in under an annuity contract, his estate would be entitled to get back $8,458.50, showing a loss to his estate of $3,733.80.

DISCRIMINATIONS IN AMOUNT OF SALARIES RECEIVED

A like discrimination is made between persons getting low salaries and persons getting higher salaries. The bill favors the man with low earnings against the man with higher earnings.

Take the illustration found in the report on page 8. It will be observed that a man who has paid in for 10 years on the basis of $50 per month will receive a pension of $17.50, and that $17.50 to a man who has received a wage of $100 per month is increased to $22.50, and it increases $5 for every $50 per month increase in pay up to $250 per month. So that the man who earns $250 per month or five times as much as the man earning $50 per month, will receive only a fraction more than twice as much as the man who receives $50 per month. It must be borne in mind also that the man who has been receiving five times as much salary and who gets only twice as much in the form of a pension has all of the time been paying five times as much in taxes.

Mr. President, I call attention to the discrimination in this bill not so much for the purpose of emphasizing the argument which will be made by those who shall participate in this fund, who pay the taxes, and who are entitled ultimately to some return from it, but I call attention to it for the purpose of emphasizing that, after all, this is a democratic form of government and what we do here may be changed and will be changed upon the demand of people who have been discriminated against.

I do not overlook the suggestion made by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] the other day in response to a question I asked the chairman of the committee, or in response to the suggestion which I made to the chairman of the committee as to the discriminations. I do not overlook the fact that a part of these funds are being paid by the employer and that the employee has not contributed all the money which I have placed to his account.

That is quite true indeed, but it is not an answer at all to the point which I make and to the questions which I raise. The employee under this plan will either weekly, monthly, or yearly, whatever the plan provides for, have in his possession some evidence of what has been placed to his credit by the Federal Government. It will make no difference to him whether or not a part of it has been contributed by his employer. He will say, and in many instances it will be true, that he did not get enough pay anyway, and that, therefore, he has gotten no more from his employer than he was entitled to. However, the young man who will go under this plan in 1949 and pay in for a period of 45 years on a salary of $250 per month will find when he reaches the age of 65 that under this plan he can draw only $85 per month, while if that same fund had been placed in the hands of some insurance company or had been placed in the hands of any person who had invested it at 3-percent interest, and the 3-percent interest had accumulated until he had arrived a the age of 65 years, instead of getting $85 a month he would get a little more than $172 per month.

When he goes to his Member of Congress and sets forth those facts and shows how hard he has worked all these years, and how this money has been accumulated for him, and shows how in 1935 the Congress, when it enacted this law, enacted it in this form, because it was said Congress could not afford to do better than that which is now undertaken to be done, that is, to tax that youth of the future in order to take care of the older man of today—when he sets forth those facts, I say that his claim will be so just, his claim will be so fair, that no Member of Congress will dare turn him down, and we shall have that question confronting us, just as we have today such a question confronting us in the matter of the soldiers' bonus.

The soldier says, "We went to the war and we fought for America; we defended America while other youths at that time remained home and were earning large sums of money." What do we say in reply? We cannot deny what he says. We cannot deny that he earned much more than he received. The only reply we can possibly give to him is, "My dear fellow, you cannot expect America to pay you for your patriotism. It is impossible. There is not enough money in America to pay it. There is not money enough in the world to pay the soldiers what they actually earned or what is due to them, if you put it upon any such basis as that."

So, because we promised him a bonus he comes to the Congress and says, "We need the money now, and you ought to pay it in advance." We cannot say, "You did not earn it." We cannot say, "It is not proper to pay you in advance because you did not earn that much money." We have no defense except to say, "We have agreed to do a certain thing for you because of our great appreciation of what you did, and we are going to limit it to that, and that is not yet due"; and upon that ground we defend our position, and that is the only ground upon which we can defend it.

However, when the young man who will be 20 years of age in 1949 shall come to the American Congress with a certificate showing what has been paid in for his account, and he shall show to the Congress not only that, but will be able to say to the Congress, "If this money had been invested properly there would be coming to me now for the balance of my life $172 a month instead of this paltry sum of $85 a month which you expect to give me now", when the Congress will have no defense to it at all. We will have no defense at all, because he will not have gone into this plan voluntarily. We will have forced him into this plan. We will have forced him to contribute to the Federal Treasury 3 percent of his salary and will have forced his employer to do likewise. Perhaps all he can pay out of his salary is 3 percent; perhaps that is all he can spare, and perhaps it is all the employer can do for the employee; but instead of leaving it to him to make with some organization a binding contract which would enable him, if he lived to be 65 years of age, to get $172 a month, and which, more than that, would enable him when the time of need came to borrow money, to take part of his profit, at 60 years of age instead of 65, all under a binding contract, to which the careful youth and his parents and the employer had been looking to take care of him in the future, we force upon him a plan of which he has no notion whether it will be lived up to or not. He does not know whether it will last 5 years or 10 years. He does not know whether it will last until he is 65 years of age. He does not know what minute Congress is going to cut him off.

Mr. President, I suggest that that is a serious question, which we ought to consider before we pass on this difficult problem to some Congress in the future.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I ask the Senator a question for information. In the figures which he has been presenting to us has he taken into account the fact that the payments which are made are made both by the employer as well as by the employee? Assume that there was no payment made by the employer, but only by the employee, is not the amount which he would receive under the bill commensurate with the amount which he would pay? The Senator has been debating it upon the theory that it is the equivalent of the employee making both payments, but the master pays part and the employee pays part. However, it all inures to the employee's advantage.

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. KING. Supposing that the Senator should base his computation upon the proposition that the employee should be entitled only to the benefits which would come from his payments, what then would be the result?

Mr. HASTINGS. Of course, all the figures I have mentioned as being paid in under regular annuity would be reduced by 50 percent, because the employee pays only half and the employer pays half. However, I may suggest, Mr. President, that I think this discrimination shown in the bill is a serious one. I say in response to the suggestion made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] that it is a serious discrimination. If we admit, as we must admit, that the youth of today must be penalized in order to take care of the older persons of today, and if there be anything in the suggestion that the youth cannot complain, because his employer is contributing a portion of the money, then we had better modify this bill so that there shall not go to the credit of that youth the amount which the employer pays for him. In other words, it is provided that a total of 6 percent shall be paid in when the act shall become fully effective; 3 percent by the employer and 3 percent by the employee. If it be said that it is necessary to have such discriminations in order to take care of the aged people of today, then we had better change this bill so that there shall not go to the credit of that youth the entire 6 percent. Give him credit for the 3 percent which he contributes, and give him credit for 1 percent contributed by his employer, if that is all that can be done, or give him credit for 2 percent contributed by his employer, but whatever we do let us not deceive that youth by making him believe that here is an annuity plan whereby he is contributing 50 percent and his employer is contributing 50 percent, and that it goes to his credit, when, as a matter of fact, part of it is taken from him in order that we may take care of the older people of today.

I think that one of the finest things that could come to this country would be a combination annuity plan under which the employer and the employee would contribute a like amount in order to take care of the employee in his old age. But if we do it, we ought to do it upon a straight and fair basis where every man who is an employee and pays in and every employer who pays in for him should be given credit for all the sums of money paid in on the employee's account. I think the discriminations here are so serious that we ought not to pass much of this measure at this time; I think they are so serious that we might well afford to give many months study, and, perhaps, years of study, before we enter into any such plan.

Now, Mr. President, I want to discuss for a few moments the possibility of creating or maintaining any such reserve fund as is here contemplated. It must be borne in mind that in order to create this fund there must be annual appropriations by Congress. It is contemplated that those annual appropriations shall be the amount of money collected from the employer and the employee; but does anyone doubt that when the Congress comes to these appropriations there would be manipulations so that the fund would not be accumulated but would be used for current expenses of the Government?

Mr. President, we have a fine example of that—very slight, indeed, because of the amount involved—in the case of the civil-service retirement fund. I wonder if Senators realize that, while there is supposed to be something like a billion dollars accumulated in that fund and that the actuaries say there ought to be about a billion dollars accumulated in it, there has been practically nothing accumulated in that fund? I blame no particular person for it; I know when the Government needs money for some purpose the question may readily be asked why should not the Government, when it needs money for other purposes, take out of its till and put in some other place a certain sum of money that is necessary for some retirement fund? There is nothing in the civil-service retirement fund except an I O U. Of course, the I O U is perfectly good; nobody questions that; but I call attention to the seriousness of the situation when it reaches the sum of $47,000,000,000.

May I inquire whether it is recognized to whom this $47,000,000,000 will go? Who is to be in charge of that fund? It is estimated that the persons interested in it will be about 50 percent of the people who are gainfully employed; so somewhere between 25,000,000 and 30,000,000 voters of this Nation will be entitled to that $47,000,000,000. In this democratic form of government, does anybody think that the Congress can resist the demands of those 25,000,000 people with respect to that $47,000,000,000 of money? If we should ever be fortunate enough to accumulate any such fund as that, does anyone doubt that there would be proposals in the Congress to loan to the persons interested certain sums from the amount that has been accumulated? Does anyone doubt that there would be formed all over this land organizations that would want the Congress to give them a part of that $47,000,000,000 before they reached the age of 65? Think for a moment of what would happen in this land of ours if 25,000,000 people at the time the depression hit us had in the till somewhere, $47,000,000,000. Does anyone doubt that such a demand would have been made upon the Congress as would have destroyed the greater portion of that fund?

Mr. President, I submit that in a democratic form of government where a fund is created for the benefit of twenty-five or thirty million people Congress itself would be as helpless as a child, because the man who should not respond to the demand of a group of voters such as that would simply give way to another man who would respond. That has been common experience in this country, and could be demonstrated by precedent after precedent.

Mr. President, I do not wish to take a long time discussing this matter, but I should like to bring some of the facts to the attention of the Senate in order that we may better realize just what we are getting into. I desire to call attention to the cost of this plan. There has been placed on the desk of each Senator, I think, a copy of the "Data requested of the Secretary of the Treasury by Senator JESSE H. METCALF and submitted by the Railroad Retirement Board on June 4, 1935." It is my understanding that this is an official statement of the cost of this proposed plan.

I desire to call attention to certain figures which are supplied in the tables submitted. It will be observed in column 7 that without title II—that is, taking the grants and aids to States on condition that the States will contribute as much as the Federal Government contributes, by 1980, or a period of some 43 years, there will have been expended $39,059,600,000 during that 43-year period. That figure has been described by certain Government officials as being shocking, and it has been stated that we cannot afford any such scheme as that.

In column 8 is given a figure that shows what it will cost if we adopt title II. It must be borne in mind in considering these figures and this estimate that only about 50 percent of the people come under the plan of title II, leaving the other 50 percent of the people to be taken care of as they would be taken care of without title II. There are two estimates of those figures. To the first there is a note attached to column 8 which reads as follows:

Basis A: Estimates of the consulting actuaries of the Committee on Economic Security, assuming (1) old-age-benefit plan similar to that in title II in effect; (2) dependency ratio of 15 percent in 1936, increasing to 20 percent in 1937—

And so forth. The total under that plan is $26,553,200,000.

So assuming these figures to be correct, we should save something like twelve and a half billion dollars during the period of 43 years by taking title II.

Under basis B, column 9, that figure is cut down to $12,072,000,000. Basis B is the estimate of the staff of the Committee on Economic Security.

So we have the consulting actuaries showing a figure of $26,553,200,000, while the staff estimate is $12,072,000,000.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to show in that connection that if we should adopt this plan that would not be the only cost. In column 12 will be found the taxes collected for this purpose, showing the figures for the various years. The total taxes are $78,734,800,000.

I call attention also to column 14, showing that the necessary interest to keep this fund intact is $31,749,900,000.

So while it is true, if it were paid out of the Federal Treasury without title II under the plan of grants and aid, as is provided in a part of the pending bill, assuming these figures to be correct, the total amount necessary to appropriate would be only a little more than $39,000,000,000; but if we take the figures of the consulting actuaries of $26,553,000,000, and add the tax of $78,734,800,000, plus the $31,749,900,000 of interest, we have a sum it can hardly be conceived the American people will be able to pay.

It may be said that it is not fair to use the interest item, but I invite attention to the fact that the tax which will have to be paid by the employer and the employee is money that is being laid out by them, and therefore, if it were not being laid out in this direction, it would earn for them at least 3 percent interest; so that if the actual cost to the people of the United States, to the employers and to the employees of the Nation, is actually $78,000,000,000, plus the nearly $32,000,000,000 of interest, and then we add to that the $26,553,000,000, we have a huge sum.

Mr. President, I made some calculations of what the costs would be. I should like to invite the attention of the Senate to them. If anyone finds that my figures are incorrect, I should like to have my attention called to it. I am speaking only of title II. Nothing I said with respect to expense has anything to do with title III, which refers to unemployment insurance.

Let us take title II alone and assume the figures to be correct. Let us take column 8 as representing the actual expense to the Federal Government, column 12 as being the actual amount of money collected, and column 14 the actual amount of interest to maintain the fund. It will be found that in the year 1950 the tax upon every State in the Union for that year alone would be 30 times the number of people living in each State in the year 1930. That is to say, if we take the State of Mississippi, which has something like 2,000,000 people in it, and assume that that State pays its share, it would cost the people of Mississippi a little more than $60,000,000 for that one year 1950 alone.

What would be the cost of the 15 years between now and 1950? In order to obtain accurate figures, it is necessary to multiply the number of people living in the State in 1930 by 250. If we take Mississippi as an illustration, it would cost the State of Mississippi, assuming that it pays its full share of these expenses, $500,000,000.

If we take the first 44 years, or until 1980, in order to find out what it would cost any particular State for that period, we multiply the number of inhabitants now living in the State by 1,365. If we take the State of Mississippi as an illustration and multiply the inhabitants of Mississippi, 2,000,000 in number, by 1,365, we find that it would cost that State a tremendous sum of money.

On the other hand, if we do not take title II, but take the same figures in order to get the amount of costs in 1950, we multiply the number of inhabitants of the State by 6 as against 30. For the 15 years we multiply by 65 instead of 250. In order to get the total up to 1980 we multiply by 325 instead of by 1,365.

Mr. President, I cannot conceive of this much money being paid for any purpose unless it be a tax upon the consumers of the Nation. As was suggested to me a moment ago, this is a huge sales tax in most instances. Of course, that is not true in some instances, because it is not a direct sales tax, and in a great many instances it will be impossible to pass it along to the farmer or to the other classes of persons who are not to be benefited by the bill. I invite attention to the fact that the farmer who is exempt, the domestic who is exempt from the bill, the other persons who are exempt; namely, about 50 percent of the people of the Nation, will pay no tax and will derive no benefit from the plan, and I ask how anybody expects those people ultimately to escape a tax which every consumer is bound to pay under the plan in one form or another?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Will the able Senator from Delaware permit the Chair to inquire what was the source of the figures called actuarial? Will the Senator state to the Senator from Illinois, who now occupies the chair, through what source those actuarial figures came? What was the source whence the figures actually emanated?

Mr. HASTINGS. The source was a member of the committee, as I recollect. The statement is headed, "Data requested of the Secretary of the Treasury by Senator JESSE H. METCALF and submitted by the Railroad Retirement Board on June 4, 1935." I think it was Mr. Latimer who submitted the figures. There is no question about the accuracy of the figures. I think no one will dispute their correctness.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HASTINGS. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I may say that Mr. Latimer is recognized as probably one of the best actuaries in dealing with labor statistics and annuities in the United States, and is the head of one of the most important boards of the Government.

Mr. HASTINGS. I thank the Senator from Utah.

Mr. President, Mr. M. A. Linton was one of the consulting actuaries and is an outstanding actuary of the country. I desire to quote two or three paragraphs from a speech made by Mr. Linton before the Academy of Political Science in New York, in which he said:

The original bill provided, as has already been pointed out, for a heavy Federal subsidy running over one billion a year for 45 years hence. In order to remove this undesirable feature the Secretary of the Treasury proposed the increased rates of tax embodied in the new bill. The purpose was to "facilitate the continued operation of the system on an adequate and sound financial basis, without imposing heavy burdens upon future generations." The schedule accompanying the Secretary's proposals showed that the deficit had been removed and that by 1980 a reserve fund of nearly 40 billions (assuming inclusion of the same occupation groups as are in the present bill) would have been created.

Let us examine a little more closely into the manner in which the balance was accomplished. Suppose we should start out on the assumption that the pensions we are going to pay to those who are aged 20 or over when the plan starts, will be paid for in full on an actuarial basis by that same group of individuals. That is to say, we shall not attempt to pass on to posterity any part of the cost of these pensions. The adoption of the plan would call for a level contribution from the very start, probably in excess of 8½ percent of pay rolls. The rates of contribution suggested by the Secretary started at 2 percent and increased to 6 percent in 12 years. In view of the higher figure mentioned above, how can the proposed scale of contributions produce a balanced system?

The answer is that after 12 years when the uniform rate will be 6 percent we shall be charging the new workers coming into the system say at age 20, a rate that is upward of 40 percent greater than the true actuarial premium for the benefits they will receive.

When the young men of the future ask why they and their employers should have to pay so large a rate, the answer will be that years before their fathers and grandfathers had made promises to each other which they did not have the money to carry out in full. Therefore, they conveniently decided to pass on the deficiency by assessing a surcharge against their children and grandchildren. When the workers of the future come to appreciate fully the origin of this surcharge, are they not likely to make strenuous efforts to shift it to the general revenue fund?

Mr. President, here is a statement that instead of the amount of 6 percent being all that is required, this actuary—and he is a prominent man in his profession—says that in his judgment it would take 8½ percent; so, notwithstanding the discriminations, notwithstanding the penalizing of the youth for the benefit of the older person, we still shall have not enough tax to take care of this fund.

Mr. President, I do not wish to detain the Senate longer with this matter. I desire, however, to call attention to the unemployment-insurance title.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before he leaves the subject he is discussing?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Unfortunately, I did not hear all of the Senator's address; but I heard his criticism of what he termed a discrimination between the younger workers and the older workers in the disbursement of the old-age fund. The Senator has stated correctly that the older workers will receive a larger share in proportion to their contributions than the younger men. Is it the Senator's view that that difference ought to be made up by an appropriation by the Government?

Mr. HASTINGS. Undoubtedly. Undoubtedly it ought to be done in some other way than this.

Mr. WAGNER. As the Senator remembers, the original bill provided that ultimately, when the deficit should arise because of the higher annuity paid to the older workers, that deficit should be made up by society itself, through the Government, making the contribution. I do not know whether or not the Senator cares to answer the question; but if that change were made in the bill, would the Senator support the proposed legislation?

Mr. HASTINGS. I am not prepared to answer that question directly; but I will say to the Senator that I have said that I should be very much interested if we could work out a plan of a forced annuity, contributed to by the employer and the employee, whereby the fund would go directly, with 3 percent interest, to that particular person. I should be very much interested in that sort of a plan.

Mr. WAGNER. It would be difficult to work out such a plan under a pooling system, but I think the Senator will recognize the fact that it is not really accurate to say that the contribution which the younger worker makes to the fund is used to make up the larger annuity paid to the older worker. It really comes from the part of the fund which is contributed by the employer of the younger worker.

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. I will say to the Senator that I am in sympathy with his criticism, and as I introduced the bill it provided that society itself should make up that difference.

Mr. HASTINGS. I may say to the Senator, in order to meet the objection which the Senator has just suggested, namely, that the employee cannot criticize because part of this fund will have been contributed by somebody else—that, as I stated before, that fact will be ignored by him, because he will say, "In the first place, I never did get enough wages. I ought to have had more wages in the first place. This contribution by my employer was made for my benefit, and I am going to have it." I think that is so serious a matter that I should be inclined to give the employee, say, credit for only 2 percent of what the employer contributed, and use the other 1 percent to make up for the discriminations which are contained in the bill, if I make myself clear.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; I understand the Senator.

Mr. HASTINGS. I would have the employer contribute 1 percent for the general fund in order to get rid of that discrimination. I really think it is a serious matter.

Mr. WAGNER. The reason why I am pressing the question, of course, is that I wished to ascertain whether the Senator was simply attempting to find flaws in the proposed legislation——

Mr. HASTINGS. No.

Mr. WAGNER. Or whether, if this correction were made by restoring the old tax rates, the Senator would support the legislation.

Mr. HASTINGS. No, Mr. President. In the committee the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and many other Senators, largely on the Democratic side, urged that we should not go into the matter of annuity pensions at this time, but that we should wait; that we should separate the subject of annuity pensions from this bill, and take a little more time to study it, and see if we could not work out a plan which would be agreeable to most, if not all, the Members of the Congress.

I am not prepared at this time to say that I should vote for any of these plans, because I have not made up my mind that the Congress has authority to force upon anybody an annuity system of any kind. As I say, I am in general sympathy with the scheme. I think of all things that can be done for a young person, the most important is to have him begin to pay into some kind of a fund that will take care of him in his old age, but to have the Congress of the United States force him to make such payments is so entirely new, and so different from my philosophy of what the Congress has a right to do, that I am not for the moment prepared to approve any plan of that character.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, whether or not we ought to do that in this comprehensive way is an entirely different question. I think the Senator will agree, because of our experience during the past 50 years, that the only way we can ever give the working people of our country, the wage earners and others of low income, assurance against destitution in old age is by some plan which will be of universal application. The Senator knows we have tried the voluntary idea for half a century. Yet at this late day, out of all the working people of the country, there are only 2,000,000 of them who are under voluntary systems. Certainly we must do something for the rest of them sooner or later.

Mr. HASTINGS. Is it not more than 2,000,000?

Mr. WAGNER. Two million, outside of the railway employees—and even they are subjected to the uncertainty that their voluntary systems will be curtailed without notice.

They have no real, permanent security. Furthermore, statistics show that only 4 percent of the small group of retired workers who have been under voluntary pension systems are actually drawing benefits. If we genuinely wish to help provide against destitution in old age, there is no way to do it except by some plan which will be of universal application.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, of course, I know how much interested the Senator from New York has been in this subject for a long while, and I know how very much it appeals to the average citizen to advocate some legislation which will take care of people in their old age.

Mr. President, I shall take only a few moments more. I merely desired to call attention to the great interest the people have in unemployment assurance. I think people generally have reached the conclusion that perhaps we can make some progress by having some kind of unemployment assurance. It has been insisted that the only way in which that can be accomplished is by congressional action, and the scheme and plan contained in title III is the result of that suggestion.

I may call attention to the fact that what we are here endeavoring to do—and I may emphasize that it is different from what we have a right to do under the Constitution of the United States—is to say to the people of a State, "We are going to tax the employers of your State at the rate of 3 percent annually. We are going to give them credit for 90 percent of that tax if they can show to the Federal Government that they have paid in under some State law a sum of money to meet unemployment assurance, and have spent it under the rules and regulations which have been approved by the Federal Government. If they do that they may get credit for 90 percent of the amount they have paid for that purpose. Otherwise, we will take the 100 percent and add it to the funds in the Federal Treasury.

Was any such proposal as that ever made before in any Congress or to a free people anywhere in a democratic form of Government such as our own? What have we to do with what a State does in the matter of taking care of employees in the State when they are out of work? It is replied that when the State cannot do it the Federal Government is compelled to do it, and that that is the necessary excuse. That is not a sufficient excuse. It is a sufficient excuse for us to want to do something, but it does not give us the legal right to force any such plan as that upon the States of this Union.

The Supreme Court has repeatedly said that Congress cannot force upon a State by taxation, or by regulating commerce or what not, something which the Congress thinks a State ought to do for itself. It undoubtedly cannot do it. But that is exactly what we are asked to do under this measure.

There is one reason for it, and it is a very good reason. Unless we can force this upon all the States by punishing them upon their failure to adopt the plan by imposing a tax upon employers within their borders it will be found that the various industries in one State which provides for the tax cannot compete with those in some other State which does not impose the tax, which, by the way, is a further demonstration that all this tax is passed on to the consumer. That is a reasonable excuse for this legislation. But it seems to me that the sooner we realize the limitations upon our own power, the sooner we realize that there are still existing 48 independent States in the Union which have a right to control their internal affairs, the sooner we will get away from this kind of legislation and this kind of trouble for the Congress.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to ask the Senator with regard to the old-age pensions for those who are now 65 years of age. As I understand the plan, the Government would make an allowance of $15 per person to be matched against $15 by the State.

Mr. HASTINGS. Is the Senator speaking of title II or of title I? There are two titles which relate to old-age pensions. One is the provision whereby the Federal Government would contribute $15 if the States contributed $15.

Mr. BORAH. That is the one to which I have reference, that is, in regard to people who are now 65 years of age.

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. And who have no opportunity to share in the contribution which will be made in the future.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand it, the Government would contribute $15, provided the State contributed $15. If the State did not contribute $15, or some amount, then there would be no contribution at all.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct.

Mr. BORAH. In other words, there will be no contribution except as it depends upon the contribution made by the State.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct.

Mr. BORAH. And at the utmost, if the State contributes in full, the contribution will be only $30 per person.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct.

Mr. BORAH. Is the Senator advised as to how many States are now contributing as much as $15 for old-age pensions, how many States have laws providing for that amount?

Mr. HASTINGS. I think it is something like 23. The figure is stated somewhere in the RECORD.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, if I may volunteer the information, 35 States have enacted old-age-pension laws under which they contribute toward the support of dependent old persons, and different ages are provided—in some States 70 years and in others 65. I think there are but two or three States which contribute more than $15 a month, and the majority of the States now, I think, are contributing less than $15 a month.

Mr. BORAH. In other words, in that condition of affairs, there would be no allowance for old-aged persons in those States at all?

Mr. WAGNER. I did not catch the question.

Mr. BORAH. Where a State made no allowance, then the allowance made by the National Government would not be available?

Mr. WAGNER. That is correct.

Mr. BORAH. As a practical proposition, then, this measure does not really make any provision at all for a very large number of old-aged people.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, it has always been regarded as an obligation of the States to take care of the old people in the States. This is the first time it has ever been proposed that the Federal Government aid the States in taking care of old people, and to that extent it is a new venture by the Federal Government.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I may say to the Senator from Idaho that the theory is that the other States will come into the plan when there is a Federal law. Of course, if a State has no old-age-pension system, the Federal Government cannot contribute toward maintaining the old people in that State.

Mr. BORAH. I understand that perfectly; nevertheless, the fact is that no provision is being made for a very large number of old-aged people as the laws stand in the States now.

Mr. WAGNER. Perhaps adequate provision is not made. Thirty-five States are attempting to meet their obligations by taking care of old-aged dependents, some at the age of 65 and others at the age of 70, but in recent years, because of the depression, the amounts which the States have contributed have been somewhat reduced. The obligation to take care of the old people has always been regarded as an obligation of the States themselves, and the Federal Government, recognizing that they have had difficulties in raising the money, due to the depression, is for the first time in our history proposing to match the State contributions toward taking care of old people. So it is a step forward, and we are hopeful, of course, as the Senator from Texas has said, that the States which have not inaugurated systems for taking care of the old will enact legislation so as to get the benefit of the Federal contribution.

If I may, speaking to the Senator in terms of actual amounts spent, there is now being spent by the States for this purpose a little less than $40,000,000.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. As an instance, my State has no old-age-pension system, but I think this year the people are voting on a constitutional amendment providing for such a system, and I anticipate that other States will follow through if this measure shall become a law. The Senator from Idaho is correct in assuming that for the immediate present there will be a large number of old-aged persons who will not receive any grant out of the Treasury.

Mr. BORAH. Undoubtedly there are a number of States which are not prepared financially to take care of old-age pensions at this time. There are States which the National Government is assisting in carrying their burdens, with reference to relief, and so forth.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; they are.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me we ought to take into consideration the fact that, so far as the people who are now 65 years of age are concerned, this measure is not and should not be regarded wholly as a pension proposition. These old people, at the end of 4 or 5 years of depression, with all means exhausted, are in a condition where they must be taken care of, and to make a Federal contribution of $15 a month dependent on whether the States are able to contribute $15 in addition does not seem to me to be meeting the situation.

There is a question of relief here, as well as the question of pensions, because it is now the effort of the Government to take these people from the relief rolls, and I am advised that hundreds of thousands of them will go back into the miserable poorhouses, county farms, where the living is of the most meager kind. Does not the Senator from New York, who has given so much time to this matter, and understands it so well, think that we ought in this provision of the bill to take into consideration something other than the general principles which obtain with reference to security legislation?

I know perfectly well that there will be hundreds of thousands of old people who will really die of nonnutrition if more is not done for them than would be done under the pending measure.

Would it not be practicable to make a better allowance, and not make the additional allowance dependent wholly upon State action? Let the State make an allowance equal to, say, $15 if it can, because most of the States are unable to go beyond that, and let the National Government make an additional allowance, which it will take out for a limited number of years without any other allowance by the State.

Mr. GEORGE. I was going to make the suggestion that at least the Federal Government might take care of that full pension for a limited period of years, until the States were in position and had by appropriate legislation been able to set up the old-age-pension laws, even if for no more than for 2 or 3 years.

Mr. BORAH. I think something of that kind ought to be done.

Mr. WAGNER. May I make this suggestion to the Senator: Thirty-three States have already set up machinery to take care of their dependent old people. So there are only 15 States that have done nothing.

Mr. BORAH. Fifteen States.

Mr. WAGNER. But the Federal Government is taking care of those not under State law, for the period of time which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] suggests, by direct relief, and in addition the Federal Government is now supplementing local efforts by helping a great many of the old people in all the States. The provisions of this bill are designed to add to these efforts and also to act as an incentive to the States to be a little more generous in the care of their old by matching their efforts dollar for dollar. This proposal is much more than the Federal Government ever contemplated before the serious depression.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BONE in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I also wish to attract the attention of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. As I understand, this bill purports to give a pension to those who are on charity. I have received statistics from the Census Bureau by which I will show that those who are actually dependent upon charity will by the provisions of this bill receive out of the Federal Treasury about 60 cents a month. I have statistics to show that this is not a pension at all. This is not much more than a paupers' bill.

Mr. BORAH. May I say to the Senator from New York that it has been brought to my attention that a number of these elderly people, 65 years of age, at the end of 4 or 5 years of depression have now been turned back to the counties and to the States; they have been taken off relief; the State has been asked to take care of them, and the county has been asked to take care of them, and the county and the State are undertaking to take care of them by means of the poor farm, and so forth. That leads me to believe that the National Government ought to do more than to make a contribution of $15 a month and make that dependent upon the proposition of the State also putting up $15, because there is an element of relief in this matter, aside from the question of preparing a general scheme of security.

Mr. WAGNER. I agree absolutely with the Senator from Idaho, and the Senator knows that I would be willing to go as far as anyone in this body. Perhaps whatever criticism has been directed at me has been due to the fact that I have been anxious to do too much in that regard.

Mr. BORAH. I am addressing myself to the Senator for that reason.

Mr. WAGNER. In the first place, the Senator from Louisiana says that these people are upon charity. But the States which have passed pension laws and called them pension laws do not want to regard these old people as being subjects of charity. Perhaps in a technical sense they are. But they are citizens of the State who in their days of age have met with adversity, and the State has assumed the obligation of taking care of them because of their claim upon the State to which they have made their great contributions by creating wealth in their prime.

We do not call this charity in New York, nor do they do so in any of the other States. We have to rely upon the States to ascertain who these people are who require aid, and the 33 States which have enacted pension laws have the machinery with which they ascertain this fact. As fast as the States ascertain that there are more who need this help the Federal Government will certainly increase its assistance in proportion.

I know of no method by which the Federal Government can go around the country to ascertain where these people are. We must rely upon the State machinery.

We are now saying to the States, "You have the machinery. By passing your laws you have said in a definite manner that you regard it as an obligation to take care of these people without throwing them into the poorhouse; and insofar as you assume that obligation, we will give you a dollar for every dollar that you spend.

I think that is going to be an incentive throughout the country to take better care of them. It has been suggested that some of the States, who now contribute over $15 per month to the dependent old, will reduce their contributions to the $15 level that is to be matched by Federal contributions. I cannot believe that any State will be so ungenerous as that, and I think that whatever the Federal Government gives will be added to that which the States are already doing for their aged people.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, of course the State has the machinery, and of course the State can ascertain the number of persons who are entitled to relief, but the State does not have the money.

Mr. WAGNER. The States have been making contributions.

Mr. BORAH. We know perfectly well that we are aiding States to take care of their educational systems, and their teachers, and everything else; and we know that under those circumstances they do not have the means to take care of these old people. These old people are people who have made those States, in a large measure. Out through the Northwest they are the pioneers, they are the men and women who built those Commonwealths, and because the State is not able to take care of them they must now go to a county farm. If we are going into this thing at all, if the National Government is going to take hold of it, let the National Government make a provision which will take care of these old people during this depression, and not be bound by the theory of a permanent scheme of national security.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that, so far as the emergency period is concerned, the Federal Government has been helping all of the States to take care of their old people. It will continue to do so. But this bill provides a permanent plan in addition to what we have been doing during the emergency period.

I hope that the time will come shortly when we shall give these old people even more. However, there is nothing in this bill to prevent the States from taking care of their dependent old persons as well as they can. I have not heard the complaint from many States that they are not able to carry the load.

Mr. BORAH. Neither the States nor the National Government is generous when it stops at $30, when both pay to make up that amount, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. RUSSELL rose.

Mr. BORAH. Did the Senator from Georgia wish to ask a question?

Mr. RUSSELL. In line with the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho that many of the States are unable at this time to contribute to the old-age-pension fund, I will say that the State which I have the honor in part to represent, under its constitution cannot levy taxes for this purpose. The purposes for which taxes may be levied in the State of Georgia are enumerated in the constitution, and the payment of the old-age pension is not included therein. It will be necessary to amend the constitution, and that cannot be done until the next general election, so the people may pass upon it. But as the Federal Government is now turning back to the States and the counties all of the unemployables in the State, the old people who are unable to work, and the ones most deserving, as indicated by the Senator from Idaho, the State is absolutely powerless to levy a tax to raise funds for paying these people any pension whatever.

Therefore, the people in my State will be taxed in part for over something like 2 years to provide these funds for old-age pensions, and until the State constitution is amended cannot secure a single cent from the Federal Treasury to supplement the State funds, for the State funds cannot be provided.

I have prepared an amendment which I propose to offer at the proper time, which will require for a period of 2 years from the time this act goes into effect that the Federal Government will make this contribution of $15 without regard to any action on the part of the States.

Mr. BORAH. Let us not confine it to $15. That is just slow death.

Mr. RUSSELL. I shall be glad in joining the Senator from Idaho in making it a larger sum, but I should like to have something done so that the people will not starve when the State is powerless to help them. I should like to have contributed to my State as much as the amount of relief contributed by the Federal Government to the other States.

Mr. WAGNER. I wonder if the Senator is not referring to the Governor of his State, who has been criticizing whatever appropriations we have made here to help the unfortunate in his State.

Mr. RUSSELL. The views of the Governor of the State on old-age pensions does not reflect the views of the people of the State.

Mr. WAGNER. I am glad to hear the Senator say that.

Mr. RUSSELL. As a matter of fact, at its last session the general assembly voted for a constitutional amendment providing for old-age pensions. The bill passed the house of representatives by a vote of 165 to 1. The bill also passed through the senate with the required two-thirds majority. The Governor undertook to veto the proposed constitutional amendment. That will have to be fought out in the State courts to see if the matter is to be submitted to the people at the next election. Regardless of the outcome of the matter, the people of the State could not avail themselves of the benefit of this measure before 1937, following the election of 1936, when the legislature meets again.

Mr. BORAH. I am not interested in local politics in this situation.

Mr. RUSSELL. Neither am I interested in local politics, and I did not inject that question, but I am tremendously interested in seeing that the aged and afflicted and those powerless to assist themselves in my State are given the same benefits and advantages as are accorded the people of other States under the terms of this bill. They should not be penalized. Because of the constitutional inhibition, the State is powerless, and had it not been for constitutional provisions the general assembly might have passed the bill over the veto of the Governor, but it was necessary to amend the constitution. The legislature did all that was in their power to do.

Mr. BORAH. The question of centralization of power does not arise, because there is just as much centralization of power in contributing $15 as there is in contributing $30. We have undertaken to do that; that is now in the bill. So the only question here for discussion is whether we are taking care of the situation in dollars and cents. There is no question of constitutional authority so far as this particular point is concerned, because that is covered by the fact that we have already provided for $15; and the question that I am now raising is, assuming that we are going to help, assuming that the National Government is going to take part in this matter, and assuming that the National Government is going to assist the States, the question is, Are we going to assist them sufficiently to enable the old people to live? That is the only question here. I do not think it takes care of them. I ask the able Senator from New York and the able Senator from Mississippi, who is in charge of this bill, and other Senators, who, as I know, are in full sympathy with this proposition, Are we going to be satisfied to allow only $15 a month, with the uncertainty as to whether the States will put up anything, and, therefore, have nothing come of it, or are we going to make a provision which will guarantee these old people at least a sufficient amount to keep them from actually dying of starvation or neglect?

Mr. WAGNER. I may say to the Senator that he is not accurate in saying that the States will not make any contributions, and that therefore the old people will receive nothing. As I tried to emphasize previously, there are 33 States that are already contributing.

Mr. BORAH. I am referring to the States that do not. In those 15 States we will have no help for them whatever.

Mr. WAGNER. I will repeat what I have heretofore said, that I made inquiry as to all that, and I ascertained that in all the States during this emergency period the Federal Government has been granting relief to take care of old people. How much they are receiving I am not able to say, but the Federal Government has not abandoned them entirely, even in those cases where the State has been unable to do anything at all.

Mr. BORAH. I am advised that the Federal Government has notified the local authorities that they must take care of a certain class of people, including the old people, and that, under the program which has been worked out during the last few months, these people are now dependent upon the States, and they are going back to the county farm or to the poorhouse and to similar places in order that they may be taken care of.

If these were normal times, and if the States were in a normal condition, if they were in a position to raise the money, I would feel entirely different about it; I would feel that they ought to do it; but when we ourselves are contributing for such things as educational purposes, slum clearance, and so forth, that I know the States are not in a position to do their local work. We have already crossed that bridge; we have already passed over the proposition that we are going to help them. Now the question is, Are we going to help them sufficiently?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BORAH. I yield the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I desire to offer the amendment which I sent to the desk earlier today, and I ask the clerk to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed by Mr. LONG to amend the bill as follows:

First. On page 2, lines 3 and 4, after the word "assistance", strike out the comma and the following words: "as far as practicable under the conditions in such State."

Second. On page 2, line 4, strike out the word "needy."

Third. On page 2, line 7, strike out the figures "$49,750,000", and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$3,600,000,000."

Fourth. Beginning with line 15 on page 2, strike out all the balance of page 2, and all of pages 3, 4, 5, and 6, down to and including line 14 on page 7, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 2. From the sums appropriated therefor the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State for each quarter, beginning with the quarter commencing July 1, 1935, such proportion of the amount appropriated as the number of persons over the age of 60 in such State shall be to the total number of persons over the age of 60 in the United States, to be calculated according to the latest official reports of the United States census. That the same shall be remitted to each State solely on condition that it make due and legal provision to pay the same in equal sums to all persons in the said State who are over 60 years of age and whose net income during the preceding 12 months was less than $500, or whose ownership and possession of property is of a value less than $3,000; and nothing hereby provided shall prevent any State or subdivision thereof from providing additional pension to any person from the revenues of such State or subdivision thereof.

Seventh. On page 16, beginning with line 16, strike out down to and including line 21 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 301. For the purpose of enabling each State to furnish financial assistance to persons who are unemployed and who receive no benefits under title I of this bill, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $1,000,000,000, and for each fiscal year thereafter the sum of $1,000,000,000 to be used as hereinafter provided.

Eighth. On page 17, beginning with line 9, strike out the following:

The Board shall not certify for payment under this section in any fiscal year a total amount in excess of the amount appropriated therefor for such fiscal year.

Ninth. On page 19, line 24, after the word "State", change the period to a semicolon and add the following:

Provided, That the said State agency shall have right to contest any and all findings of such Board in a suit filed in a United States district court in the said State.

Tenth. On page 20, line 11, strike out the figures "$24,750,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000,000,000."

Eleventh. On page 20, line 13, strike out the words "a sum sufficient" and insert in lieu thereof the words "an equal sum."

Twelfth. On page 21, line 6, after the word "agency", strike out the semicolon and insert the following: "with right to appeal to the courts of the State;".

Thirteenth. On page 21, line 22, beginning with the figure "(1)", strike out the figure "(1)", and all of line 23 and 24, and lines 1, 2, and 3 on page 22.

Fourteenth. On page 22, line 10, strike out the word "one-third" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three-fourths."

Fifteenth. On page 23, line 5, strike out the word "two-thirds" and insert in lieu thereof the word "one-fourth."

Sixteenth. On page 24, line 25, after the word "State", change the period to a semicolon and insert the following: "the said State agency shall have the right to contest in a district court of the United States the action of the said Secretary of Labor to be filed in such court in the State wherein said State board may be domiciled."

Seventeenth. Beginning on page 44, strike out all of title VIII, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

TITLE VIII. REVENUES FOR PURPOSES HEREIN PROVIDED

SECTION 1. In addition to other taxes levied and collected there shall be annually levied, collected, and paid upon the wealth or property owned by every individual a tax thereon in accordance with the following provisions, viz:

(a) One percent on the value in excess of $1,000,000 and up to and including $2,000,000.

(b) Two percent on the value in excess of $2,000,000 and up to and including $3,000,000.

(c) Four percent on the value in excess of $3,000,000 and up to and including $4,000,000.

(d) Eight percent on the value in excess of $4,000,000 and up to and including $5,000,000.

(e) Sixteen percent on the value in excess of $5,000,000 and up to and including $6,000,000.

(f) Thirty-two percent on the value in excess of $6,000,000 and up to and including $7,000,000.

(g) Sixty-four percent on the value in excess of $7,000,000 and up to and including $8,000,000.

(h) Ninety-nine percent on the value in excess of $8,000,000.

SEC. 2. The said taxes shall be levied and collected annually, shall further allow to the taxpayer the opportunity to make payment of the same in cash or in kind, and the Treasury shall make disposition and handle the same in accordance and subject to the provisions contained in said title IX.

SEC. 3. Such sums as are collected hereby as are in excess of the requirements under the provisions of this act shall be used for the other lawful purposes of government, to include future legislation of Congress to provide the families of the United States with reasonable homesteads and the comforts thereof.

Eighteenth. Beginning on page 52, line 8, strike out all of title IX.

FORCE OR LAW BRING ABOUT REDISTRIBUTION OF WEALTH

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not certain whether the Senator from Louisiana is in order in speaking on his amendment or amendments for the reason that under the agreement to consider committee amendments first, title XI, which is the committee amendment, has not yet been disposed of. The Chair wonders what the Senator from Mississippi desires to do in that connection?

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection to considering the amendments as a whole so we may get them out of the way. I ask unanimous consent that they may be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana desire to have his amendments considered en bloc?

Mr. LONG. I would.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BORAH. Does considering them as a whole, or en bloc, mean that the amendments are not subject to amendment?

Mr. LONG. They are subject to amendment, of course; but it means they will all be considered as one amendment. As a matter of fact, it is the same principle throughout.

Mr. President, I shall show that what is proposed by the present bill is an impossibility, impossible in any respect either on the law or on the facts. I shall show that what I am proposing is feasible, practicable, constitutional, and workable.

In the first place, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] made a statement to which I wish to refer for just a moment. If we are going to provide an old-age pension, then let us provide a sum sufficient to pay old-age pensions. I do not agree that the pension should start at age 65, nor was that the position of the President of the United States. He thought it ought to begin at 60, and everyone else I ever heard of has always stated 60 years would be the age at which to start payment of a pension. I never heard of it being placed at 65 years of age until the bill came before us.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. Most of the State laws which I have examined provide for a pension beginning at the age of 70.

Mr. LONG. I have tried to explain to my friend from New York that while they may be called "pension" laws, yet they are "pauper" laws.

Mr. WAGNER. The States do not agree with the Senator.

Mr. LONG. But the dictionary does. I hate to refer to any man as a pauper, but the facts are, if I may be permitted to have the attention of Senators, that if we have a law which requires a man to prove himself to be destitute and needy before he can get any allowance, we compel him to admit or, indeed, to claim that he is a pauper. It is not a pension law. We pension the judges of the courts for the services which they previously rendered, whether they have any money or not. We pension soldiers of the Spanish-American and Civil Wars whether they have any money or not. That is a pension. But when we provide by law that a man must prove himself to be destitute or to be needy before he can get any money, and only that man is permitted to get any money under the law, then it becomes only a pauper law.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I am anxious to understand clearly the Senator's amendment. The Senator would take those over 60 years of age——

Mr. LONG. No. If the Senator will listen he will get it all straight in a minute. The Senator from New York will not listen to me as long as I have listened to him if he listens to everything I say. I am satisfied, too, that he will not get as much good as I do.

Mr. President, there are 10,385,120 persons over the age of 60 in the United States. I need only refer to Government compilations and the statement of the Senator from New York. Of this number there are 96 percent whose earning capacity is below that which enables them to live on a normal-subsistence basis. In other words, 96 percent of our entire population earn less than a subsistence wage of this kind. That is one thing on which we agree. I shall give the Senator better figures than that. I shall give some figures which have been published by life-insurance companies. The only thing I have now are some figures which I clipped out of an insurance publication. This reads:

What happens to the average man of 25 upon reaching the age of 65? Only one will be wealthy.

We had considerable trouble locating this advertisement. I thought I could get it by telephoning the insurance companies, but I learned that they claimed they did not have it or they had forgotten all about it. I am sure they were in good faith. I located it because it had been recopied in a well-known newspaper in this country. Then I telephoned the insurance companies and they said they would be able to send the entire statistics in a short time. I read this again:

Only one will be wealthy. Four will be well to do and able to enjoy comfort and recreation. Five will be working for a living with no prospect of relief from drudgery. Thirty-five will have died, in many cases leaving a family in need of some assistance. Fifty-five will be dependent upon friends or relatives for charity.

Of all those about 65 or 70 years of age who are left alive, 55 will be dependent upon charity. This was a statistical compilation made during pretty good times. The condition is much worse now, because our own data show it is somewhere around 96 percent of our people who are earning below a subsisting living.

If we are going to pay a pension that is going to amount to anything, certainly we ought not to begin a pension too far away from the average unemployable age. Fifty years of age is almost an unemployable age, except for men of talent and skill, and I do not mean manual skill. Sixty years of age at the very worst is the furthest age at which we should consider awarding a pension. I am going to argue this on the basis of 60 years of age, and then I am going to argue it on the basis of 65 years of age, and I shall show how impossible the whole scheme is on the basis of either 60 or 65 years of age.

Let us, for the purpose of argument, not count the 385,000, because most of them are dead by now, having gone through some of the years 1933 or 1934 or a part of 1935. Thus there would be 10,000,000 people drawing $49,000,000 a year out of the Federal Treasury. Deducting one-third—which is more than the census shows and which is more than the life-insurance companies show—deducting from the 10,000,000 people one-third, who are either wealthy or able to take care of themselves, would mean that $49,000,000 a year, or $4,000,000 a month, would pay those left about 56 cents per month apiece.

If the entire $49,000,000 which is covered in the bill is going to those found to be needy by the statistics of the Government and by the statistics of private people and by the statistics of the life-insurance companies, we would pay them about 56 cents per month out of the United States Treasury if we gave a so-called "pension" to everybody who is 60 years of age or over. Of course, it might be $1 if we raised it to 65 years of age; it might be $2 if we raised it to 70 years of age; it might be $3 if we raised it to 75 years of age, or $4 if we raised it to 85 years of age. I am talking about an age when a pension should start. I shall prove in a moment that raising it to 65 years of age would still leave an impossible situation under the bill.

There is only one way we are going to be able to pay a pension. We cannot pay it from ordinary sources of taxation. The United States Government cannot support a pension law from the ordinary sources of taxation which now prevail. It is impossible to do it. The United States Government cannot today pay its own costs of operation from present resources, to say nothing of the bonds which it has accumulated for payment in the future. The United States Government cannot support any kind of worth-while pension project unless there is revenue to be raised from some source not yet tapped, and a material source at that. I have advocated raising income taxes, but that will not bring in so much more; in fact, really not near enough when compared to what will be needed.

We have only one process by which we can raise a sufficient amount of money to support a pension plan, a pension plan that is worth anything to the country, and that is by a capital-levy tax.

So, therefore, I have proposed a substitute in these words: Instead of paying 60 cents a month, as the payment would be, to everybody 60 years of age and over who needs a pension, I propose to pay around $30 to $35 a month to those who should have a pension. Instead of requiring a State to put up $15 a month, I propose that the Federal Government shall pay from $30 to $35 a month. If a State government is not able to put up anything, that will not deprive a man or woman of getting his pension; and if a State government is able to put up an adequate amount, the State, if it can do so, may augment the Federal contribution and give more than $30 to $35 a month pension to people more than 60 years of age.

As an example, I state as a conservative statement that more than one-half the States in the Union have proved that they cannot pay any substantial sum whatever as a pension. Why? Because they are having to rely upon the gratuity of the Federal Government to keep their schools open. They are having to rely upon the Federal Treasury for unemployment relief. They are having to rely upon the Federal Treasury for the most ordinary kind of revenue to support the State government. Talk about making the State treasury match the contribution of the Federal Treasury in order to get relief! We might as well say that they have to discontinue caring for the blind, the deaf, the dumb, the insane, the crippled, and those who are in the public hospitals. School facilities and things of that kind would have to be curbed if that were done, because there is practically no State in America which is operating within its budget at the present time.

Therefore, if we say to a State, "We are willing to give you Federal help for an old-age pension provided you match that help", we are the same as saying to the State, "You have either a physical impossibility in one direction or an impracticability in another direction, because you have to curtail some of the expenditures you are now making in order that you may match the Federal funds."

I doubt if any of the Western States, probably outside of California, could make this payment. I doubt if any of the Southern States could make this payment if there is a reasonable pension paid. My State, the State of Louisiana, is in a little bit better shape than the average Southern State, as I said the other day, because of natural resources which we have. We have there, as is well known, probably the world's greatest supply of sulphur and salt. We likewise have oil and gas deposits, and various and sundry ores that are found in our State, which make it possible for Louisiana to bear burdens which other States cannot bear. But if the State of Louisiana today were called upon, according to the life-insurance companies' statistics, to put up $15 a month for every man over 60 years of age who, by the records we now have, is shown to be dependent on charity for support, the State of Louisiana would have to give more money than its entire taxing resources amount to at the present time. We should have to double the present taxes in the State of Louisiana if we were to pay $15 a month to every man who is over 60 years of age, who is to some extent dependent upon charity for a living, either of outsiders or of his own immediate relatives. If we were to undertake to take care of the whole of that class of people at $15 a month, the State of Louisiana would have to double its taxing resources in order to pay the amount that would be required, and it is not possible for that State to do it; and if it is not possible for that State to do it, then I know it is not possible for any other Southern State to do it.

Mr. President, I desire to make this further correction in the bill: I wish to speak of the unemployment feature, and ask the Senate to consider what I am saying as a whole.

In the unemployment feature there is donated a sum of about $24,000,000, perhaps $40,000,000—I do not state what the figures are; I could run through the bill and get them—but, at any rate, there is some small sum appropriated by the Federal Government for unemployment relief. Why, Mr. President, if this is going to be an unemployment bill at all, what good is it going to do to appropriate $49,000,000 to take care of unemployment when we are already appropriating $5,000,000,000 to take care of unemployment for the year 1935 and 1936? If we are having to appropriate a billion, two billion, three billion, four billion, up to five billion, and perhaps $6,000,000,000 for the purpose of taking care of unemployment in the year 1935 and part of the year 1936, what assurance have we that forty-nine or fifty million dollars or $24,000,000 is going to be sufficient for that purpose in 1936?

I propose that the States shall not have to match that money. We propose in the bill which has been submitted by the Finance Committee, known as the "administration bill", that a State shall get Federal unemployment money provided the State matches it dollar for dollar. The State cannot match it dollar for dollar now. The State never will be able to match it dollar for dollar. The State has not the taxing resources upon which it can depend to raise any such amount of money as that. Therefore, unemployment relief must of necessity be enjoyed, so far as concerns the assistance of the Government, by a relatively small number of the people who are entitled to it.

The next amendment which I propose is one which would take out of the hands of Federal bureaus the power arbitrarily and for their own purposes to cut off a State from old-age pension relief, or from unemployment relief, or from dependent-children aid and relief. By the bill which is now presented here, whenever the Federal bureau setup here in Washington find in their minds sufficient reason as to why a State should not be allowed to have any more pension aid, or any more unemployment aid, or any other aid of that kind or character, all they have to do is to notify the State that they consider that it has breached one of the rules of the bureau or one of the laws of Congress, and thereupon, ipso facto, they cut them off the list and decline to send them any money at all.

As the bill is now presented to the Senate, that leaves it within the sole jurisdiction of that particular bureau to do whatever it wishes to do. I add to this provision a further clause that whenever any board handling unemployment-relief funds, handling dependent-aid-for-children funds, or handling old-age-pension funds decided that a State ought to be cut off from any further relief the State shall have a right to take the case into court, and if the board is acting arbitrarily or unreasonably or without right, the State shall have a right to contest and annual the suspension order which prevents the State from having the relief.

Gentlemen of the Senate, that is not an unreasonable thing. That is a very much needed thing. Regardless of whether the Democratic Party or the Republican Party is in power, the time will come, as it always has come, when arbitrary actions and arbitrary orders of boards and bureaus and commissions and bureaucrats will have to be suspended by lawful processes of the courts. Otherwise we shall have an arbitrary rule which will become the standard, instead of a judicial and a righteous and a justifiable rule.

I now come to page 44 of the bill. I propose to strike out titles VIII and IX. Titles VIII and IX of the bill prescribe the revenue which is to be raised in order to carry out unemployment relief. I desire to refer to those provisions briefly.

I turn over to page 44 of the bill, and I find that a very unusual set of taxes is proposed.

The bill proposes to tax those who are employed, and also, in addition to the other provisions that require the State to levy taxes, provides for the levying of certain taxes by the Federal Government. Bear in mind that in order for the State government to contribute its part to this Federal relief program, the State government has to levy a tax for every one of these things. The State has to find some new sort of a State tax, because there is no State today which has the revenues that would be required to carry out the purposes of this bill any more than those purposes are now being carried out by the States. The State will have to raise additional revenue. Therefore there are two forms of taxes. First, the State must provide a tax for all that is in addition to what it is now raising in the few States that now make provision for paupers. I mean by that, today I understand the States are raising $49,000,000.

If they provide any more money than $49,000,000—which, as I have previously proved, is an infinitesimal sum—if they provide any money at all for unemployment, if they provide for dependent aid for children, or any of these things for which provision is made, the States will have to levy a tax with which to do it. The State of Louisiana must levy a tax; the State of Arkansas must levy a tax; the State of Mississippi must levy a tax; the State of South Carolina must levy a tax; the State of North Carolina must levy a tax; the State of Iowa must levy a tax. Every one of the 48 States of the American Union will have to levy a tax inside its borders in order to make the necessary contribution to the Federal relief program in order to get any money at all out of the Federal plan.

If the States are not only unable to levy any taxes for that purpose but if they are not even able to levy enough taxes to support their schools, if they are not able to levy enough taxes to support their hospitals, if they are not now able to levy enough taxes to take care of their own domestic affairs as they are now being handled, and if every one of the States, or nearly every one of them, is living at a rate that does not even provide for a balanced budget—if all of the States are piling up deficit after deficit at the present time in caring for things now committed to them, how can we expect the States of the American Union to levy any more taxes, and upon whom are they to levy these taxes?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to ask this of the Senator from Louisiana; what will be the annual cost of administering this fund under the Senator's plan?

Mr. LONG. The whole plan?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; how many billions a year would it cost?

Mr. LONG. Somewhere near six billion.

Mr. TYDINGS. Six billion a year?

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. That would be in addition, of course, to the regular expenses of the Government as we now have them?

Mr. LONG. No; I would judge this would eliminate about all of the present relief expenditures.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not include the emergency funds. So that we would need, in round numbers, from nine to ten billion dollars a year upon which to operate the Federal Government in order to carry out the Senator's plan?

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I understand it—and I recite my figures from memory—the national income is around fifty or sixty billion dollars a year.

Mr. LONG. It was forty-two billion last year.

Mr. TYDINGS. From the forest, the factory, the mine, and the farm. That means, then, that the Federal Government alone would take the equivalent of one-fifth, or 20 percent, of all the earnings of everybody in the country spreading it pro rata first of all, for the purpose of the illustration. Is that correct?

Mr. LONG. It would be as much as that; but it does not take the earnings, of course.

Mr. TYDINGS. I understand. The Senator's plan is, instead of raising the money in the present manner, to raise it by inheritance taxes or by a capital levy?

Mr. LONG. A capital levy.

Mr. TYDINGS. What I am interested in at this point is ascertaining whether the Senator has figures to show how long it would be if we make a capital levy, and then another year made a capital levy, and then another year make another capital levy before the fortunes in the higher brackets, which, under the impulse of the plan as originally put out, would pay a considerable amount, would be diminished.

Mr. LONG. They would be diminished.

Mr. TYDINGS. At what point would the larger fortunes of the country be stabilized?

Mr. LONG. I should say in about 8 years.

Mr. TYDINGS. What would be the maximum amount of money any person would be able to have, under the Senator's plan?

Mr. LONG. About two and a half million dollars.

Mr. TYDINGS. After we get down to two and a half millions, which is the outside amount any one individual might have——

Mr. LONG. After about 8 years, I should say.

Mr. TYDINGS. What amount of taxes would have to be levied on the two and a half million in order to raise the nine to ten billion dollars a year necessary to operate the Federal Government?

Mr. LONG. In the words of the Lord, we would not have to raise any.

Mr. TYDINGS. I can see how the Senator's plan would work the first 2 or 3 years; he has already anticipated my question by agreeing that the larger fortunes would be diminished.

Mr. LONG. That is right.

Mr. TYDINGS. Now I am trying to find out how the plan would work after the larger fortunes had been diminished.

Mr. LONG. I shall be glad to come to that now. I had intended to come to it later, but since the Senator has raised the question, I will explain it right now.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator——

Mr. LONG. I shall be glad to explain it right now.

Mr. TYDINGS. The question arose in my mind from the fact that I do not see how some of the States, as the Senator himself has pointed out, can raise the sums of money necessary to make the proposed plan effective.

Mr. LONG. They cannot.

Mr. TYDINGS. In many of the States already the Federal Government is really carrying a large part of the load. If the States cannot match the plan, and the plan of the Senator is not feasible for one reason or another, it strikes me that if the proposed act is to have real effect some means of raising the money will have to be found other than taxing the States to put up 50 percent.

Mr. LONG. The Senator is right, and I think I can explain to the Senator very readily the answer to the question he has asked.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator mind my asking another question, rather than wait for an answer?

Mr. LONG. I am glad to have the Senator ask his question.

Mr. TYDINGS. Perhaps the Senator can develop the whole thing at one time. How many people in the United States would have two and a half million dollars' worth of property after the Senator's plan had been in effect 10 years, as near as he can estimate?

Mr. LONG. There would be a much larger number of millionaires than at the present time. This is only a guess, but I should say there would be four times the number of millionaires there are now.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator feels that through a capital levy and expenditures of the money the opportunities for doing business would be increased?

Mr. LONG. There is no question about that.

Mr. TYDINGS. So that more people would earn more money and less people would earn less money?

Mr. LONG. The figures show that.

Mr. TYDINGS. Has the Senator any illustration in history where this has been done successfully?

Mr. LONG. I have the illustration of a few years back in the United States, when we had a little bit less centralization of wealth, and our national income was around $95,000,000,000. I have the national surveys conducted under the joint authority of the F. E. R. A. and the housing authorities, which show that there actually was an income of $4,317 average per family available.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me ask the Senator this question, and I am not taking issue with him. I am trying to develop his thought, because he has spoken of this several times——

Mr. LONG. Several hundred times.

Mr. TYDINGS. And this question has always been in my mind. Suppose the Senator were wrong in assuming that more people would have $2,500,000 than he supposes would have that sum. Where would we get the revenue in case his calculation miscarried, to carry on this plan, after the capital levy had mowed down the larger fortunes?

Mr. LONG. I am coming to all that.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me say, in connection with this, that the Senator must realize that the $3,500,000,000 of normal expenditures which we now have to meet are predicated largely upon incomes derived on the larger fortunes.

Mr. LONG. That is right.

Mr. TYDINGS. So that if we destroy the larger fortunes, we destroy also the incomes from those fortunes, and therefore we would have to carry the income brackets down to the man with less income in order to make up for the losses on the man with more income.

Mr. LONG. That would be very fine.

Mr. TYDINGS. So that the man of moderate means would have to pay more income tax in order to give the Government the same return if the larger fortunes were leveled. Is that correct?

Mr. LONG. Hardly. Let me illustrate, and answer the Senator's question as a whole. To begin with, the United States Government would take in at the first drop of the hat somewhere between one hundred and one hundred and sixty-five billion dollars in wealth, not all cash, because there is not that much cash in the world, but from one hundred to one hundred and sixty-five billion dollars of wealth based on the normal $421,000,000,000 of national value in a normal year. That would mean that for a number of years the United States would be peaceably, regularly, and in an orderly manner conducting such sales, distributions, and arrangements as I propose to outline and to include in an amendment to be proposed to title IX.

But, as the Senator from Maryland said, after the time when we had whittled down the big fortunes to a maximum of two and one-half million dollars, what then, says the Senator, would we do for money for social relief? Where would we find the hundred millionaires to tax, after 10 years, we will say? Where would we find the men who could contribute this money?

Mr. President, this is the answer to that: The beautiful thing about it is that when we cut down the size of the big fortunes, when we level down the 10 billionaires, and those with fortunes of five hundred million, and those with fortunes of one hundred million, and those with fortunes of ten million, so that the maximum fortune in this country would be from a million to $3,000,000, there will be practically no such thing as a social-relief program. We will have no such problem left, if we do as was said by the Pilgrims, as was said by the Bible, as was said in every law upon which this country was supposed to have been founded. If we will cut down these monstrous fortunes to the point where there will be only 600 people in the United States with buying capacity and allow 24,000,000 families to have buying capacity, then the social-relief problem will become nil.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let us take any one rich individual. I do not like to be personal, but it is necessary to have an illustration.

Mr. LONG. Take Rockefeller.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let us take Henry Ford.

Mr. LONG. Take Rockefeller. He is better as an illustration.

Mr. TYDINGS. Suppose we take Henry Ford, who is supposed to be a very wealthy man, and I suppose a great deal of his fortune is invested in an automobile manufacturing plant, and in things kindred thereto.

When we started the capital levy on Henry Ford, what would we get? We would certainly not get his money. Would the Government take over his plant, or take an interest in it, or acquire so much stock in it? And who would run the plant? Will the Senator explain?

Mr. LONG. I will take the case of Mr. Rockefeller, whom the Senator mentioned. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator himself has used Henry Ford as an illustration time and again.

Mr. LONG. I know; that is why I am using Rockefeller now. I have used Ford, and the Senator from Maryland can read what I said, as the Senator from Kentucky, who is already wise about it, did.

I will use the case of Mr. Rockefeller because it is a much better illustration. Let us say that Mr. Rockefeller has a fortune of $10,000,000,000. Let us put it at the outside figure, $10,000,000,000; and it is that much. Rockefeller's fortune amounts to $10,000,000,000. The Mellon fortune was shown to be up in the billions. They claim it is in the hundred millions, but it is in the billions, as better reports I have studied show.

Let us take Mr. Rockefeller's fortune at $10,000,000,000. Does it not have to be divided when he dies? It is said that we cannot redistribute the fortune of Rockefeller; but if Rockefeller dies, all of it has to be redistributed, and before we had the inheritance laws, such a fortune would have had to go back to the Government.

Remember inheritance is an artifice of the law. Under the common law there was no such thing as a man giving his children his property; it all went to the government. Inheritances were a means of artificial support granted by the law by which children inherited the fortunes of their parents. Under the common law, which survived for years and years before we ever heard of the law of inheritance, all property went to the government on the death of a man and had to be redistributed by the government. So this is nothing new.

Second, what would we do in this specific case? I have an amendment to offer, and I will explain what we would do. Let us assume that Mr. Rockefeller died. So much can go to one heir. So much can be retained by him as he signifies. He can take out whatever he may desire from his profits. He can pay it in cash. He can pay it in kind. He can retain such ownership as he may desire of the property, which he may have up to the limit the law allows. In this case about seven or eight million dollars would be the limit he could retain after the first few years, and he would naturally have to whittle down as the years went by.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator, however, ought to make a distinction. When one of Mr. Rockefeller's children or five or six of his children have his fortune divided among themselves, they simply inherit securities. The Senator now inferentially answers my question. Does he mean that the Government would have given to it, in lieu of money, a certain percentage of the securities which Mr. Rockefeller owned, such as an heir at law would receive?

Mr. LONG. It could; yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then the Senator's plan would be that the Government would acquire——

Mr. LONG. Property.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Government would acquire not money, but property.

Mr. LONG. It would have to.

Mr. TYDINGS. What becomes of the property after the Government acquires it?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I will answer that. Now we have gotten back pretty well to the point. We have got only one more little place to go in this discussion. When the Government has acquired the property, the Government disposes of that property.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator's answer is as I interpret it, namely, that the Government, in a period of 8 or 9 years, is to level all the big fortunes down to two and a half million dollars—suppose then the Government acquires this property. It will be property. It will not be money. It is going to sell it again. I wish to know who in the country is going to have enough money to buy it when the Government gets it and begins to sell it, when all the big fortunes of the country are to be taken away.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Senator has not got his arithmetic right.

Mr. TYDINGS. Very well. I should like an answer to my question.

Mr. LONG. If people with large fortunes are permitted to retain two and a half million dollars, then a little over three-fifths of the fortunes are left intact. We still have three-fifths of the fortunes left intact. We are not going to sell this property all in the first year, nor in the second year, nor perhaps in the third year, but the Government will make such division and disposition of this property as is necessary to carry out the purposes of the law, the purposes of the Government, and the building up of the common man from the bottom. There are a dozen ways to do that.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not know the financial worth of any of the Members of the Senate; but there is not a man in this body, whatever his worth may be, who has that worth in money. The men who would retain two and a half million dollars' worth of property under the Senator's plan do not have their worth in money; they have it in property or in investments.

Mr. LONG. That is true.

Mr. TYDINGS. Therefore they could not buy what the Government was going to sell unless they first sold what they themselves had.

Mr. LONG. No, Mr. President; I would not have them sell. I would have them give the Government of their property in kind.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator does not understand my question. I say, assuming that the Government has acquired this property through a capital levy, and begins to sell it, it must, perforce, sell it to the men who have, we will say, large fortunes.

Mr. LONG. No, no. Why? Are we not going to let anyone buy anything except the man who has over two and a half million dollars?

Mr. TYDINGS. Oh, no; but I am talking about the time when no man has more than two and a half million dollars.

Mr. LONG. Fine!

Mr. TYDINGS. I say, then, that when the Government assumes to sell these tremendous, big blocks of property——

Mr. LONG. Oh, no; they do not have to sell it in big blocks. We will whittle those things down a little.

Mr. TYDINGS. They acquire it in big blocks, and they acquire it in the form of property.

Mr. LONG. No; they acquire it in the form of securities or representation of property.

Mr. TYDINGS. So in order to buy what the Government must sell, as the Senator says, a man not having his fortune in the form of money must first sell what he has his two and a half million dollars invested in, in order to get the money to pay for what the Government is selling.

Mr. LONG. Not necessarily.

Mr. TYDINGS. How can he pay for it then?

Mr. LONG. If the Senator will wait a moment I will explain that. If it were not for the Senator's own confusion, by reason of which he has been asking these questions, I should have answered it.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. Let me answer the Senator from Maryland. To begin with, the Senator would urge that we cannot redistribute wealth.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I do not urge that.

Mr. LONG. Let me get through with the answer to the Senator's question. The Senator asked me a question and he does not permit me to answer.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not wish to have the Senator from Louisiana put words in my mouth.

Mr. LONG. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not intend to do that.

Mr. TYDINGS. I asked the Senator a simple question. How are these large property blocks to be purchased?

Mr. LONG. O. K.; I will come to that. I will come to that immediately. Then, when I have finished answering that, I will come back and show the Senate the situation on basic principles.

To begin with, has not the Federal Government time after time issued currency against its own assets? Let us say for the sake of the argument that the United States Government finds a clogged market—which it will not find. It will find a market far more expansive when we have put purchasing power into the hands of 24,000,000 families than it is now when there is a purchasing power in only 600 families.

You will find a far more expansive purchasing market for the goods and things of value in this country if you decentralize wealth than you find today when you only have 600 buying resources. But let us forget that.

Has not the United States Government always had the right, and does it not now, under the Federal land-bank laws, issue currency against assets, and does it not become circulating currency? Has not the United States Government taken bonds, has not the United States Government taken even the portfolios of banks, consisting of mortgages and notes, and issued currency? What is to keep the United States Government from issuing the same kind of circulating currency in order to effect the redistribution I suggest?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LONG. No, Mr. President, not at this moment. I wish to complete my answer to the Senator from Maryland. That is no. 2.

There is a third way of doing. There is no trouble to make a diffusion of this property. There is a third way. I pointed out two ways, and I will point out a third. There is no particular harm in the United States Government, if it did not have these other two methods which I have mentioned——

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. Just a moment.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not want to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. LONG. Wait till I get through with this point.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wish to point out that originally the Senator said the Government was going to sell that property. Now he has abandoned that principle.

Mr. LONG. Oh, no!

Mr. TYDINGS. Now he says the Government is going to issue money against the property.

Mr. LONG. No; I did not say that. The Senator does not understand me. His eyes may be like mine—blind and see not. However, what I have said I will repeat to the Senator. The point is, the Government, as I said, will undertake to release and to diffuse this property to the advantage of the Government and to its people, into the hands other than the Government.

How would it make this distribution of $165,000,000,000 worth of property? It does not have to make it all the first day, or the first month, the first year, nor even the first 10 years. How can it do it? The Government first finds an enlarged purchasing market to begin with, because property ownership and ownership of wealth have been decentralized. Here is a man who can go into the grocery business. He can afford to buy a grocery store. Why? Because those terms, those conditions, those times are at an end when a large $100,000,000 capital structure which dominates a chain-store enterprise squeezes everybody out of the grocery business except some man who is a peon under the chain-store system. Those times are at an end. Those things known as the "chain factories, the chain banks, and the chain enterprises" cannot thrive, and therefore peonage in that service cannot thrive any longer. Those days are at an end. Therefore there is an enlarged market for purchasing, there is an enlarged market for thrift, there is an enlarged market for prosperity, and therefore with reasonable order and precision the United States Government would find a means for disposing of this property at enhanced values through a reasonable period of time to a better-equipped purchasing public. That is no. 1.

No. 2. Let us say, however, that we find, as the Senator intimates is the case, that there is a clog in the purchasing power. That being the case, the United States Government would want to do what it has done under the Federal Reserve bank laws and under the Federal land-bank laws. The United States Government would have the right to issue its own circulating currency based upon the property which it owns, the same as it has done in the case of the Federal Reserve banks and the Federal land banks.

No. 3. There is a third process, and the Government can adopt one or all of these, or even a dozen more expedients. I now come to the third process. There is nothing to prevent the Government from making some disposition of this property in kind the same as my amendment proposes that taxes may be paid in kind. Those are the three main things.

The next point I answer to the question of the Senator is this: What would we do when the time came when we would level the fortunes down to where no one owned more than two and a half million dollars? Whom would we tax? Then, Members of the Senate, is when our problem of social security has practically disappeared. There never was a country which kept its wealth reasonably distributed which ever had a panic. There never was a country which kept its property diffused into the hands of the masses that ever had a calamity, and there never was a country which allowed its property to become concentrated in the hands of the few that did not have disasters and depression.

This country was founded upon the principle which I am now trying to make some effort to expound. This country was founded on this principle. The day that the Pilgrims landed in 1620, by a compact which had been signed July 1 of that year, they provided that every 7 years property would have to be redistributed, and every 7 years debts would have to be remitted.

It is no trouble to redistribute wealth, Mr. President. I have not had the mind and the capacity possessed by some of the abler Members of the Senate in connection with these matters to help me in getting up a plan of the kind I am suggesting. I have done as much as I have explained to the Senator from Maryland with my own feeble mentality, and I find no one to say that it is even an impossibility or an impracticability.

Mr. President, there is no trouble to redistribute wealth. The Lord God in heaven says it has to be done. Not only does He say it has to be done; He says a nation which does not do it cannot survive. The Lord shows us in chapters and in paragraphs and in verses how He sent his apostles into countries where the wealth became concentrated in the hands of a few people, and how they did redivide it, and how they did redistribute it. He says that the time will come, even in this generation——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time has arrived when the agreement goes into effect. The Senator from Louisiana is recognized.

Mr. LONG. I have 45 minutes on the bill, have I not, and 30 minutes on the amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's statement is correct.

Mr. LONG. I will try not to take that much time, because I desire to allow time for other discussion. I will not take much of my time. I want to allow time for others to consider this bill and I want to allow time to come back and answer questions which may arise in anyone's mind.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LONG. I yield to my friend from Washington.

Mr. BONE. Can the Senator name for me any country in modern times that has ever undertaken a redistribution of wealth?

Mr. LONG. What does the Senator call "modern times"?

Mr. BONE. The last hundred or two hundred years.

Mr. LONG. Will the Senator make it 300?

Mr. BONE. I will concede that much, then, and make it 300.

Mr. LONG. Very well. The first country I will name that has redistributed wealth during the last 300 years is America.

Mr. BONE. What was the period of that redistribution?

Mr. LONG. Beginning with 1620 and lasting for 50 or 60 years.

Mr. BONE. There were then a mere handful of people along the Atlantic seaboard. I am talking about a country that has had its civilization well established and not merely a group of settlers who were fighting for existence with their backs to the wall.

Mr. LONG. Very well. I will name France in about 1800. Do I need to prove that? The whole cause of the French Revolution was the concentration of wealth in the hands of a few. The French people went through blood. What did they do? They not only effected a redistribution of wealth but France enacted laws which forbade and prevented, from the day of the French Revolution, the concentration of wealth in the hands of a few.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator could take a more modern illustration and cite the revolution in Russia.

Mr. LONG. No; the Russians did not redistribute wealth; I beg the Senator's pardon; they substituted an oligarchy of government for an oligarchy of finance; that is the difference. The czar still lives in Russia. The only difference is that it is supposed to be an ownership of government instead of an ownership of the earls, dukes, and lords. One is an oligarchy of finance, the other is an oligarchy of government; and one is as bad as the other. We, too, have been going along that line here for the last few years.

It is the N. R. A. of Russia the Senator from Maryland is referring to now. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The occupants of the galleries will refrain from any audible demonstration, or the Chair will have to order the galleries cleared.

Mr. LONG. What did they do in France? France had its revolution. When we read the histories we get very little from them, as they keep out most of the facts. We do not find in a single school history published in the United States today the compact of government under which this Government lived for nearly a hundred years; we do not find it published at all.

However, let me get back to what France did. When they got through redistributing wealth in France they adopted the provisions of the civil law under which it was provided that when a man died he could not leave his property to the most able son or the most able daughter to roll like a snowball down hill through another generation. On the contrary, it had to be divided, more or less equally, amongst all the children, and a certain amount of it had to go to the state; so if a man had, say, five children and died leaving a million dollars or even $500, it went into five parts after the Government had deducted a part. That was the law. As those children died in succeeding years the property was divided into 3 and 4 and 5 other parts. The effect on the fortunes of France was to steadily diffuse the wealth, instead of concentrating wealth, and today there are no large fortunes in France. Despite the fact that France has had scourge after scourge, despite the fact that she has fought war after war and endured pestilence and everything else, nonetheless, France has been able to survive, due to the fact that its wealth has been more or less distributed among the people and cannot be concentrated into the hands of a few. Had France had what America has had, France would have been swept from the face of the globe more than a hundred years ago. That is no. 1.

The second illustration is the United States of America. I have referred to what took place during and following the French Revolution. But where did they get the idea? They got it from America. The French Revolution was brought on as a result of the American Revolution, and as the result of events which preceded the American Revolution.

What had the Americans done? They had set up on the eastern coast, after landing at Plymouth, the compact of the Pilgrims. Article 5 of the compact, which was the law under which the Pilgrims landed, under which they lived, and which brought this country into flower and bloom, stipulated that at the end of every seventh year—and, mind you, I am giving the exact literal words as they come from the law—debts should be remitted and every seventh year wealth should be redistributed. That is the cause of the flower and bloom of America, so much so that when this country framed a Declaration of Independence that principle was carried into the Declaration of Independence, and when our forefathers wrote the Constitution of the United States that principle was incorporated in the Constitution. James Madison, who was the chief draftsman of the Constitution of the United States, gave out a statement about that time in which he said that this would then be a free republic, but he warned America that if it failed to redistribute wealth when the time came the country could not survive and there would be no republic left. So Daniel Webster, in 1820, at the commemoration of the two hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth, made a speech there in which he said, in effect, that America's future preservation and progress and welfare depended upon whether it would or would not follow the law of the Pilgrims and redistribute the wealth of this country and prevent it from being concentrated into the hands of a few.

Those are some examples; but I will give another example, if I may be permitted to do so. I turn to the fifth chapter of the Book of Nehemiah in the Old Testament to show what they then did, and to show the rules under which they did it. Here is the book. I read it once on the floor of the Senate, but I will read it again. I quote from the fifth chapter of the Book of Nehemiah:

> And there was a great cry of the people and of their wives against their brethren, the Jews.
>
> For there were that said, we, our sons, and our daughters, are many: therefore we take up corn for them, that we may eat, and live.
>
> Some also there were that said, We have mortgaged our lands—

This reads like the conditions in the United States of America in the year 1935; one might think I was reading about the United States in 1935.

> We have mortgaged our lands, vineyards, and houses, that we might buy corn, because of the dearth.
>
> There were also that said, We have borrowed money for the king's tribute—

We have borrowed money to pay the taxes which are being levied on the people, and we are now talking about putting more taxes on the working man, the farmer, the home owner, when they have already borrowed money and mortgaged their homes and property to pay taxes that have already been levied on them. That sounds like 1935 in the United States of America.

Again I quote from the same chapter of the Bible:

> There were also that said, we have borrowed money for the king's tribute and that upon our lands and vineyards.
>
> Yet now our flesh is as the flesh of our brethren, our children as their children: and, lo, we bring into bondage our sons and our daughters—

We have that condition in America today. Lo, we bring into bondage our sons and our daughters. Today every boy and every girl who are born in America inherit a debt of $2,000, or more than that, and 99 percent of them die without ever paying the $2,000. Of the national income of America, amounting to $42,000,000,000, $28,000,000,000 or two-thirds of it goes for taxes and for interest on debts the people owe, and the debts are increasing year by year. The debts of the common people are not decreasing; they are increasing. I am showing you how closely parallel this excerpt from the Bible is to present conditions.

And, lo, we bring into bondage our sons and our daughters to be servants, and some of our daughters are brought unto bondage already: neither is it in our power to redeem them; for other men have our lands and vineyards.

And I was very angry when I heard their cry and these words.

Then I consulted with myself, and I rebuked the nobles and the rulers, and said unto them, Ye exact usury, every one of his brother. And I set a great assembly against them.

He called out the mob.

And I said unto them, We after our ability have redeemed our brethren the Jews, which were sold unto the heathen; and will ye even sell your brethren? or shall they be sold unto us? Then held they their peace, and found nothing to answer.

Also I said, It is not good that ye do: ought ye not to walk in the fear of our God because of the reproach of the heathen our enemies?

I likewise, and my brethren, and my servants, might exact of them money and corn: I pray you, let us leave off this usury.

Restore—

Here is the command of the Lord—

Restore, I pray you, to them, even this day, their lands, their vineyards, their oliveyards, and their houses, also the hundredth part of the money—

Give them some of the money, too—and of the corn, the wine, and the oil, that ye exact of them.

Then said they, We will restore them, and will require nothing of them; so will we do as thou sayest. Then I called the priests, and took an oath of them, that they should do according to this promise.

Also I shook my lap, and said, So God shake out every man from his house, and from his labour, that performeth not this promise, even thus be he shaken out, and emptied. And all the congregation said, Amen, and praised the Lord. And the people did according to this promise.

Moreover from the time that I was appointed to be their governor in the land of Judah, from the twentieth year even unto the two and thirtieth year of Artakerxes the king, that is, twelve years, I and my brethren have not eaten the bread of the governor.

In other words, he got down off his "high horse." They pulled those big rulers down. They said, "Never mind the castles in Spain for the month of August. Never mind about that camp in the Adirondacks for the month of July. Never mind about the palace on the Pacific slope, and the various and sundry cottages up in the Buffalo Mountains during the month of June. Never mind about the palaces on the coast of Florida in the month of January. Get down here and let these people have something to eat during these hard times." So we said, "Give up the bread of the rulers and get down off your 'high horse' until we bring this country back. Never mind about the yachts like the $5,000,000 Nourmahal. Live according to Hoyle." [Laughter.]

But the former governors that had been before me were chargeable unto the people, and had taken of them bread and wine, beside 40 shekels of silver; yea, even their servants bare rule over the people: but so did not I, because of the fear of God.

Yea, also I continued in the work of this wall, neither bought we any land: and all my servants were gathered thither unto the work.

Moreover, there were at my table an hundred and fifty of the Jews and rulers—

That was the ruling family which owned all the property—150 families. Today at the very most the United States has 600 families with a much larger population—beside those that came unto us from among the heathen that are about us.

Now, that which was prepared for me daily was 1 ox and 6 choice sheep; also fowls were prepared for me, and once in 10 days store of all sorts of wine: yet for all this required not I the bread of the governor, because the bondage was heavy upon this people.

Think upon me, my God, for good, according to all that I have done for this people.

There is your redistribution of wealth. Now, go over in the New Testament, and you will find it again:

They shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruninghooks; nations shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more, but each man shall live under his own vine and under his fig tree, and there shall be peace in the land.

You will find it in the Old Testament and you will find it in the New Testament.

Not only is it the law of the Bible, but it is the foundation of this country. It is the very foundation of the French Republic, and it is also carried in the main writings of the world in principles laid down by Aristotle, Socrates, Plato, and all the ancient Greek wise men. I have even found it to be propounded by Confucius as the law for China.

I am not alone in my prophecy. I have one of the leading newspapers in the country which less than 2 months ago made an examination of these matters of which I am now speaking. They made the examination to prove that my facts were not there, to prove that my logic was faulty. What did they say, this newspaper which calls itself the New York Daily News, with the largest circulation of any newspaper in America? It said that unless America finds a way to redistribute its wealth into the hands of the people by law and orderly process, we can expect it to be done by blood and by force and by revolution like it was done in France and as occurred in Russia. That is their prophecy.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BONE. The Senator apparently has done an excellent job in deflating fortunes under the amendment which he has offered. I may be in error, but a hasty calculation suggests on the $10,000,000,000 fortune which the Senator has used as an example, the first year's levy under the Senator's amendment would take approximately 98 percent of the $10,000,000,000.

Mr. LONG. Oh, yes.

Mr. BONE. In other words, the Senator's amendment provides that "in addition to other taxes levied"—I assume that means the present business taxes?

Mr. LONG. Income and inheritance taxes.

Mr. BONE. Then there shall be annually levied and collected a tax in accordance with certain provisions, beginning at 1 percent, and then all through by gradation to subdivision (h), which provides for 99 percent on fortunes in excess of $8,000,000. The calculation I have made shows that the first year's levy would take out of the $10,000,000,000 a total tax of $9,893,350,000.

Mr. LONG. How much would it leave?

Mr. BONE. It would leave $106,650,000. The second year's tax would be $98,933,500, leaving at the end of the second year, out of the $10,000,000,000 fortune, $7,716,500. By two levies made under the Senator's amendment the $10,000,000,000 fortune would be reduced to $7,716,500. That is deflating large fortunes with a rapidity which is startling.

Mr. LONG. It is not quite fast enough at that. It ought to be done faster than that. A man has no business with $7,000,000 during this kind of times.

Mr. BONE. The Senator referred to France as not having any concentration of wealth, but I want the Senator to know that of the total wealth of the world in 1929, when careful studies were made, France possessed 5.4 percent of the world's wealth, so that France did not have very much wealth to concentrate. The United States had 44.8 percent of the world's wealth, so, of course, it was much easier for large aggregations of wealth to come into existence in this Republic than it was in a country possessing only 5 percent of the world's total aggregation of wealth.

Mr. LONG. On the contrary in countries which did not have any larger percentage of wealth than France, there were some very big fortunes. What percentage of the wealth of the world has India?

Mr. BONE. India had 3.2 percent.

Mr. LONG. India has fortunes almost as large as some of the big fortunes in America. It is not the size of the national wealth that controls the big fortunes. While France has 5 percent of the entire wealth of the world and has relatively no such thing as a big fortune in it and its wealth is well distributed, yet in India, which possesses only 3 percent of the wealth, there are many rich rulers to be found.

The Indian princes and Indian rulers are exceptionally wealthy people, and yet they have the lord prince at the top with every kind of precious possession, and at the bottom the Indian people are living away below a respectable point of half-way starvation. It makes no difference about what percent of the wealth of the world a country may own insofar as it relates to distribution.

Let me say this to the Senator from Washington: It is true that this is deflating the big fortunes very quickly, but it needs to be done that way. I am standing in nearly the same spot where I stood a little over 3 years ago. Three years ago, from the place where my friend the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE] now sits, or at about that point, I made the statement under Mr. Hoover: "This is 1932 and we will go along with these experiments and we will never bring America 1 foot nearer recovery, we will never improve conditions one bit, unless there is a redistribution of wealth." That was 3 years ago. We have tried nearly everything under Mr. Hoover and under Mr. Roosevelt that anybody could think of. We have tried every kind of scheme, both liberal and radical. We have tried every kind of scheme of both the tories and the conservatives. Everything has been tried in 3 years' time. I invite the attention of my friend from Washington that the Democratic Party promised to do this. The Democratic Party promised it would redistribute the wealth. The Democratic Party promised to do it.

If anybody wishes me to prove that statement, I shall have no difficulty whatever in doing so by reading from the speech delivered from the rostrum of the Democratic National Convention at Chicago by the President of the United States, wherein he said that by that platform and by that convention the men and women of the United States, forgotten in the philosophy of the last 2 years' government, were looking to the Democratic Party to provide for the redistribution of the national wealth.

We promised the people to do that. I desire to say that I am willing to be liberal in framing this law, and if it is the consensus of opinion that individuals ought to be allowed to own more than five or six or seven or eight million dollars, I am willing to be more liberal in the amendment; but is it the idea of the Senator from Washington that individual fortunes in the United States should be allowed to exceed five or six million dollars? I should like the Senator to tell me who thinks there ought to be more than that allowed to any one person. I think that is too much.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, since the Senator has spoken directly to me, I will tell him that I was concerned in making a mathematical calculation, and not making an argument about the size of fortunes which might be justified under the Senator's amendment. I had discussed the maldistribution of wealth a thousand times before I had the pleasure of meeting the Senator from Louisiana. In fact, I had occasion to discuss it for a great many years; and I hold in my hand a volume which is the final report of the Commission on Industrial Relations, which I procured about the year 1915 or 1916——

Mr. LONG. 1916.

Mr. BONE. A subject in which I was interested many, many years ago.

Mr. LONG. Let me have the book, and I will read the Senator something from it.

Mr. BONE. I should be happy to have the Senator put it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. LONG. No; I will read from this book that the Senator read from since 1916. Let me show the Senate what they said was the trouble with this country in 1916. I am glad to run across this book again. Let me find the conclusions of the majority of the Commission. I will read to the Senate what they thought was the trouble in this country back yonder at a time when they first had this question up.

I want to find the majority report. It will not take me long to find it if I do not unduly tax the patience of my friends. I will read the whole thing. My friend from Washington and I will get together on his own book.

Let me see. It is somewhere here, if I can just find it. I know this is the same book. Where is the report of the majority of the Commission? Does the Senator know on what page it is to be found?

Mr. BONE. I cannot put my finger on it. If the Senator will give it to me, I will endeavor to find it.

Mr. LONG. I shall have it in just a minute. I will show, Mr. President, that this matter of the redistribution of wealth is just like the weather. They all talk about it; my friend from Washington talks about; I talk about it; the party talks about it; but nobody does anything about it. They all believe in getting up and telling the people that they are going to redistribute wealth, but they do not believe in doing anything about it. I have never seen another bill here since I have been here, except the bills I have proposed, to do this; and yet the Democratic Party and the Democratic committees always say that they are going to redistribute wealth. It got to be so popular during the last campaign that in Madison Square Garden our old friend, Herbert Hoover, decided he had to say something about it, too; and he declared, in his expiring political moments there—a kind of a death-bed repentance, though it might have been——

> My conception of America is a land where the wealth is not concentrated in the hands of the few, but where it is diffused into the lives of all.

He made that declaration himself along toward the close of the campaign, after we had gone over the United States promising everybody that we were going to do it under the Democratic Party.

I have found just about the place here, Mr. President. I will get it if I may yield the floor for a moment. I suggest the absence of a quorum while I look it up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Coolidge	Logan	Reynolds
Ashurst	Copeland	Lonergan	Robinson
Austin	Costigan	Long	Russell
Bachman	Davis	McAdoo	Schall
Bailey	Dickinson	McCarran	Schwellenbach
Bankhead	Donahey	McGill	Sheppard
Barkley	Duffy	McKellar	Shipstead
Bilbo	Fletcher	McNary	Smith
Black	Frazier	Maloney	Steiwer
Bone	George	Metcalf	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Gerry	Minton	Townsend
Brown	Gibson	Moore	Trammell
Bulkley	Guffey	Murphy	Truman
Bulow	Hale	Murray	Tydings
Burke	Harrison	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrd	Hastings	Norbeck	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Hatch	Norris	Wagner
Capper	Hayden	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Caraway	Johnson	Overton	Wheeler
Chavez	King	Pittman	White
Clark	La Follette	Pope
Connally	Lewis	Radcliffe

Mr. LEWIS. I reannounce the absence of Senators whose names were given by me, and the reasons therefor, as announced on the previous roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Louisiana has the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I now wish to read from the report of the Industrial Relations Commission of 1916, under the heading, Concentration of Wealth and Influence, on page 80. It is as follows:

> The evidence developed by the hearings and investigations of the Commission is the basis for the following statements:
>
> 1. The control of manufacturing, mining, and transportation industries is to an increasing degree passing into the hands of great corporations through stock ownership, and control of credit is centralized in a comparatively small number of enormously powerful financial institutions. These financial institutions are in turn dominated by a single large corporation.
>
> 2. The final control of American industry rests, therefore, in the hands of a small number of wealthy and powerful financiers.

3. The concentration of ownership and control is greatest in the basic industries upon which the welfare of the country must finally rest.

4. With few exceptions, each of the great basic industries is dominated by a single large corporation, and where this is not true, the control of the industry through stock ownership in supposedly independent corporations and through credit is almost, if not quite, as potent.

5. In such corporations, in spite of the large number of stockholders, the control through actual stock ownership rests with a very small number of persons. For example, in the United States Steel Corporation, which had in 1911 approximately 100,000 shareholders, 1.5 percent of the stockholders held 57 percent of the stock, while the final control rested with a single private banking house. Similarly, in the American Tobacco Co., before the dissolution, 10 stockholders owned 60 percent of the stock.

That was the American Tobacco Co., the whole Tobacco Trust. Ten men owned 60 percent of the entire American Tobacco Co.

6. Almost without exception the employees of the large corporations are unorganized, as a result of the active and aggressive nonunion policy of the corporation managements.

Mr. President, I shall not read any further from this particular report, except to say that at another point in this report will be found the statement that the main fault with America in 1916 was the concentration of wealth in the hands of the few. That was the entire burden of this report, which was submitted in 1916.

Mr. President, I do not propose to take any more of the time of Senators. I have discussed this amendment many times in other forms. I do not expect it to be adopted. I desire to be perfectly frank with my good friends in the Senate. I do not expect the amendment to be adopted. I expect it to be used as part of the platforms in many, many candidacies for the future, as it has been in the past; and I expect it probably to be used as a part of the platform of the Democratic Party the next time, the same as it was the last time; and I expect the party to come back here, if it comes back here, probably, if there are enough of us left, to do then as we are doing now; but I warn my friends of the Senate that if we are concerned in saving America and in saving the people of America, we shall have to stop promising this, and actually perform.

Now I wish to ask my colleagues if they recollect how laboriously the pleading was that the party had promised this and it had promised that a few days ago.

I remember how we labored and how we said that this was "promised by the party", that "it has been promised, it has been promised, and we have to do it." Yet here we are, in the third year of the Democratic administration, with something that has been promised, that has been pledged, but nothing done toward its fulfillment.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Has the Senator completed his discussion of his plan?

Mr. LONG. Go ahead.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to ask the Senator whether or not he was correctly quoted in yesterday morning's paper to the effect that he referred to me as "Kemal Pasha."

Mr. LONG. No; I was not correctly quoted.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator was not correctly quoted?

Mr. LONG. No; I was not correctly quoted.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield for a question, or does he yield the floor?

Mr. LONG. I yield the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that there was an agreement originally entered into by which committee amendments should be considered and disposed of before individual amendments were offered. The Chair is informed that there is a committee amendment which has not been agreed to. The Chair did not know that, but assumed that the agreement had been carried out.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NORBECK. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. There is one committee amendment, with reference to the annuity bonds, yet to be acted on. The Senator from Connecticut is very much interested in it, and I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may go over until tomorrow, without prejudice, and that individual amendments may be acted on at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the remaining committee amendment may go over until tomorrow. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment providing for pensions to those people who are not included in the social-security bill. I have reference to the wards of the Government, the Indians. They are concentrated in half a dozen States and seem to have been entirely overlooked. I am offering the amendment as section 1201 and will ask that the other sections be renumbered to correspond, if the amendment shall be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 80, after line 4, it is proposed to insert the following:

TITLE XII—INDIAN PENSIONS

SECTION 1201. That heads of families and single persons of Indian blood not otherwise entitled to the benefits of this act who have heretofore attained or shall hereafter attain the age of 60 years are hereby declared to be entitled to a pension from the United States in a sum of $30 per month, subject to the following conditions:

Applications for pension by persons of Indian blood, as herein defined, shall be made in writing in such form as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe and shall be filed by the applicant with the superintendent or other officer in charge of the agency or tribe to which the applicant belongs. Upon receipt of any such application the Secretary of the Interior shall make, or cause to be made, such investigation as he may deem necessary to determine the accuracy of the facts shown thereon, including the annual income of the applicant from other sources. In all cases where the Secretary of the Interior finds that the annual income of such applicant is less than $1 per day, said Secretary shall award to such applicant a pension in an amount which, when added to the other annual income of such applicant, will bring such annual income up to but not in excess of $1 per day: Provided, however, That payments to Indian pensioners entitled hereunder shall be made in equal monthly installments from the date of approval of application therefor by the Secretary of the Interior and in the discretion of said Secretary such payments may be made direct to the individual beneficiaries, or to other persons designated by the Secretary of the Interior providing care for any beneficiary under the provisions of this act: Provided further, That in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior such payments due any Indian beneficiary may be handled in accordance with regulations governing individual Indian money accounts and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to prescribe such further rules and regulations as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of this section.

SEC. 1202. The Indians and Eskimos of Alaska shall receive a pension under same conditions and in an amount one-half that provided for Indians under this title.

SEC. 1203. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, so much as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, including necessary expenses of administration.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to look the amendment over and to have it examined by the experts, and I ask the Senator if he will not withhold it.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I desire first to modify the amendment by changing the age of 60 years so that it will read 65 years to conform to the provisions of the bill. I agree to the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask the Senator to withhold the amendment until tomorrow, and we can look into the matter.

Mr. NORBECK. Will the amendment be pending tomorrow?

Mr. HARRISON. It may be tendered tomorrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Mississippi to ask unanimous consent that the amendment go over?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from South Dakota has withdrawn his amendment for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota has withdrawn his amendment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I offer an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 52, after line 7, it is proposed to insert the following:

TARIFF ADJUSTMENT

SEC. 812. (a) Upon application of any employer, the United States Tariff Commission is authorized and directed to make an investigation under section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930 with a view to determining whether any increase in rates of duty imposed by law in the case of any article or articles is necessary to offset the tax imposed by section 804 and/or section 901 in order to equalize the differences in the cost of production pursuant to the principles set forth in such section 336. The Commission shall report to the President the results of the investigation and its findings with respect to such differences in costs of production. If the Commission finds it shown by the investigation that by reason of the taxes imposed by section 804 and/or section 901 the duties imposed by law do not equalize the differences in the cost of production of the domestic article and the like or similar foreign article when produced in the principal competing country, the Commission shall specify in its report such increases in rates of duty imposed by law (including any necessary change in classification and including the transfer of the article from the free list to the dutiable list, and without limitation as to the amount of increase except as provided in the second sentence of section 336 (g) of the Tariff Act of 1930) as it finds shown by the investigation to be necessary to equalize such differences.

(b) Upon receipt of the report of the Tariff Commission the President shall proclaim the rates of duty and changes in classification specified in the report of the Commission, and thereupon the increased rates of duty and changes in classification shall take effect in accordance with the provisions of section 336 (d) of the Tariff Act of 1930.

(c) This section shall be enforced as part of the customs laws.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the philosophy of the amendment is self-evident. I make a very brief statement respecting it.

It is my understanding that the theory upon which we are now asked to depart from State jurisdiction in respect to fixing old-age pensions and unemployment-insurance payments is that if it be left to the individual States there will be discrimination as between the States, and one State which may be generous in respect to old-age pension and unemployment-insurance payments will find itself at a disadvantage in competing with a State which is less generous.

Admitting, for the sake of the argument, that this principle is appropriate—at any rate, it is the principle upon which the proposed legislation is based—I submit that precisely the same argument applies to the competition which may exist between a country which is generous in respect to its old-age and unemployment allowances and a country which is less generous.

This becomes particularly and specifically true when we are proposing to pay our bills by a tax upon pay rolls, because a tax upon pay rolls inevitably enters into the domestic American cost of production in every instance, and if the injection of the 3- or 4- or 5-percent pay-roll taxes in the United States will increase the domestic cost of production to a point where the existing tariff rates do not cover the differential, then we shall have simply created a situation by such pay-roll tax which will invite importations which will make it impossible for these protected American industries to have any pay rolls or pay any taxes.

It seems to me that if the philosophy is sound as between the States, it is equally sound, nay, more, it is even sounder as between nations, and I shall undertake to demonstrate that fact.

It is said that one State cannot be left with its problem alone, lest it find its industries drawn off into some other State which is not making payments of this character. Not only may we find the same thing to be true in respect to the competitive situation as between nations, but we are put upon notice by the industrial experience of the United States during the last 10 years that there is a very definite industrial trend by way of the exporation of our mass production methods and mass production industrial plants in the United States. In the last 10 years we have seen over 1,800 branch plants of American industrial institutions established abroad for the purpose of taking advantage of the more attractive foreign conditions.

Except as we create this protected element which is covered by this amendment, I submit that when we add a definite pay-roll tax in the United States, which will inevitably, in the same proportion, increase the American cost of production, we put a premium upon the extension of the foreign branch-plant system, which operates utterly at the expense of American labor and American industry. We put a premium on it unless this type of differential is provided.

Mr. President, let me go a step further. When we wrote the late lamented N. R. A. law we recognized in the text of the bill the fact that if the Government by its fiat injects any artificial factor into domestic costs of production, that factor must be offset in respect to protected commodities by a compensating increase in rates. Furthermore, when we wrote the A. A. A. law we acknowledged precisely the same principle and we provided for precisely the same preferential treatment.

It seems to me the situation which we confront in respect to pay-roll taxes is infinitely more challenging than was the need for protecting the differential in respect either to the N. R. A. or the A. A. A., because in this instance the factor which is being injected by Government fiat is a factor of definite and continuous and very substantial burden.

For example, according to the estimates under this bill, the total cost by way of pay-roll taxes in 1940 will be $1,600,000,000. By 1945 it will be $2,000,000,000. By 1950 it will be nearly $3,000,000,000. That $3,000,000,000 element injected into the pay-roll cost of American industry is injected squarely into the cost of production of the commodities produced. Therefore, so long as we are continuing to live under a system which pretends, at least, to offset the difference in cost of production at home and abroad by tariff differentials, it is perfectly obvious to me that if there is to be any semblance of a chance for the proposed law to succeed and prevail it must contain within itself the automatic means to protect this $3,000,000,000 increased element in the domestic production cost, or the entire system will fall and fail.

I submitted the amendment last Saturday. I ask the able Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] if he was able to find the time to give it some attention over the week-end. I should like, in my time, if the Senator from Mississippi has anything to say to me at the moment upon the subject, that he shall say it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I have looked into the matter at length, and have conferred with the Tariff Commission. When the Senator concludes, I shall make reply.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I think I have said all that I wish to say until the Senator from Mississippi shall have proceeded in respect to his own investigation.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, it is quite true that in respect to the N. R. A., because of the increased cost which might be involved by virtue of code provisions, and also with reference to the A. A. A., provisions were placed in the bills that investigations might be carried on by the Tariff Commission with a view of increasing the tariff duties. I have communicated with the Tariff Commission, and I received a memorandum from the acting chairman, Mr. Page, in which he said:

> In compliance with your request, I am enclosing a memorandum which covers the subject as thoroughly as could be done in the brief available time. As indicated in it, the Commission doubts the necessity or the advisability of incorporating the amendment in the social-security bill.

It will be observed, Mr. President, that under the present law the Tariff Commission has the power, not to take articles from the free list and put them on the dutiable list, but to increase up to 50 percent the tariff duties on dutiable articles; and it may take into consideration every factor which may increase the cost of the particular article. So there is nothing in this bill which would disturb the status quo with reference to the Tariff Commission so as to prevent the Commission, upon the presentation of an application by the interested parties, from making investigation to ascertain whether the tariff duties should be increased because of the additional tax which might be imposed.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. In the amendment it is provided that when the Commission has made its investigation and submitted its report, the President is required to proclaim the rates of duty recommended by the Commission.

Speaking a moment ago, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] indicated that the Commission now has the power to change rates. My understanding of the statute is that the Commission makes an investigation as to the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, and makes its findings of fact, upon which the President is authorized, within a limit of 50 percent of the existing rates, to change the rates in order to make them conform to the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad.

Mr. HARRISON. That is the present law.

Mr. ROBINSON. This amendment gives to the Commission the power to make tariff rates. It changes the so-called "flexible provision" of the tariff law in that particular and vests in the Tariff Commission rate-making power. The President has no function to perform under this amendment save to proclaim the rates recommended by the Commission. He cannot change them. He cannot withhold this recommendation. It is compulsory on the President to put into effect whatever rates the Commission may find in accordance with the investigation made under the terms of the amendment. Therefore, it constitutes a very radical and notable change in the existing flexible tariff law.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas is correct in reference to that question; but under the present law the Tariff Commission has the right to make the investigation, and if sufficient evidence is presented the Tariff Commission may recommend to the President an increase in rates, and the President may pass upon the recommendation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, if the Senator makes that point I desire to comment that I completely agree with the analysis made by the Senator from Arkansas, and say that the change in the amendment was deliberately made, for two reasons. First, I desired, if possible, to reduce this delegated power to an absolutely ministerial basis, with discretion eliminated; and, therefore, the amendment carries a specific formula that only a ministerial duty attaches to it.

Second, it is made mandatory for this reason: In my view, it is utterly essential to the success of this great adventure that it shall have the wholehearted cooperation of American industry; and it is my feeling, rightly or wrongly, that that cooperation will be forthcoming in infinitely greater degree if industry may know that the pay-roll taxes are to be offset by tariff increases whenever it can be demonstrated that the pay-roll taxes require the differential in order to preserve the relative status quo.

Mr. HARRISON. I assume that there is no difference of opinion between the Senator from Michigan and myself as to the right of the Tariff Commission now, on dutiable articles, to take this fact into consideration in their recommendations for an increase to the President of the United States.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. There is no difference of opinion upon that subject. The chief necessity of the amendment, from my point of view, is that two-thirds of our importations are on the free list anyway; and since the pay-roll tax applies to all of our industry it seems to me that the ability and the formula for treating the pay-roll tax differential should equally apply to all our industry, and of course the Senator will agree that it could not apply to all our industry under the flexible-tariff law.

Mr. HARRISON. It could not apply to any industry whose articles were on the free list.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further brief statement?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Michigan himself has pointed out another very material change in the law contemplated in his amendment. Neither the Tariff Commission nor the President under the flexible-tariff provision has the power to take a commodity from the free list and place it on the dutiable list. This amendment gives that power to the Commission, and under the Senator's statement it means that there would hereafter be no free list. There probably would be no commodities imported free of duty if this amendment were agreed to.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator is seeking accurately to reflect the amendment. There is nothing of that mandatory character in it, however, because in each instance there must be an adequate demonstration of the fact that the pay-roll tax had penalized the differential.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; but I base my conclusion on the assertion made by the Senator from Michigan that this would apply to practically all commodities manufactured in the United States and exported.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I meant to say that the philosophy of the amendment ought to apply to all.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I meant the philosophy, and I think that is a fair interpretation. Whatever the facts develop should govern in the situation. That is what I am trying to say.

Mr. ROBINSON. But the fact remains that it would give to the Tariff Commission, without even approval by the Chief Executive, the power to take any article from the free list and place it on the dutiable list.

There is another proposed change in the law, if I correctly interpret the amendment—and I shall not further delay the Senator from Mississippi when I shall have made this statement. The amendment eliminates the limitation in the existing flexible tariff provision whereby the President is authorized, upon proper investigation and finding by the Commission, to change existing tariff rates not more than 50 percent; that is, to raise or lower them 50 percent. As I interpret the amendment, it would give the Commission the power to change them without any limitation. Is that correct?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is correct, and the reason for it is that of course a 50-percent boundary could not apply to the free list. So far as I am concerned I shall be glad to have it apply to the dutiable list.

Mr. ROBINSON. Under existing law the rates are changed to make a duty more nearly conform to the test of cost of production. Nevertheless there is a limitation in the law to the effect that rates may be changed only 50 percent; that is, they may be raised 50 percent or they may be lowered 50 percent. In theory it might be true that an increase of 50 percent or a decrease of 50 percent would not bring about harmony in cost of production at home and abroad.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the amendment differs from the present law in another respect in that in the present law any interested person may make the application, while the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan provides "upon application of any employer to the United States Tariff Commission." Of course, under the provisions levying one tax under the bill "employers" include only those who employ four or more persons before they are subject to tax, and with respect to this tax and the other tax, there are certain exemptions. The amendment is really broader than the present tariff act and restricts it to applications being made only by an employer.

I should like to read to the Senator from Michigan and to the Senate the views of the Tariff Commission with respect to this matter. The acting chairman of the Tariff Commission says:

> Senator VANDENBERG's amendment makes it mandatory that upon request of any employer the Tariff Commission shall investigate the domestic costs of production with a view to determining whether any increase in duty is necessary to offset increased costs incurred because of the provisions of sections 804 and 901 of the act.

The Commission in its report to the President is to specify any increases found necessary, including changes in classification. Investigations are to be conducted according to the principles of section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930, but an article may be transferred from the free to the dutiable list and there is no limitation upon the amount of the increase in the duty except the limitation prescribed in the second sentence of paragraph 336 (g) which precludes an increase in duty above a certain rate specified in the act. Upon receipt of the Commission's report, the President must proclaim the changes found necessary.

The increased costs under sections 804 and 901, which investigations under this amendment are intended to protect, are as follows:

Section 804 provides for an excise tax on employers, starting with one-half of 1 percent of the pay roll in the period 1936–38 and increasing to a maximum of 3 percent in 1948 and subsequent years.

Section 901 provides for a tax on employers for the privilege of employing labor, the tax to be 1 percent of the cost of the labor in 1936, 2 percent in 1937, and 3 percent in 1938 and following years.

During the first few years the increase in costs of production due to the tax would be slight. In and after 1948 for a particular manufacturer where labor made up 25 percent of the cost his maximum increase would be 1½ percent. This percentage would increase as the ratio of labor to total cost increased.

Under section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930, the Tariff Commission is already empowered, on request of interested parties, when in the judgment of the Commission there is good and sufficient reason therefor, to investigate, with respect to any dutiable article, differences in cost of production here and abroad. Moreover, the President is already empowered to proclaim such changes in the rates on dutiable articles as the Commission's investigation may indicate to be necessary to equalize differences in foreign and domestic costs (including taxes on pay rolls). This amendment would make the investigation and the action by the President mandatory, and his action might conflict with certain provisions contained in trade agreements prohibiting the imposition of additional taxes.

It should be added that under this amendment every employer who chooses to do so may upon application compel the Tariff Commission to institute a cost-of-production investigation. A trivial increase in his costs might thus require the expenditure of large sums by the Government; the multitude of such applications would seriously impair the efficiency of the Tariff Commission in discharging its other duties.

It would, therefore, appear that the proposed amendment is neither necessary nor desirable. If, however, it were to be incorporated in the act, it would be almost imperative that the Tariff Commission be given some discretion as to whether or not an investigation and report were justified.

Therefore, Mr. President, it seems to me the amendment should not be adopted, and I hope the Senate will reject it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had concurred in the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 18) authorizing the Secretary of the Senate, in the enrollment of the bill (S. 1611) to authorize an exchange of lands between the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Co. and the United States at Quantico, Va., to correct an error.

SOCIAL SECURITY

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 7260) to provide for the general welfare by establishing a system of Federal old-age benefits, and by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for aged persons, dependent and crippled children, maternal and child welfare, public health, and the administration of their unemployment-compensation laws; to establish a Social Security Board; to raise revenue; and for other purposes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to know from the Senator from Mississippi whether he is interested in a proposal which was made this morning with reference to increasing the amount which the Federal Government shall contribute to taking care of the situation where the States may not contribute anything whatever.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Idaho that that is one phase of the question which was given every consideration by the Committee on Finance and by the Committee on Ways and Means. We reached the conclusion that in its present financial condition the Federal Government is going as far as it can go. We feel there ought to be a participation by the States and the Federal Government.

The Senator will recall that when the first bill was presented in the Congress it provided for large Federal control over the whole question and that the Federal Government should in many respects direct the States as to whom should receive a pension. The House of Representatives redrafted the bill and I think greatly improved it. I am sure the Senator thinks so, too.

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. HARRISON. The Committee on Finance thought it was greatly improved. We have here provided that the Federal Government shall contribute 50 percent, leaving it entirely to the States to determine which persons are in need, the only requirement we make being that they shall have reached the age of 65 years. The States best know who are entitled to old-age benefits.

I feel quite sure the situation has been somewhat exaggerated as to the inability of the States to provide their part of the money. Reference has been made to my own State. There were some 14,000 on the unemployment and relief rolls in my State. I am sure every person over 65 years of age who was in need sought to get on the unemployment or relief rolls in my State. My State is no worse off than other States in that respect. I am sure other States, like Mississippi, have made heroic efforts to care for the situation. With the $4,000,000,000 of money that we have now available with which to create jobs and take care of people in need, I feel quite sure the States can reasonably meet the situation.

I know there is a feeling that needy, aged persons ought to have more than $30 a month. There have been proposals to give them more than $30 a month; but there is this to be said about it, that the aged people heretofore who have received help and assistance have received it from the county or from some charitable organization, or in some instances it may have come from the State itself. The Federal Government has left the matter of assistance to the needy aged to the local communities. That has been traditional in this country. For the Federal Government now to assist at all is a new venture, quite at variance with our past record and history, and since the Federal Government heretofore has contributed nothing toward old-age pensions, certainly if we contribute 50 percent for their assistance now and hereafter, we shall have gone a long way and will be carrying a blessing to these people and to the States.

It is a pleasure for me to champion this bill. I believe in it, and while personally I wish the Government was in such condition that it might go further, let me say this: I care not how enthusiastic one may be in wishing to increase this amount, or in wishing to relieve the States from the burden of having to put up any portion of the amount, I am sure those who have been working and laboring in this matter have done the very best they can, and that it might complicate the situation greatly, and might defeat the whole purpose of the bill in the end, if we should strike out the provision that the States must contribute toward this fund their pro rata part, half of the total amount.

So I hope the Senator from Idaho will not offer any amendment to that effect. I am sure the committee would feel obliged to oppose it, and I do not know whether it would get through other barriers. You know what I mean.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, of course, there is no reflection upon the performance of the committee's duty. It is in no sense a reflection upon the work of the committee that upon a particular feature of the bill one may entertain a view which is different from that of the committee.

If these were normal times and normal conditions I should feel entirely differently about this matter; but I know that a number of the States are not in a position to make any substantial contribution. I should like to leave in the bill the provision that the State must make some contribution.

However small it may be, I think the State ought to be called into action with regard to the matter. I quite agree with that contention; but where the States are able to supply only something like six or eight dollars a month, and we contribute six or eight dollars a month, we are leaving these old people with a total of only some twelve or fourteen or sixteen dollars a month upon which to live.

As I say, if the times were normal, a wholly different problem would be presented; but these old people now are at the end of 4 or 5 years of depression. Their means have been exhausted to the last cent. They have nothing between them and the poorhouse, the old county farm. As we enter upon this type of legislation and propose to do something for their benefit, ought we not to do something more than provide an amount which is wholly inadequate to take care of them?

Mr. HARRISON. I will say to the Senator that, of course, I have a big heart myself.

Mr. BORAH. I am perfectly willing to leave the provision so that the States must put up something, but I wish to have an assurance in the bill, if we can get it, that a reasonable sum shall be provided in some way. When I say "a reasonable sum", I do not consider $30 a month a reasonable sum, but under the circumstances I am willing to accept it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Mississippi if it would be possible to provide that the Federal Government shall contribute its $15 a month, leaving the State to contribute whatever it may up to $15 more? In other words, is it necessary to provide that the Federal Government will pay nothing unless the State contributes a like amount?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Florida is a wise Senator and a very practical one, and he knows that if we should write such a provision into the bill the States would not contribute, and the Federal Government would be holding the bag.

As practical men, we know there is not any doubt that there is going to be a tremendous pressure in the future upon any gentleman who runs for public office, either in the lower House or in the Senate, to ask for an increase of the old-age pension; and we are all going to be subjected to that pressure. It is a reality that in this day and time groups become powerful and very often influence the judgment of candidates for political office. This is not a very logical argument, but it is a practical one. If we leave it entirely to the Congress to provide all the fund, and do not require the States to contribute their part of it, there will ever be pressure upon those seeking the Federal office. There should be some check against too great expenditures, and the cooperative plan here proposed will furnish it. The Senator appreciates that the State is not limited in the amount to be appropriated within the State for old-age pensions. They are permitted as each State may decide to go beyond the $30 a month.

There are so many things to consider in connection with a great forward movement like this that we must hold ourselves back a little bit, and get the very best and most constructive measure that we can.

I think this measure is most constructive. I think it is going forward quicker and better than we anticipated, and I hope we can pass this bill without having it complicated by proposals for eliminating State contributions. To do so may jeopardize this whole bill. That would be a travesty.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I said a moment ago, I do not desire to excuse the States wholly from this contribution. I think they ought to be required to put up some amount. But I am sure in some instances the amount will be very small. Now I do not want to see these old people end their lives in dire want simply because the State and the Government are unable to agree as to their respective portions. The National Government, by this bill, is assuming a responsibility. That matter is not open for debate. Having assumed the responsibility we should be just to the aged people who have, in many instances, contributed a life of service to the State and Nation.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Therein lies a difficulty which suggests itself to my mind with great force.

We all realize, of course, that it is probably impracticable now to effectuate any arrangement which will constitute a final and a permanent basis for old-age pensions. Nevertheless, unless we have well defined in the law what portion of the expense must be met by the local community or the State, as well as that which must be met by the National Government, we shall have almost as many different standards as there are States and localities; and we shall have this situation arising:

The authorities in some States will feel that it is difficult, in fact, almost impossible, to make any immediate provision for contribution, with the result that the Federal Government will carry the whole load that may be borne; and, as has been suggested by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the pressure on Congress will become irresistible to make adequate provision by the use of Federal funds alone. If we do not define in the law within limitation what the States shall do, some of them will do nothing, and discriminations will result. A contest may arise as to which State may be able to obtain the greatest benefit for its citizens without assuming corresponding responsibilities.

The Senator from Idaho has said that he realizes it is absolutely necessary to require the States to contribute something to this fund. What requirement would the Senator impose? This bill proceeds on the basis of other legislation which has been enacted, on the 50-50 basis. If we depart from the 50-50 basis, what basis shall we establish or accept; and will there be varying standards of Federal contribution set up to meet the differences in conditions that may reflect themselves from the various States?

I know there are some States which will find great difficulty in meeting the requirements that are contemplated by this bill; but, on the other hand, if we say they must do something, we are immediately confronted with the question, "Then what must they do?" And who will define or make clear the requirements that must be met by the States in order that their citizens may have the benefits of this measure?

If the Senator from Idaho were amending the bill, what change would he make? I ask for information because this subject has given me great cause for study.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly, Mr. President, I understand perfectly the difficulty of framing an amendment so as to leave the obligation upon the State, while at the same time providing a sufficient amount on which these old people can live.

I have made some effort today to draw an amendment, and I have done so, but it is not exactly satisfactory, although it represents the idea. If the bill is to go over until tomorrow I shall offer the amendment tomorrow. The amendment contemplates matching the States up to $15, and then after that the Federal Government making an appropriation which would fix the sum at a specified amount, say $30. The State, therefore, would have to put up something. It might put up but $6, and if it put up but $6 the Federal Government would match the $6 and put up enough more to make up the $30. That is as near as I have been able to arrive at a practical solution of the matter.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KING. This is not quite pertinent, perhaps, to the observations being submitted by the Senator, but I am sure he has in mind the fact that the Federal Government is confronted with the necessity of expenditures which it has great difficulty in meeting. The Finance Committee will meet within a few days to increase the burden of taxes made necessary by the enormous deficit which we are creating.

There are some States in the Union which pay a large part of the Federal taxes. In addition, they are the populous States, and the people of those States will have to pay enormous taxes in order to carry the burdens which will rest upon them under the pending bill.

If the Federal Government is to assume a larger burden, it simply means that we must go to those few States for more money.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator pardon me right there?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. While there are large States paying great sums of money, they have the wealth; and if we are to levy taxes in accordance with ability to pay, they should pay. In addition to that, I observe that in the distribution of funds which are going out from the Federal Treasury, these large States get their full share in proportion to their population.

Mr. KING. That is true; but consider the situation of the State of Illinois, though I do not wish to particularize any State. The Senator remembers that 2 or 3 years ago, notwithstanding there is considerable wealth in Illinois, they found difficulty, indeed, they found it was impossible, it was contended, for them to pay their school teachers and to carry on the schools, and they had to come to the Federal Government and ask for aid in order to meet some of the burdens resting upon them.

I do not want any State or any individual or any corporation to escape legitimate taxation, but the burdens now resting upon all of the States and upon the Federal Government are very, very great, and we ought to bear that in mind when we are seeking to increase the burdens of the Federal Government.

Mr. BORAH. I appreciate that. I think the question of the burden of taxes is one of the great problems which may be holding back recovery. I understand that perfectly. But we are peculiar in the fact that we discuss the question of the tax burden only on particular occasions.

I shall not offer the amendment at this time, but I wish to say to the Senator from Mississippi that I have not changed my view that we ought to take care of this situation, and I hope to be able to present an amendment to the Senator later which he may accept.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if he clings to the view that Federal aid should be conditioned on State aid?

Mr. BORAH. I cling to the view that there should be a matching up to a certain point where the State is unable to take care of the matter.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was wondering whether it would be possible to do away with that condition, let the Federal Government contribute what is thought wise, say $15, and let the States match the payment if it is possible to do so. Of course, the beneficiary would get the $15 even if the State did not contribute.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I have several amendments, which really constitute one amendment, which I desire to offer, but on which I do not desire unnecessarily to detain the Senate. The amendments are important, and a number of Senators have indicated a desire to discuss them, and since it would be impossible to act on them before the usual time of adjournment tonight, and inasmuch as several other amendments have gone over until tomorrow, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to offer the amendments and have them pending, and that they may go over until tomorrow.

Mr. ROBINSON. Have the amendments been printed?

Mr. CLARK. They have been printed, and have been on the desk for several days.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that he may have leave to present certain amendments, and have them go over until tomorrow. Is there objection? The chair hears none.

Mr. CLARK. I offer the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendments?

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed on page 15, after line 25, to insert the following:

(7) Service performed in the employ of an employer who has in operation a plan providing annuities to employees which is certified by the Board as having been approved by it under section 702, if the employee performing such service has elected to come under such plan; except that if any such employee withdraws from the plan before he attains the age of 65, or if the board withdraws its approval of the plan, the service performed while the employee was under such plan as approved shall be construed to be employment as defined in this subsection.

On page 43, line 11, after "Sec. 702.", to insert "(a)".

On page 43, between lines 17 and 18, to add the following new paragraphs:

(b) The board shall receive applications from employers who desire to operate private annuity plans with a view to providing benefits in lieu of the benefits otherwise provided for in title II of this act, and the board shall approve any such plan and issue a certificate of such approval if it finds that such plan meets the following requirements:

(1) The plan shall be available, without limitation as to age, to any employee who elects to come under such plan.

(2) The benefits payable at retirement and the conditions as to retirement shall not be less favorable, based upon accepted actuarial principles, than those provided for under section 202.

(3) The contributions of the employee and the employer shall be deposited with a life-insurance company, an annuity organization, or a trustee, approved by the board.

(4) Termination of employment shall constitute withdrawal from the plan.

(5) Upon the death of an employee his estate shall receive an amount not less than the amount it would have received if the employee had been entitled to receive benefits under title II of this act.

(c) The board shall have the right to call for such reports from the employer and to make such inspections of his records as will satisfy it that the requirements of subsection (b) are being met, and to make such regulations as will facilitate the operation of such private annuity plans in conformity with such requirements.

(d) The board shall withdraw its approval of any such plan upon the request of the employer, or if it finds that the plan or any action taken thereunder fails to meet the requirements of subsection (b)."

On page 52, after line 7, to add the following new paragraph:

(7) Service performed by an employee before he attains the age of 65 in the employ of an employer who has in operation a plan providing annuities to employees which is certified by the board as having been approved by it under section 702, if the employee has elected to come under such plan, and if the Commissioner of Internal Revenue determines that the aggregate annual contributions of the employee and the employer under such plan as approved are not less than the taxes which would otherwise be payable under sections 801 and 804, and that the employer pays an amount at least equal to 50 percent of such taxes: Provided, That if any such employee withdraws from the plan before he attains the age of 65, or if the board withdraws its approval of the plan, there shall be paid by the employer to the Treasurer of the United States, in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, an amount equal to the taxes which would otherwise have been payable by the employer and the employee on account of such service, together with interest on such amount at 3 percent per annum compounded annually.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I send to the desk two amendments which I ask to have printed and to lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I understand that only two or three amendments have been suggested which remain undisposed of, and that those amendments are not to be acted on today. Unless there is some objection, I shall move an executive session.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, although I may make some changes in my amendment, I think I ought to have it printed so that Senators may have an opportunity to consider it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho offers an amendment, which will be printed and lie on the table.

TRIFUNE KORAC

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1863) for the relief of Trifune Korac, which was, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "representing" and insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for."

Mr. VANDENBERG. For the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Harry E. Pratt, of Alaska, to be district judge, division no. 4, District of Alaska, to succeed E. Coke Hill, resigned.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Elwood Hamilton, of Kentucky, to be United States district judge, Western District of Kentucky, to succeed Charles I. Dawson, resigned.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the calendar is in order.

FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK BOARD

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John H. Fahey to be a member of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask that the nomination go over for the present.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the nomination cannot be carried over simply on one objection. I think the matter ought to be disposed of.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think that if the Senator will allow the nomination to go over until tomorrow I shall be able to have it disposed of at that time. It may be that I will have no objection, but there are one or two matters in connection with it I am looking into, and I should like to have the nomination go over.

Mr. FLETCHER. I merely make the point that one objection will not carry it over. I am willing to accommodate the Senator if he desires to have the nomination go over until tomorrow and thinks it can be disposed of tomorrow.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think we will be able to dispose of the nomination tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will go over. over.

POSTMASTER

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Margaret C. Henderson to be postmaster at Fair Mount, Ga.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in legislative session, took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, June 18, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATION

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate June 17 (legislative day of May 13), 1935

POSTMASTER

GEORGIA

Margaret C. Henderson, Fair Mount.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JUNE 17, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, as we wait at the mercy seat of prayer, we beseech Thee to hear us. Put Thy seal upon our foreheads and a consciousness of our sonship in our hearts. To be worthy of our intellectual, moral, and spiritual gifts with which we are endowed is our earnest desire. In all our relationships with our fellow men may we do unto them as we would have them do unto us. Hold us loyal to the stern ideals of duty, possessing a passion of patriotism and asserting an influence for righteousness. We need Thee for fleeting time, for shifting scenes, and for varying fortunes. O blessed Lord, be with us in life's transitions and teach us the sacredness of each common day. Through Christ, in whose holy name we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, June 15, 1935, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 547. An act for the relief of Alfred W. Kliefoth;

S. 1325. An act for the relief of Dino Carbonell;

S. 1585. An act for the relief of Stefano Talanco and Edith Talanco;

S. 2218. An act for the relief of Elsie Segar; and

S. 2333. An act for the relief of John W. Dady.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 7160) entitled "An act to provide for research into basic laws and principles relating to agriculture and to provide for the further development of cooperative agricultural extension work and the more complete endowment and support of land-grant colleges", disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. SMITH, Mr. WHEELER, and Mr. NORRIS to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. Con. Res. 18. Concurrent resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Senate in the enrollment of the bill (S. 1611) to authorize an exchange of lands between the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Co. and the United States at Quantico, Va., to correct an error.

EXTENSION OF CERTAIN EXCISE TAXES, ETC.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass House Joint Resolution 324, to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Joint Resolution 324

Resolved, etc., That title IV, as amended, and parts I, II, III, and IV of title V, as amended, of the Revenue Act of 1932, are further amended by striking out "1935" wherever appearing therein, and inserting in lieu thereof "1937." Section 1001 (a), as amended, of the Revenue Act of 1932, and section 2, as amended, of the act entitled "An act to extend the gasoline tax for 1 year, to modify postage rates on mail matter, and for other purposes", approved June 16, 1933, are further amended by striking out "1935" wherever appearing therein, and inserting in lieu thereof "1937."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves to suspend the rules and pass House Joint Resolution 324. Is a second demanded?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Massachusetts to 20 minutes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. House Joint Resolution 324, which is now under consideration, merely proposes to extend certain temporary provisions of our revenue laws for a period of 2 years. These temporary provisions were originally enacted in the Revenue Act of 1932 in a desperate effort to balance the Budget at that time. The majority of the taxing provisions are in the same form today as when originally enacted, and a few have been amended by subsequent legislation. There are about 24 excise taxes which will automatically expire under existing law within the next 2 months unless the resolution now under consideration passes. The majority of these taxes will expire on June 30, 1935, and four of them will expire on July 31, 1935. There are also five permanent taxes which have temporarily increased rates or decreased exemptions. Unless the pending resolution becomes law, these increased rates or decreased exemptions will cease to take effect after June 30, 1935. In addition, the existing temporary rate of 3 cents on nonlocal first-class mail matter will automatically be reduced to 2 cents on June 30, 1935, unless the legislation now under consideration is enacted.

The most important of the excise taxes which your committee recommends extending and which will be completely eliminated within the next 2 months if such an extension is not accomplished, include those on lubricating oil, gasoline, automobile trucks, passenger automobiles, motorcycles, auto accessories, tires and tubes, jewelry, furs, radios, mechanical refrigerators, sporting goods and firearms, electrical energy, matches, telephone and telegraph messages, transfer of bonds, conveyances, transportation of oil by pipe line, and imported crude oil, coal, lumber, and copper.

The excise taxes which are subject to rate reduction under existing temporary laws include those on issues of bonds, issues of stock, stock transfers, sales of produce for future delivery, and admissions.

It is estimated that the Federal Government will face an annual loss of revenue of nearly $502,000,000 if the temporary tax provisions already referred to are not extended. While our revenues are showing a substantial increase in the current year over the prior year, nevertheless, our expenditures in connection with the recovery program and in connection with relief are so heavy that it appears obvious that the Federal Government cannot afford to lose over one-half billion dollars of revenue annually at this time. I am aware that many of the taxes extended by this resolution are objectionable or contain objectionable features. However, if we should attempt to take off even one of these taxes, numerous arguments would be presented which would show that it would be fully as meritorious to take off some other tax. I believe, therefore, that it is the wisest plan to renew all of these temporary taxing provisions for a period of 2 years without change. If it becomes apparent in the future that conditions warrant the removal of some or all of these taxes, then, of course, there is no legal obstacle to such removal prior to the date now provided for in the joint resolution.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. As I understand it, the gentleman says that these taxes were enacted in 1932 during the Hoover administration.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Is it not a fact that at that time the Democrats had a majority of the Committee on Ways and Means, and they brought in the tax bill?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes; and that shows the generosity, patriotism, and fairness of the Democratic Party, when a Republican administration was seriously embarrassed on account of expenditures; when President Hoover said in his December message, 1931, there would be a deficit for the fiscal year of 1932 of $900,000,000, and for 1933 of over $2,000,000,000.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. You say that this was under the Hoover administration, and that we had a majority in the House on the Democratic side, and these taxes were put on at the special instance of the then administration. The taxes were put on at the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Ogden Mills.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Secretary Mellon appeared, and Under Secretary Mills, who was the spokesman for Secretary Mellon, urged the imposition of certain special taxes in order to meet, or meet in part, that deficit. He estimated the taxes would bring something over $500,000,000 and help to meet the needs of the Treasury. But after we raised these additional taxes, it turned out that the deficit for the last 2 years of the Hoover administration, which was added to the public debt, was over $4,000,000,000, without any substantial expenditures for relief or recovery.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield for a nonpolitical question?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Does not the gentleman believe that it is a wise policy for the Federal Government to stay out of fields of taxation that have already been preempted by the States? I have special reference to the excise tax on gasoline.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Oh, we hear a great deal about the excise tax on gasoline. I opposed the imposition of that tax at the time it was imposed, but it was imposed to meet an emergency, and so long as the beneficiaries of the gasoline tax receive the benefits they are now getting out of the large appropriations from the Federal Treasury for the construction and maintenance of highways, I think that of all taxpayers they have, perhaps, the least reason to complain. It will be remembered that out of the $3,300,000,000 allocated to the P. W. A., $400,000,000 was earmarked, specially designated and set aside for the building of highways in the country, and $50,000,000 additional for highways in public parks, forest preserves, and on Indian lands.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. But it is a fact that the States are not actually receiving any Federal aid on highways from the Federal Government. As a matter of fact, the Government is simply returning to the States this additional gasoline tax that it takes away from the States?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. It is true that the Federal Government has contributed more than $2,000,000,000 altogether to the building of roads in the various States, and at the present time under the present status the Government is returning to each State in money for roads about $4 for every dollar collected from that State in gasoline tax.

Mr. DOUGHTON. And so long as that is done, so long as there is going to the various States three or four times as much from the Federal Treasury as is being paid into the Federal Treasury under the gasoline tax, I think there is no just ground for complaint as far as that is concerned. Of course, we all know that gasoline, automobiles, and automobile accessories are heavily taxed, but the great part of this tax is imposed by the States. The States impose from 4 to 6 cents a gallon on gasoline, while the Federal Government is imposing only 1 cent per gallon, and still we are appropriating more money from the Federal Treasury than the States are appropriating themselves for road building.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. That would not be true for the State of Minnesota.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Does the gentleman know how much money his State is getting from the Federal Treasury for roads?

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I know that we are contributing several times as much in taxes on motor vehicles and gasoline as the Federal Government is contributing.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Oh, that does not answer the question. The gentleman knows that unless these taxes are imposed we will have to add to the public debt and pay additional interest, or we must sit here and levy additional taxes. If in the judgment of the House it is better to remain here and write a tax bill, the Ways and Means Committee is the willing servant of the House.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. If the gentleman will yield further, my objection is not predicated upon any complaint that my State is not getting back enough from the Federal Government, but that there is an inherent danger in the Federal Government taxing the same sources of income as the States tax, and pyramiding the taxes unduly.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Will the gentleman yield on that question?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The States have also offended against the Federal Government by entering a field previously occupied by the Federal Government in the levying of inheritance taxes. This is a temporary tax. As soon as the emergency is passed we want to leave this to the States, but under conditions which exist now and have existed for the past 2 years, we feel that we must have this money. That is the only reason we are asking to have this tax continued.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. Some of the Members feel that certain of the nuisance taxes ought to be repealed. I believe the gentleman himself feels that way about certain items in this bill. I would like to ask why, under those conditions, it is necessary to bring this bill up under suspension of the rules, with only 20 minutes' debate on a side? Why not give us sufficient time for general debate and an opportunity to amend the bill?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Every one is familiar with these taxes. They have been in existence, as I stated, since 1932. We feel that the least burdensome way of raising the necessary revenue can be effected by extending these taxes. If we were to get into long extended debate about amending this bill, it will make it necessary to rewrite the entire revenue laws of the Government. That is all there is to it. If we undertake to remove any of these taxes, of course it will be necessary to substitute others. If the gentleman has in mind other taxes that can be substituted for these taxes, of course the Ways and Means Committee would have been glad to have considered a bill, if the gentleman had introduced one.

Mr. TRUAX. Does the gentleman not think that this is a rather long-drawn-out emergency? We are talking about a tax bill that was enacted in 1932. Will the gentleman tell me the emergency for which we must continue and perpetuate these unjust nuisance taxes?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I will say to the gentleman, who, of course, has voted for most of the appropriations for the recovery and relief measures deemed necessary by the Congress, were it not for those extraordinary and emergency expenditures we would not need to continue these emergency taxes, because for this year the current expenses of the Government, not taking into consideration expenditures for relief and recovery, are about $100,000,000 less than receipts. The gentleman from Ohio is a very valuable and capable Member of this House, always at his post, and I am sure he realizes that were it not for these emergency expenditures it would not be necessary to continue these excise taxes.

Mr. TRUAX. Is it not a fact that if we taxed wealth and income sufficiently that we could do away with, repeal, many of these nuisance taxes?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Perhaps we could, but there is a great difference in judgment as to the meaning of the word "sufficient." The gentleman must remember that some income taxes now run as high as 63 percent, and then we have estate taxes, and almost every form of taxation. I am not pretending, of course, to defend or explain the general tax situation. It might be that if we had ample time, substitute taxes less burdensome and onerous could be levied. The gentleman recalls that in the last Congress a subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means sat during the summer recess of Congress and wrote a tax bill whereby we raised over $400,000,000 in revenue without increasing any tax rates, but by closing loopholes; and that bill was so popular that it was passed by the House with only seven opposing votes. Our committee is anxious to, and will as soon as it has time, continue the study of the whole tax question with a view of readjusting taxes and removing as far as we can the most burdensome ones, but under present conditions the committee is of the opinion that the best we can do now is to continue these taxes. They expire on the 30th day of the month and cannot be made retroactive. So we feel they should be continued under this resolution, but that does not foreclose further consideration, I will say to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. TRUAX. I am glad to hear this statement from the chairman of the committee, and I do hope his committee will give careful study and consideration to this whole matter.

Mr. DOUGHTON. As far as I am concerned as chairman of the committee, it will be my purpose to discuss with the committee the matter of having early hearings with the purpose in mind of readjusting these taxes.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. How much additional revenue was provided by the increase in the price of stamps from 2 cents to 3 cents, which is one of the most objectionable of the nuisance taxes?

Mr. DOUGHTON. About $75,000,000, I will say to the gentleman from California. It is estimated that if these taxes are extended the postal receipts and expenditures will about balance.

The President in his Budget message recommended the extension of all these temporary provisions. This recommendation has been reiterated in recent letters from the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General, which I will insert at this point as part of my remarks. In connection with the continuation of the 3-cent postage rate on nonlocal first-class mail it is to be observed that the resolution continues the provision empowering the President to reduce such 3-cent rate if, after a survey, he finds the facts warrant such reduction.

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., April 26, 1935.

Hon. ROBERT L. DOUGHTON,
Chairman Committee on Ways and Means,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. DOUGHTON: Under existing law, Revenue Act of May 10, 1934, the additional charge of 1 cent on each ounce of first-class matter mailed for other than local delivery will expire July 1, 1935, and unless there be legislation to the contrary the former rate of 2 cents for each ounce will automatically be restored on that date.

The rate for first-class local matter at letter-carrier offices was restored to 2 cents an ounce or fraction thereof by the act of June 10, 1933, effective July 1, 1933. Such reduction was recommended by the Department in the hope that it would result in the return to the mails of local first-class matter diverted therefrom when the rate was increased to 3 cents, and that the additional volume would offset in a material way the loss of revenue resulting from the restoration of the lower rate. However, the anticipated increase of volume did not materialize, and consequently the restoration of the 2-cent rate for local first-class matter has resulted in a considerable loss of revenue. The cost ascertainment shows that for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1933, during which the 3-cent rate applied to first-class matter addressed for local delivery, the postage on such matter amounted to $83,702,040, while for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1934, during which the 2-cent rate was applicable, the postage on such matter amounted to only $62,545,550, or a loss of $21,156,490.

There is some sentiment for the restoration of the 2-cent rate for first-class matter generally. While the Department is heartily in favor of such restoration at the earliest practicable date, in view of the present state of the postal finances it is felt that it would be imprudent to do this on July 1 next, as it would result in an estimated loss of approximately $75,000,000.

It is therefore recommended that legislation be enacted continuing until July 1, 1936, the 3-cent rate on first-class matter mailed for other than local delivery. For this purpose it is recommended that section 515 of the Revenue Act of 1934 be amended to read as follows:

"Section 1001 (a), as amended, of the Revenue Act of 1932, and section 2 of the act entitled 'An act to extend the gasoline tax for 1 year, to modify postage rates on mail matter, and for other purposes', approved June 16, 1933, as amended by the act of May 10, 1934, are further amended by striking out '1935' wherever such date appears and inserting in lieu thereof '1936.'"

Very truly yours,

JAMES A. FARLEY,
Postmaster General.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am glad to avail myself of the opportunity afforded by your invitation to have representatives of the Treasury appear before the subcommittee of which you are chairman to answer questions in respect to legislation affecting the miscellaneous internal-revenue taxes. As you are aware, a number of these taxes were terminated by the Revenue Act of 1934; a substantial number of other taxes expire on June 30 and July 31 of this year; and in the case of a few of the continuing taxes, the rate will be substantially reduced, effective on June 30.

The President in his Budget message of January 7 estimated that the miscellaneous internal-revenue taxes for 1936 would increase some $143,000,000 over the collections for 1935, stating that "this increase is predicated on the assumption that the taxes terminating on June 30 and July 31, 1935, will be extended by Congress, and also that the tax rates which would be reduced on June 30, 1935, will be continued." Accordingly the President recommended "that the Congress take steps by suitable legislation to extend the miscellaneous internal-revenue taxes which under existing law will expire next June or July, and also to maintain the current rates of taxes which will be reduced next June." He added, "I consider that such taxes are necessary to the financing of the Budget for 1936."

The representatives of the Treasury appearing before your committee will be glad to answer any questions and to make available to the committee the results of its experience with these taxes.

Respectfully,

H. MORGENTHAU, Jr.,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. SAMUEL B. HILL,
Chairman Subcommittee of Ways and Means Committee,
House of Representatives.

In respect to the excise taxes, it appears that the Federal rates are not unreasonable as a whole. For instance, the gasoline tax is only 1 cent per gallon, while the tax in Great Britain is 16 cents per British gallon, corresponding to about 13 cents per United States gallon. It is true that the States also impose the gasoline tax, but their rate when added to the Federal rate rarely exceeds 6 cents per gallon. Again, on account of reasonable rates and liberal exemptions, we receive less than $16,000,000 from our tax on admissions. Great Britain, with about one-third our population, collects over $46,000,000 annually from this source. I do not wish it to be inferred from the above comparison that I would not be glad to see the gasoline tax relinquished to the States, or to see the admissions tax removed, but I do contend that we should cheerfully bear our present reasonable tax burden on these items until our revenues more nearly provide for our expenditures.

The present condition of the Treasury is most encouraging, in light of the tremendous expenditures it has been obliged to face in connection with the recovery and relief programs. The revenues for the first 10 months of this fiscal year exceed the revenues for the first 10 months of the last fiscal year by over $600,000,000, or by 22 percent. Moreover, the revenues in the same period exceeded the regular operating expenses of the Government by nearly $100,000,000. We are in the "red" solely as the result of the emergency expenditures for recovery and relief.

The revenues which will be continued with the passage of this joint resolution are important, since they constitute nearly one-seventh of our total revenues from all sources. We cannot afford to give up such a substantial portion of our revenues at this time. Such action would only increase our national debt at a rapid rate, increase our annual interest charge, and shift to future generations the burden we should be sufficiently courageous to bear. I hope that the Membership of the House will concur in this view and pass this joint resolution, which will insure to the Treasury a reliable and substantial source of revenue. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, we are about to extend the 3-cent postage rate in this resolution, and the 2-cent drop-letter rate will still apply to letters mailed for delivery within a city. In this connection, I wish to call attention in the short time at my disposal to the discrimination against the city of New York and the city of Los Angeles, because the cities of New York and Los Angeles will be the only cities where the 2-cent drop-letter rate will not apply. There are 5 counties in the city of New York, yet there are 7 separate postal districts; for example, there are 4 postal districts in Queens, 1 in Kings, 1 in Richmond, 1 in New York, and none in the Bronx. Letters mailed within the city from one of these postal districts to another must carry a 3-cent rate. This means that in some cases a business man or an individual can mail a letter at the 2-cent rate for delivery within, say, a distance of 16 miles in one direction, but if he mails it in another direction he has to put a 3-cent stamp on the letter to carry it only one block. This has caused great annoyance and confusion, and I think it is discriminatory against the people of the Greater City of New York. It is impossible for the average citizen to know the boundaries of these postal districts, and many to insure delivery of their mail within the city put a 3-cent stamp when perhaps 2 cents would do.

Had this bill come up under the general rules of the House I would have offered an amendment to correct this discrimination against the people of the cities of New York and Los Angeles. I am unable to do so, of course, under the parliamentary situation. The Members of the House are denied the right to offer amendments, yet in the Senate this right will not be denied. The courteous Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee has assured me that he will grant those of us who are interested in New York City a hearing with a view of bringing out a short bill to correct this discrimination. I wish to thank the gentleman from California [Mr. COLDEN] for calling my attention to the similar situation which exists in Los Angeles.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I would say to the gentleman from New York that I shall be glad to give this matter careful consideration. I would call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the President has authority to reduce the rate from 3 cents to 2 cents on letters for local delivery; he can do that by Executive order, and will still have that power after this resolution is passed at any time he deems it advisable to reduce the rate from 3 cents to 2 cents.

Mr. BACON. I appreciate that. I have felt that the citizens of New York, no matter where they live within the city, ought to be given the same 2-cent rate on letters for local delivery within the city that prevails in the case of every other incorporated city. If the President has the power to correct this situation, I hope he will act at once. If he does not act, I hope in the interest of fair play that Congress will act.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I have had such a short time allotted me that I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and to include therein a letter I addressed to the Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and a letter of the Merchants' Association of New York that is addressed to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, other letters, and two bills I have introduced on the subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

MARCH 14, 1935.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. DOUGHTON: For the consideration of your committee, I enclose herewith a copy each of H. R. 6514 and H. R. 6515. While carrying different numbers, both of these bills have the same objective, namely, to provide for the application of the 2-cent rate on first-class mail matter for delivery within the confines of any incorporated city and to contiguous cities. For bill-drafting purposes it may be that H. R. 6515 is to be preferred.

My primary purpose in introducing these measures, which contemplate an amendment to the 1932 Revenue Act, and therefore should properly come before your committee, is to remedy an unfair, discriminating, and annoying condition brought about through the limitation of the 2-cent postal rate on first-class mail matter for local delivery, insofar as it affects the city of New York.

The incorporated city of New York, with a population of 6,930,446 (1930 census), is made up of five counties and boroughs. The boroughs are coextensive with the counties, and for your easy reference I list them below, with their populations:

Population:
Bronx County, Bronx Borough	1,265,258
New York County, Manhattan Borough	1,867,312
Richmond County, Richmond Borough	158,346
Kings County, Brooklyn Borough	2,560,401
Queens County, Queens Borough	1,079,129
Total population, city of New York	6,930,446

However, in the city of New York, there are today 7 independent post offices, and, therefore, the existence of 7 independent local delivery rates.

But these 7 post offices are not distributed equally—4 are in Queens County, 1 in Kings County, 1 in Richmond County, 1 in New York County, and none in Bronx County.

The condition is created, therefore, that the 2-cent local-delivery rate does not apply throughout the whole county of Queens, but only within the four postal districts in that county. Stated another way, it means that the 3-cent rate applies in Queens County wherever first-class mail is sent from one postal area to another in Queens County.

This obviously, in the case of Queens County, puts the people of this county at a decided disadvantage, without any justification of any sort, so far as I can see. But when Queens County's situation is contrasted with what obtains in Bronx and New York Counties, this disadvantage is magnified tremendously.

Bronx County, having no independent post office, has its mail facilities served out of the post office in New York County. Therefore, not only does Bronx County have the local 2-cent delivery rate within its own entire area but this privilege is extended for Bronx County residents to the entire area of New York County also, or Manhattan. Therefore, a person in the Bronx can send a letter either to an address in the Bronx or to an address in Manhattan and still get the benefit of the 2-cent rate.

New York County, of course, has the same advantages as the Bronx; in fact, they must have, for the reason that it has the only post office for both New York County and Bronx County.

Kings County has the privilege of the 2-cent local-delivery rate throughout its county confines.

Richmond County, or Staten Island, has the privilege of the 2-cent local-delivery rate throughout its county confines.

But Queens County is the one county, and the only county, part and parcel of the city of New York though it is, that does not have the 2-cent local-delivery rate on a county-wide basis.

But while there is the above intercounty discrimination, there is at present also the confusion and annoyance and discrimination that is created by having an un-uniform postal rate for the entire city of New York, or the incorporated city.

It is true there are the borough subdivisions, but, after all, these are administrative border lines, and not border lines easily known or establishable. The average citizen, especially in Queens County, who has not a postal zone map before him, in many cases is absolutely unable to determine precisely the delivery limits of the various post offices in that county.

In Queens County the situation is absolutely chaotic. But in addition—and this is an important consideration—the Queens County businessman and resident is very decidedly discriminated against under the present definition that has been applied to the 1932 Revenue Act provision providing the 2-cent local delivery rate.

Business in the incorporated city of New York today is greatly hindered in its mailing operations, and because of the discrimination raised by the seven independent postal areas within the confines of the incorporated city of New York there is the definite and added handicap to business because of the additional cost raised by the 3-cent rate when the mail passes artificial administrative boundaries.

A business man enjoying the areas of Bronx and New York Counties in his operations can send first-class mail in these areas for 2 cents, yet right across the river, in Queens County, the business man there can only enjoy the 2-cent rate in the area bounded by the postal district of each of the four existing post offices.

For example, Queens County has four post offices: Long Island City, Far Rockaway, Flushing, and Jamaica. Within the limits of each postal district the 2-cent rate applies. Yet when the business man in Queens County, with his headquarters, say, in Jamaica, wants to send a letter to Flushing, a mile or so away, he has to pay 3 cents. If he wants to send a letter to Long Island City he has to pay 3 cents. If he wants to send a letter to the Bronx, entirely outside of the county, and the farthest removed, he still has only to pay 3 cents.

This example, compared with the fact that Bronx and New York Counties enjoy the 2-cent rate in both these counties, I think amply emphasizes the discrimination against Queens County.

In my estimation, Greater New York, or the incorporated city of New York, homogeneous as it is in area and also in business activity, ought to be treated as one delivery area. And so ought every other incorporated city, if there is any other where the same conditions apply.

If deemed advisable, I should like to see this policy applied also to contiguous cities, and my bill provides for this.

Sincerely,

ROBERT L. BACON.

MARCH 27, 1935.

Hon. ROBERT L. DOUGHTON,
Chairman Committee on Ways and Means,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. DOUGHTON: To correct an anomalous situation existing in Greater New York with respect to postage rates, Representative BACON has introduced two bills—H. R. 6514 and H. R. 6515—proposing an amendment to section 1001 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1932, the effect of which would be to make the 2-cent rate on first-class matter applicable within all of the boroughs of Greater New York.

The Merchants' Association of New York strongly endorses the proposal contained in Mr. BACON's bills and urgently requests that it receive favorable consideration by your committee to the end that either one or the other be enacted at the earliest practicable date.

Since July 1, 1933, under the provisions of the act of June 16, 1933 (Public, No. 73, 73d Cong.), first-class mail addressed for delivery within the Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx has been subject to the rate of 2 cents per ounce, while that for delivery between the Borough of Manhattan and the other boroughs has been subject to the rate of 3 cents per ounce. Because of the eight separate postal jurisdictions within Greater New York the confining of the 2-cent rate to the respective postal districts has created a most inequitable condition. It has caused a great deal of confusion, delay, and additional expense to the business interests and unquestionably considerable loss incident to those delays.

In September 1933 we made a careful study of this matter and made direct inquiry among the large mail users in our membership. So far as we were able to get figures they showed that if the 2-cent rate were uniformly applied throughout the city the Government would obtain additional first-class mailings, the revenues from which would, to a large degree, offset any possible loss.

Under date of September 19, 1933, we addressed a letter to the President, transmitting a petition signed by 81 of the largest users of mails in this city urging the President to use the powers vested in him under section 2 of the act approved June 16, 1933, for the purpose of ordering a survey of the first-class mail rates as they applied to New York City in order to determine what modifications of that rate would do the most to promote the interests of business and of the Postal Service. A copy of that letter and petition are enclosed.

In due course that letter and petition were referred to the Postmaster General. Under date of October 6, 1933, the Third Assistant Postmaster General, to whom the letter had been referred by the Postmaster General, responded to the effect that the Department found it impracticable to modify the rates as suggested.

May we count upon your active cooperation in securing the early consideration and passage of the amendment proposed by Mr. BACON?

Sincerely yours,

THE MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK,
By S. C. MEAD, Secretary.

SEPTEMBER 19, 1933.

Hon. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
President of the United States, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The Merchants' Association of New York begs to present to you herewith a petition that has been signed by 81 large users of the mails in New York City asking that you use the powers vested in you under section 2 of the act of Congress approved June 16, 1933, and order a survey of the first-class-mail rates as they are applied in New York City in order to determine what modifications of that rate will do the most to promote the interests of business and of the Postal Service, and that if you find such action justified you issue an order establishing a 2-cent rate on all first-class matter mailed in Greater New York for delivery in Greater New York.

In presenting this matter to you may we state that the situation existing in New York City is of very deep concern to all those who have occasion to make frequent use of the intracity mails. The segregation within the city of eight separate postal districts, with a 2-cent rate applying within the districts and a 3-cent rate applying on letters transmitted to other districts, is the cause of endless confusion and delay and imposes an expense on concerns whose business is city-wide in character, which goes far beyond the matter of the extra postage.

The companies that have joined in this petition to you to correct this situation are users of the first-class mails for intracity delivery to the extent of more than 18,000,000 pieces per year, of which approximately half are for delivery within the postal zones of their places of business and, therefore, at the 2-cent rate, and half are for delivery in other zones at the 3-cent rate.

About one-quarter of the concerns reporting state that so far as they are concerned the Government is losing revenue, because they are now making use of the third-class mails, postal cards, or messenger service for the delivery of material which at the 2-cent rate would be sent by first-class mail. Some of our correspondents have expressed the opinion that this use of substitutes is so great that the Government has incurred large net losses because of the city-wide application of the 3-cent rate.

So far as we have been able to get figures, these figures show that if the 2-cent rate were uniformly applied throughout the entire city, the Government would obtain additional first-class mailings, the revenues from which would, to a large degree, offset the loss through the reduction of rates. Specifically, 18 concerns whose monthly first-class mail, within the city, amounts to 534,000 pieces have indicated to us that this mail would be increased by approximately 350,000 pieces if the petition which we have forwarded to you is granted.

The most frequently heard complaint, however, deals with the inconvenience, confusion, and expense which the present system entails on mail users. In this connection we beg to call your attention to comments which have been made by some of those who have signed this petition. These comments are set down on a separate memorandum attached to this letter, each paragraph of which represents the comment made by a different signer. Attached to this communication also is a copy of the petition which was signed, together with a list of the concerns signing it and a statement of the amount of their first-class mail. The original signed petitions are on file in our office and we would be very glad to submit them to you at your request.

We respectfully urge that you give this matter your very careful attention.

Respectfully yours,

THE MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK,
By L. K. COMSTOCK, President.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,
New York, May 3, 1935.

Hon. ROBERT L. BACON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to send you herewith a copy of a report entitled "City-wide Two-cent Local First-class Postage Rate Urged", which was unanimously adopted at the annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York held May 2, 1935.

Your attention is called thereto.

Copies of this report have been sent to all Members of Congress.

Respectfully yours,

JERE D. TAMBLYN, Secretary.

(NOTICE.—This report was mailed to all members of the chamber 5 days before the meeting, and copies were also placed in the hands of each member attending the meeting, when opportunity was given for discussion. The vote thereon therefore can fairly be said to represent the opinion of the entire membership. The meetings of the chamber are attended by three or four hundred members.)

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

At the annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, held May 2, 1935, the following resolution and report, submitted by its committee on internal trade and improvements, were unanimously adopted:

CITY-WIDE 2-CENT LOCAL FIRST-CLASS POSTAGE RATE URGED

To the Chamber of Commerce:

The committee on internal trade and improvements offers the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York endorses H. R. 6514 and H. R. 6515, recently introduced in Congress, to establish a 2-cent rate on first-class mail matter for delivery within the confines of any incorporated city, and urges upon Congress the enactment into law of these or similar measures."

This chamber pointed out at the monthly meeting, October 5, 1933, that owing to the geographical position of this city and the several post offices therein, the ruling regarding local delivery at a 2-cent rate for first-class mail caused considerable confusion and inequities. Under this ruling, in the city of New York some first-class mail is carried a distance of 16 miles for 2 cents, while in other directions 3-cent postage is necessary to transmit a letter a distance of 2 miles. The report adopted at that time by the members of the chamber expressed the opinion that the local delivery rates should apply to all points within city limits. It was pointed out that the recent reduction in first-class local postage rates had been a great benefit to business and industry, and an extension of this rate throughout the city of New York and other cities where similar conditions exist, would be an additional benefit. Your committee on internal trade and improvements is of the same opinion today.

Respectfully submitted.

THOMAS F. WOODLOCK, Chairman,
WILLIAM H. COVERDALE,
JOHN F. FOWLER,
MARSHALL W. GLEASON,
SAMUEL T. HUBBARD,
JAMES J. MAGUIRE,
JOHN P. H. PERRY,
Committee on Internal Trade and Improvements.
THOMAS I. PARKINSON, President.
CHARLES T. GWYNNE,
Executive Vice President.

Attest:

JERE D. TAMBLYN, Secretary.

NEW YORK, May 2, 1935.

Mr. BACON. Other civic associations of New York City endorsing 2-cent postal rate within city limits of New York City are:

Jamaica Chamber of Commerce, West Side Association of Commerce, Uptown Chamber of Commerce, Central Park West and Columbus Avenue Association, Forty-second Street Property Owners' & Merchants' Association, Murray Hill Association, Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce, Broadway Association, Inc., New York Board of Trade, New York State Chamber of Commerce, First Avenue Association, Staten Island Chamber of Commerce, Regional Plan Association, Fifth Avenue Association, Sixth Avenue Association, Central Mercantile Association, Flatbush Chamber of Commerce, Thirty-fourth Street Midtown Association, Bronx Board of Trade, Merchants' Association, Real Estate Board of New York, Madison Avenue Association, Merchants & Manufacturers Association of Bush Terminal, Lexington Avenue Association, Chamber of Commerce of the Rockaways, Bronx Real Estate Board, Chamber of Commerce of Washington Heights, Chamber of Commerce of the Borough of Queens, Washington Square Association, and Downtown Brooklyn Association.

The following two bills suggest the language necessary to remove this discrimination against the people of New York City and the city of Los Angeles:

H. R. 6514

A bill to provide for the application of the 2-cent rate on first-class mail matter for delivery within the confines of any incorporated city and to contiguous cities

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso in section 1001 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1932 providing a 2-cent rate on first-class mail matter for local delivery is amended so that such 2-cent rate shall also apply to first-class mail matter for delivery within the confines of any incorporated city, and to such immediately contiguous incorporated cities as may be determined by the Postmaster General.

H. R. 6515

A bill to amend section 1001 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1932

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso in section 1001 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1932 is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following: "or for delivery within the confines of any incorporated city and to such immediately contiguous incorporated cities as may be determined by the Postmaster General."

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT].

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I am not so much interested in the revenue features of this bill, which extends the excise taxes of the Revenue Act of 1932, because I think some of the revenues provided in it could be better raised by other methods. But I am tremendously interested in the protective features of the bill. I am particularly interested in the protection which this extension will give the lumber industry. The excise tax of $3 per thousand upon lumber imports takes the place of a lumber tariff and is equivalent to a tariff, and without the extension of this tariff protection, which expires on the 30th of this month, the lumber industry of the Pacific Northwest cannot exist. It would be impossible, therefore, to exaggerate the importance of this bill to the people I represent.

The most important industry in the State of Oregon, from the viewpoint both of the magnitude of the investment and the amount of annual pay roll, is lumber. In normal times it furnishes 60 percent of the entire industrial pay roll of the State. The industry which has been hit hardest by the depression and which has the longest way to travel on the road to recovery is lumber. The industry which, in order to survive, has had to meet and bear the greatest burden of foreign competition, of any in my State, is the lumber industry. The industry which would be soonest ruined by depriving it of the little tariff protection it now has is the lumber industry.

Up until 1930 lumber had no tariff protection at all. The 1930 Tariff Act gave it a protective duty of $1 per thousand. The Revenue Act of 1932, which the pending bill proposes to extend to 1937, gave it the additional temporary protection of an import excise duty tax of $3 per thousand upon the kind of lumber imports which compete most heavily with the domestic product. I say to you in all sincerity that had it not been for that protection the lumber industry of the Pacific Northwest could not have survived the depression, and that four operators out of five, instead of being merely in their present crippled condition, would have been out of business altogether before this time, and that the lumber market of the United States would by now be almost entirely in the hands of foreign producers.

Mr. Speaker, may I take this opportunity to thank the Ways and Means Committee, and particularly Chairman DOUGHTON, and my colleague the gentleman from Washington, Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL, chairman of the tax subcommittee, for bringing in this bill. The people of my State have been greatly concerned for weeks for fear the time limit on the 1932 Revenue Act would expire before the bill extending it was reported. I went to these gentlemen early in the session and they both assured me that the bill would be reported within the time limit. They have kept their word, as they always do when they give it, and I want to assure them that my people are profoundly grateful to them.

Although I do not like some of the nuisance taxes in this bill, especially those which have no protective features, and although I agree with gentlemen who have opposed them and would like to see them eliminated, nevertheless at this particular time I do not care to incur the risk of having this bill opened for amendment so that the lumber import excise duty may be singled out for attack by those who oppose a lumber tariff. Therefore I shall vote to suspend the rules and pass the bill as it is, and I sincerely trust it may receive the necessary two-thirds vote to pass it.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I take this occasion to protest against bringing this bill up for consideration under suspension of the rules, because it does not give the Membership of the House an opportunity to offer amendments. These taxes have been in operation for several years, and we have seen the unfairness of many of these taxes.

Mr. Speaker, I want to register a protest against continuing the tax on furs, because they are a necessity of life. I realize that some of the Members, who come from certain sections of the country where the climatic conditions are favorable to wearing cotton rather than fur, do not realize that fur clothing, as a matter of fact, is a necessity in certain other sections of the country.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. There is an exemption up to $75.

Mr. BOILEAU. I appreciate that fact, but the exemption of $75 simply means that people cannot afford to buy a good fur coat and will buy a poor grade of fur.

In Wisconsin we have been developing a rather important fur industry, which is a necessary industry in that climate and State. We have developed the silver-black fox fur industry in the State of Wisconsin, and many of our farmers, who were formerly engaged in other types of agricultural pursuits, have gone into the commercial raising of silver-black furs, as well as mink, beaver, and other types of furs, with the result that it has developed into a very important industry in my State. These furs are a necessity in our climate. This $75 exemption means that people who buy fur coats are influenced to buy cheap furs, and this tax therefore discriminates against the fur producers, and particularly those who produce high-quality furs. I am unalterably opposed to passing this resolution under a gag rule which prohibits us from amending the resolution, and I will therefore vote against the resolution in its present form.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, the resolution before us this morning is significant because it is a reminder to the country that the spending of this administration is going on without restraint. When the Committee on Appropriations shall have completed its work on the deficiency bill, the commitments of the Government and its debts will amount to approximately $48,000,000,000. What I am concerned about is just where we are going. Whatever I may say in regard to the program of unlimited spending will have no weight whatever in this House. It will not make the slightest impression upon the majority side of the House. It may be interesting to the majority side, however, if I call attention to what Gen. Hugh Johnson has recently had to say. Everybody in the United States of America has heard his voice over the radio and they have heard it repeatedly. He has been the chief mouthpiece of this administration.

As late as June of this year, over his own signature, he published an article in the American Magazine, and here is what he had to say:

> The mounting burden of debt and taxes threatens a new bondage. * * * Our sons are in danger of becoming galley slaves * * * paying for dead horses they never rode.
>
> It is just blatant political bunk to try to fool people who pay these almost unbelievable charges. People of all classes pay them and none more directly than workers and farmers. They may never get a tax receipt, but the cost of government is part of every grocery bill, every monthly rent charge, every ton of coal, or suit of clothes—everything, in fact, that any of us uses or has. The cost of government must be taken out of the money available to buy every bushel of wheat or cow or pig or bale of cotton before the farmer gets his price.

Gen. Hugh Johnson says further—and remember this is as late as June of this year:

> We are headed straight for a general repudiation of Government debt.

He further states:

> I believe that the overwhelming questions about much of the new deal, as it is going now, are, "Who is going to pay for it? And how?" You can't neglect those questions and you can't postpone them. Unless something is done promptly to make payment possible through orthodox taxes and borrowing, without too great a burden on the very business of living, the single unavoidable alternative of a vast catastrophe of inflation will become more threatening and imminent every day.

Continuing, General Johnson says:

> I think it is fair to charge that we simply have done nothing to relieve the three most obvious, threatening, and effective causes of our continued distress—cost of government, taxes, and debt. On the contrary, we have moved in almost every instance to aggravate and increase them.

This is from the chief mouthpiece of the present administration, a man who more than any other, night after night over the radio has talked to the people of this free country, just as a top sergeant would talk to his soldiers. He sees the danger.

Ever since President Roosevelt was placed in charge of the fiscal policy of the Government, the people have been assured by him that the Federal Budget would be balanced; that expenses of Government would be curtailed. As late as January 1934 the President in his Budget message lead the taxpayers to believe that the public debt might be increased to $31,834,000,000 by June 30, 1935. Furthermore, he then said:

> It is my belief that so far as we can make estimates with our present knowledge, the Government should seek to hold the debt within this amount. Furthermore, the Government during the balance of this calendar year should plan to bring its 1936 expenditures, including recovery and relief, within the revenues expected in the fiscal year 1936.

Now, the President, in his present Budget statement, asserts that the national debt at the end of the fiscal year 1936 may increase to $34,239,000,000. As I have already stated, the President knows that when the Appropriations Committee finishes the present deficiency appropriation bill, the debt of the United States will be $48,000,000,000.

Why is the tax bill now before us brought here under a gag rule? It is to prevent a disclosure, in open debate, that the continued imposition of nuisance taxes for 2 years—as provided in this resolution—has been made necessary by the wanton waste of the taxpayers' money. The pay roll of the Government has been padded and packed with over 100,000 political appointees, some drawing over $10,000 a year, with little or nothing for some of them to do.

The administration instead of facing the facts outlined by Gen. Hugh Johnson is day by day driving the country further and further into debt.

Business men face ultimate ruin. Day by day the relief rolls lengthen. Twenty-two million persons are now on relief.

The promise of the President to economize has been thrown to the winds. Is it any wonder that the taxpayers are alarmed as they contemplate the debt that eventually they must pay by the sweat of the brow.

Some of the nuisance taxes contained in the bill, which this resolution will perpetuate for 10 years more, are indefensible. I refer especially to the tax on gasoline, the tax on soap, and the tax on postage.

It is regrettable that the Demorcatic leaders should ignore the appeal of the taxpayers for the reduction of the tax on these items. This has been done by means of the gag rule under which we are considering this resolution. It is not only the Members of the House who have been gagged and hog-tied, but it is the constituents of the respective Members who have been denied a voice on the floor of the House of Representatives. I shall record my opposition to this method of high-handed departure from legislative procedure by voting against this resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the estimated deficit of the Federal Government for the fiscal year 1936 is upward of four and a half billion dollars. This bill is brought here under suspension of the rules with the idea in view of carrying out to the country the information that the Democratic Party is meeting its obligations to present taxes with which to balance the Budget. This bill carries taxes providing for less than 10 percent of the amount of the deficit, and that is the way they are meeting their responsibility right straight down the line. Instead of putting the taxes on those who ought to bear them, this bill provides a lot of nuisance taxes and a gasoline tax which bears heavily upon the poor people and upon the farmers. There is absolutely no sense of balance to it.

Mr. Speaker, the Democratic Party does not dare bring a wide-open rule and bill in here recommending the taxes that are required to balance the Budget of this country.

We can never recover from this depression until we have the courage to meet our obligations. It is typical of the Democratic Party that they fail to meet their responsibility when they get a chance in that they bring in here a bill to provide only 10 percent of the revenue required and then put the burden on the poor people. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I consider the bill before us at this time the worst illustration of gag that has ever been perpetrated on an American Congress—absolutely the worst. I repeat it, and let the Democrats smile all they have a mind to. When it is possible to bring in from the Ways and Means Committee a privileged bill without a rule and have it considered on the floor of the House, then to use suspension of rules that gags the Members and denies them an opportunity of amendment, levying a tax on the American people of $500,000,000 with 40 minutes of debate, is an outrage on representative government, and I do not hesitate to say so. You can contradict it all you wish to, but that is going to be the judgment of the American people on the action of the House of Representatives at this time.

When the nuisance taxes were first imposed in 1932 the promise was held out to the people that they were of an emergency character and would be allowed to expire at the end of 2 years, as provided in the act. However, a full year before they would have expired the Democratic administration secured their extension for an additional year, or until June 30, 1935. Now the committee comes forward with a proposal to extend them for 2 additional years. This constitutes an outright breach of faith on the part of the administration.

The chairman of the committee passed out the very general remark that these taxes were laid under the Hoover administration. I am delighted that the gentleman made this admission, because it is a credit to the Hoover administration, in view of the conditions under which we then tried to balance the Budget. Let me call the attention of the House to the statement made at that time by the Secretary of the Treasury:

> Under existing conditions the task of bringing our Budget into balance is by no means an easy one, and involves not only self-denial but a measure of self-sacrifice; yet it is possible to attain this objective if we address ourselves resolutely to the task of drastically reducing expenditures, refusing to take on additional obligations save those that are absolutely necessary, and by drawing on available resources through increased taxation. I cannot overemphasize the importance of retrenchment. Without real economy there can be no balanced Budget. We are fully justified in calling on the people to make further sacrifice in order to supply their Government with adequate revenue.

This was the basis on which these temporary taxes were laid, and this is a suitable program to advance to the people.

The hearing from which I am quoting was held on Wednesday, January 13, 1932, at the very beginning of a congressional session, when there was ample opportunity for consideration of all measures coming before us in the way of taxation, and not a gag proposition involving 40 minutes of debate in an effort to raise $500,000,000.

Further than this, the reason we were in the red in trying to balance the Budget was due to the default of our former allies in not paying their just debts for money borrowed of us under the Democratic administration to carry on the war. This is the reason we were in the red at that time. I want to emphasize the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the President of the United States, Mr. Roosevelt, in his Budget message at the opening of this session, said that he does not consider it advisable to propose new or additional taxes for the fiscal year 1936, but he says:

> I do recommend that the Congress take steps by suitable legislation to extend the miscellaneous internal-revenue taxes, which under existing law expire in June or July.

Still a majority of the Ways and Means Committee, instead of taking up this question in January, wait until what we hope to be the closing days of the session and then thrust this gag method of procedure on us and say that we must do this under the emergency. Emergency for what? Why was not the matter considered at the proper time and in the proper manner, and the Members of the House given an opportunity to express the views of their constituents on whether these taxes or other forms of taxation should be continued?

Balance the Budget! Whoever heard until this administration came into power of two Budgets? You talk about an ordinary Budget and an extraordinary one. How absurd—two systems of bookkeeping. How ridiculous to say that whatever you do not want to charge up to ordinary expenses are extraordinary. Extraordinary for what? For Democratic officeholders. That is what it is extraordinary for and that is why you are extending this measure today for 2 years. You do not dare go before the people next year with a new tax measure. You want to say that we are balancing the Budget, but we will tell the people there are two Budgets and one of them you are not paying the slightest attention to in endeavoring to balance it. However, you take the position that by merely extending these taxes for 2 years you are passing by an election period, but do not for a moment think that the Republicans will not tell the people of the country the kind of tax bill you are passing here today and how you are passing it.

If you want us to help you balance the Budget, set up a decent form of taxation, a tax measure that we passed in the Ways and Means Committee, a fair sales tax or a manufacturers' tax, or whatever you may want to call it, instead of one of these special-interest tax measures, such as you are proposing here today. This is the worst system of taxation I have ever seen introduced in a Congress, and the meanest, lowest, most contemptible manner of trying to put such a bill across—a miserable gag. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield, and I shall not take back a word of what I have said.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. If I understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] correctly, he complained that this is only one-tenth of the amount of taxes that should be raised.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am for an equitable tax bill under all circumstances and this is not such a bill. I have always advocated an equitable tax and one upon which the people can express their views upon the floor of the House or out among the people themselves, without any gag.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Does the gentleman join with the gentleman from New York?

Mr. TREADWAY. I am distinctly in favor of equitable taxation and against this or any other gag.

I wish particularly to emphasize that a vote against suspending the rules to pass this bill would not kill the bill, because it could still be brought up under the general rules of the House, with liberal debate and an opportunity to offer amendments. However, the Democratic leadership does not want the bill considered that way. They want to force it through under this gag procedure, with only 40 minutes debate and with no opportunity to offer amendments.

They know that if the bill were considered under the general rules of the House, motions would be offered from the Republican side to repeal the tax on gasoline, furs, soap, and so forth, and to restore the 2-cent postal rate. They know that other amendments would be offered to put excise taxes on certain imported commodities, such as are now imposed on coal, lumber, petroleum, and copper. The gag procedure was adopted so that the Members of the House would not have an opportunity to offer these amendments, and so that the House would not have an opportunity to vote on them.

These excise taxes, which it is now proposed to renew without opportunity for revision and without opportunity for hearing, were hurriedly designed and need revision if any taxes ever did.

I wonder if the Members of this House realize that we tax books for the blind recorded on phonograph records, but that we do not tax books of the most worthless character which anyone can read; that we tax baseball uniforms used by the schoolboys but do not tax golf trousers used by adults; that we tax a man when he buys a little automobile but do not tax a man when he buys a million-dollar yacht; and that we tax a hunter and trapper on his means of livelihood; that is, on his gun and his ammunition.

The sales tax is the real answer to the present discriminatory special sales taxes. It has been pointed out that these special taxes bring in about $425,000,000 annually. Possibly we cannot give up this revenue in the present distressing state of our finances, but we could substitute the sales tax. In my opinion, the revenue which has been officially estimated from the sales tax has been altogether too conservative. The experience of other countries and the yield of these special sales taxes causes me to believe that seven to eight hundred million dollars annually could easily be secured from a general sales tax. But if the House is not yet convinced of the merit of this general tax, that is no excuse for not revising the existing special taxes so that they may be made reasonably fair and equitable.

In voting against this bill I do not wish it to be understood that I am voting against balancing the Budget. There are two ways to balance the Budget—one is by increasing taxation and the other is by drastically reducing expenditures. I think more attention should be paid to the second method. However, as long as high taxes are necessary they should be imposed on a fair and equitable basis. The present nuisance taxes do not meet that test.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL].

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Speaker, for the fiscal year 1931 the deficit was about $500,000,000. In January 1932, under the Hoover administration, the Under Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mills, came before the Ways and Means Committee and advised the committee that there would be a probable deficit of $903,000,000. He proposed certain taxes out of which to raise the money.

The committee went to work on these representations of Mr. Mills that the deficit would be $903,000,000.

We had been at work about 2 weeks when Mr. Mills came back and stated to the committee that a revised estimate showed that the deficit would be $1,300,000,000 instead of $903,000,000 for the fiscal year 1932—an increase of $400,000,000.

The committee then wrote a bill on the basis of those figures and we brought in the bill, which on paper balanced the Budget. The House passed it.

It went to the Senate, and before they got through with the bill they again revised the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury and said the deficit would be $1,800,000,000 for the fiscal year 1932. The Senate included additional taxes to meet the increased estimate of the deficit, to which the House agreed; but it did not balance the Budget, because the economic conditions of the country were so bad that these additional levies did not produce the necessary revenue.

The deficit in 1932 was $1,800,000,000, and in 1933 it was $3,000,000,000. These taxes now under consideration, with others, were levied to meet the requirements for revenue that those conditions had brought about in order to carry on the operations of the Government. There was a total deficit in the Hoover administration of more than $5,000,000,000.

To meet this situation of accumulating deficits, every item in this list of temporary taxes was put into the Revenue Act of 1932 upon the recommendation of Mr. Ogden Mills, acting for the Treasury Department, and, furthermore, the Congress put into that Revenue Act of 1932 every item of tax recommended by Secretary Mills, except one. Now, that is the situation with reference to these temporary taxes, yielding now $502,000,000—about $100,000,000 more than the present ordinary expenditures of the Government, excluding the emergency expenditures. That balances the Budget of the ordinary expenditures of the Government. We have extended these taxes heretofore and propose now to extend them again for 2 years in the hope that the condition of the Treasury will then warrant their elimination. We did not create the conditions which brought about the necessity for these taxes, but must meet that necessity by providing for a further temporary continuance of these revenues. We ask you to support the bill. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 246, nays 118, not voting 65, as follows:

[Roll No. 96]

YEAS—246

Adair	Dockweiler	Keller	Peterson, Fla.
Andrew, Mass.	Dorsey	Kelly	Pfeifer
Arnold	Doughton	Kenney	Pierce
Ashbrook	Doxey	Kerr	Polk
Barden	Drewry	Kleberg	Quinn
Beam	Driscoll	Kloeb	Ramsay
Beiter	Driver	Kniffin	Ramspeck
Bell	Duffey, Ohio	Kocialkowski	Randolph
Biermann	Duffy, N. Y.	Koppiemann	Rankin
Binderup	Duncan	Kramer	Rayburn
Bland	Eckert	Lambertson	Reilly
Blanton	Edmiston	Lambeth	Richards
Boehne	Eicher	Lea, Calif.	Richardson
Boland	Ekwall	Lee, Okla.	Robertson
Brennan	Evans	Lewis, Colo.	Robinson, Utah
Brooks	Farley	Lewis, Md.	Rogers, N. H.
Brown, Ga.	Ferguson	Lloyd	Romjue
Brown, Mich.	Fernandez	Lucas	Rudd
Brunner	Fiesinger	Luckey	Sabath
Buchanan	Flannagan	Ludlow	Sanders, La.
Buck	Ford, Calif.	McAndrews	Sanders, Tex.
Burch	Ford, Miss.	McCormack	Sandlin
Caldwell	Fuller	McGehee	Schaefer
Cannon, Mo.	Gambrill	McGrath	Schuetz
Carpenter	Gassaway	McKeough	Scrugham
Carter	Gavagan	McLaughlin	Sears
Cary	Gildea	McMillan	Shanley
Celler	Gillette	McReynolds	Sirovich
Chandler	Gingery	Mahon	Smith, Conn.
Chapman	Goldsborough	Maloney	Smith, Va.
Citron	Gray, Ind.	Martin, Colo.	Smith, Wash.
Clark, Idaho	Gray, Pa.	Mason	Snyder
Clark, N. C.	Green	Massingale	South
Coffee	Greenway	May	Spence
Colden	Greenwood	Mead	Stack
Cole, N. Y.	Greever	Meeks	Starnes
Collins	Gregory	Merritt, N. Y.	Sullivan
Colmer	Griswold	Miller	Sumners, Tex.
Connery	Halleck	Mitchell, Ill.	Sutphin
Cooley	Hamlin	Monaghan	Tarver
Cooper, Tenn.	Hancock, N. C.	Montague	Taylor, Colo.
Costello	Harlan	Montet	Taylor, S. C.
Cox	Hart	Moran	Terry
Cravens	Healey	Mott	Thom
Crosby	Hennings	Murdock	Thomason
Crosser, Ohio	Hildebrandt	Nichols	Thompson
Crowe	Hill, Ala.	Norton	Tolan
Crowther	Hill, Knute	O'Brien	Tonry
Cullen	Hill, Samuel B.	O'Connell	Turner
Cummings	Hobbs	O'Connor	Umstead
Daly	Hook	O'Day	Utterback
Darden	Huddleston	O'Leary	Vinson, Ga.
Deen	Imhoff	O'Neal	Vinson, Ky.
Delaney	Jacobsen	Owen	Wallgren
Dempsey	Jenckes, Ind.	Palmisano	Walter
Dickstein	Johnson, Tex.	Parks	Warren
Dietrich	Johnson, W. Va.	Parsons	Weaver
Dingell	Jones	Patton	Werner
Dobbins	Kee	Pearson	West

White	Williams	Wood	Zimmerman
Whittington	Wilson, La.	Young	Zioncheck
Wilcox	Wolcott

NAYS—118

Allen	Fenerty	Lemke	Rogers, Okla.
Amlie	Fish	Lord	Ryan
Andresen	Fletcher	Lundeen	Sauthoff
Andrews, N. Y.	Focht	McFarlane	Schneider
Arends	Fulmer	McGroarty	Scott
Bacharach	Gasque	McLean	Secrest
Bacon	Gearhart	McLeod	Seger
Blackney	Gehrmann	Maas	Snell
Boileau	Gifford	Mapes	Stefan
Brewster	Gilchrist	Marcantonio	Stewart
Buckbee	Goodwin	Marshall	Stubbs
Buckler, Minn.	Guyer	Martin, Mass.	Taber
Burdick	Gwynne	Maverick	Taylor, Tenn.
Burnham	Hancock, N. Y.	Michener	Thomas
Carmichael	Harter	Millard	Thurston
Cartwright	Hartley	Mitchell, Tenn.	Tinkham
Castellow	Hess	Moritz	Tobey
Cavicchia	Higgins, Conn.	Nelson	Treadway
Christianson	Hoeppel	O'Malley	Truax
Church	Hope	Patterson	Turpin
Cooper, Ohio	Houston	Perkins	Wearin
Crawford	Hull	Peterson, Ga.	Whelchel
Culkin	Johnson, Okla.	Pittenger	Wigglesworth
Disney	Kahn	Plumley	Wilson, Pa.
Ditter	Kimball	Powers	Withrow
Dondero	Kinzer	Ransley	Wolfenden
Dunn, Pa.	Knutson	Reece	Wolverton
Engel	Kvale	Reed, Ill.	Woodruff
Englebright	Lanham	Reed, N. Y.
Faddis	Lehlbach	Rogers, Mass.

NOT VOTING—65

Ayers	Dear	Jenkins, Ohio	Russell
Bankhead	DeRouen	Kennedy, Md.	Sadowski
Berlin	Dies	Kennedy, N. Y.	Schulte
Bloom	Dirksen	Lamneck	Shannon
Bolton	Doutrich	Larrabee	Short
Boylan	Dunn, Miss.	Lesinski	Sisson
Buckley, N. Y.	Eagle	McClellan	Smith, W. Va.
Bulwinkle	Eaton	McSwain	Somers, N. Y.
Cannon, Wis.	Ellenbogen	Mansfield	Steagall
Carlson	Fitzpatrick	Merritt, Conn.	Sweeney
Casey	Frey	Oliver	Underwood
Claiborne	Granfield	Patman	Wadsworth
Cochran	Haines	Pettengill	Welch
Cole, Md.	Higgins, Mass.	Peyser	Woodrum
Corning	Hoffman	Rabaut
Cross, Tex.	Hollister	Rich
Darrow	Holmes	Robsion, Ky.

So the motion was agreed to, and the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Russell and Mr. Sisson (for) with Mr. Darrow (against).
Mr. Patman and Mr. Dear (for) with Mr. Hoffman (against).
Mr. Oliver and Mr. McSwain (for) with Mr. Eaton (against).
Mr. Fitzpatrick and Mr. Bloom (for) with Mr. Granfield (against).
Mr. Ellenbogen and Mr. Kennedy of New York (for) with Mr. Short (against).
Mr. Casey and Mr. Cole of Maryland (for) with Mr. Jenkins of Ohio (against).
Mr. Frey and Mr. Somers of New York (for) with Mr. Merritt of Connecticut (against).
Mr. Smith of West Virginia and Mr. Boylan (for) with Mr. Holmes (against).
Mr. Woodrum and Mr. Buckley of New York (for) with Mr. Cannon of Wisconsin (against).
Mr. DeRouen and Mr. Sadowski (for) with Mr. Robsion of Kentucky (against).
Mr. Steagall and Mr. Lamneck (for) with Mr. Wadsworth (against).
Mr. Bankhead and Mr. Larrabee (for) with Mr. Bolton (against).
Mr. Kennedy of Maryland and Mr. Underwood (for) with Mr. Doutrich (against).

General pairs:

Mr. Cochran with Mr. Rich.
Mr. Bulwinkle with Mr. Welch.
Mr. Mansfield with Mr. Higgins of Massachusetts.
Mr. Dies with Mr. Dirksen.
Mr. Cross of Texas with Mr. Hollister.
Mr. Eagle with Mr. Carlson.
Mr. Corning with Mr. Berlin.
Mr. Lesinski with Mr. Ayers.
Mr. McClellan with Mr. Claiborne.
Mr. Haines with Mr. Dunn of Mississippi.
Mr. Pettengill with Mr. Sweeney.
Mr. Rabaut with Mr. Schulte.

Mr. MAVERICK changed his vote from "aye" to "no."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. RUSSELL, is not present. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. HIGGINS, is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. JENKINS, a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, was called home to attend to very important business for some of his constituents. If he were here, he would vote "no."

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York, Mr. SISSON, is ill. If he were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from West Virginia, Mr. SMITH, is absent on account of important business. If present, he would vote "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. LUDLOW assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time not to talk upon any controversial subject but to call the attention of the entire Membership of the House to the situation which confronts us so far as legislation is concerned. I am quite well aware that all of the Membership of the House are engaged on legislation before their respective committees, and, therefore, have not the opportunity to investigate the situation as it appears on the calendar with reference to bills from all of the committees. That is a part of my job, and, therefore, I come to report to the Membership just what confronts us and what possibly may be necessary for us to do if we are to adjourn at anything like a reasonable date.

We have just passed the tax bill, which, of course, was essential. I am not saying that all of these bills to which I shall refer would have to be passed or considered or that all of them will be considered, but certainly some of them will have to be considered.

I hope that what I say will not be misunderstood or misconstrued, and I am sure it will not be by the Membership or by our friends in the press gallery. This is not a lecture, it is not for the purpose of scolding the House, as I was accused of doing on a previous occasion. I would not presume to do that even were I disposed to do so. And I take this occasion to pay tribute to the House and to all of its Members for the manner in which they have disposed of important legislation this session. This House has taken up the bills as they have come from the committees and have considered them and disposed of them. I think the Membership of the House is entitled to the commendation of the American public for its dispatch of business, but we now have a situation where all of these committee reports are coming in, and we are having many things laid on the Speaker's table which must be considered.

The Members will have noted that at the other end of the Capitol the Senate, it is said, is going to pass the social security bill either today or tomorrow, after 3 or 4 days' discussion and consideration, which indicates to me that possibly the Senate has made up its mind to dispose of the business before that body so that at a reasonably early date an adjournment may be had. They have the banking bill over there. I do not know how much discussion there will be on that, but what I came to talk about is what we have before us today. We have the triple A bill, essential and important; the Wagner bill, which they tell us must be considered; the utility bill; the deficiency appropriation bill; the transportation bill, or as it is sometimes called, the "bus and truck bill"; the T. V. A.; the Guffey bill; the Federal alcohol control bill; and some say the merchant marine bill. There may be others to be added to this list before we get through; I do not know; but I am calling attention to the fact that there are probably 10 bills which this House must consider, so we are told, in the interest of the public, before we adjourn. My object in doing this is to acquaint you with what is before you, because, as I said, I know that it has been impossible for the individual Member to keep track of all these bills as they appear on the calendar, because of the multitude of their duties before their respective committees; but it is my business, and Members expect me and others in the organization to do that. For that reason I am making this report to you.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. If we expect to adjourn at anything like a reasonable date, I submit to Members on both sides of the aisle that we will have to make some sacrifices in time. We will have to come here perhaps a little earlier, and we certainly will have to sit a little later and perhaps have night sessions.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. BOLAND. If I understand the gentleman, he is trying to advise the House that it is quite necessary for Members to stay on the floor for the next couple of weeks, I believe, to expedite these matters.

Mr. BYRNS. I think the gentleman has correctly sized up what I was trying to say and to put over.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I am unalterably opposed to the Wagner bill, but if the House with all of its good judgment and discretion can pass the N. R. A. bill with only an hour debate, does not the Speaker think that we can pass upon, and get a vote on, each one of these other 10 bills with about an hour of debate on each? Every Member of this House has his mind already made up on how he is to vote on these different measures, and, in my judgment, it would be a waste of time to devote more than an hour to general debate on each of them.

Mr. BYRNS. I do not know that I would advocate passing them in that way, but what I do say is that within the next 2 weeks this House can give these bills to which I have called attention, full consideration and act upon all of them, if we make up our minds to do it. [Applause.] I do not think there is any question but what the Members will all agree with me that the best interest of the country, as well as our own interests, physical, and otherwise, demand that we have an early adjournment. [Applause.] We ought to adjourn as quickly as we can. We will not be able to adjourn unless we make up our minds to come here and, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOLAND] has suggested, keep a quorum in attendance and dispose of this business, sitting sometimes rather late in the evening. Surely we can do that for the next 2 weeks. I think I know the temper of this House; I know the individual sentiments on both sides of this chamber possibly as well as any other Member. I know how you all feel about it. I felt that all that was necessary for me to do was to show you the condition of the calendar and you will do the rest.

Mr. MAPES. Will the Speaker yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. MAPES. If expedition is the main consideration, I should like to ask the Speaker what he would think about this procedure: It has been suggested that all of these bills be put into one omnibus bill, and that we vote upon them as we did this afternoon on the tax bill, under suspension of the rules. What would the Speaker think of that procedure?

Mr. BYRNS. I assume that I think just as the gentleman does. I do not know whether the inquiry of the gentleman indicates that he would favor that in the interest of early adjournment or not, but I take it otherwise.

Mr. MAPES. No. I will say to the Speaker that I think other considerations ought to be kept in mind than speed.

Mr. BYRNS. Undoubtedly. I do not want anybody to understand that I am advocating passage of these bills without giving them the fullest consideration, but I do say that under the circumstances it is not necessary for this House, as is being demonstrated in the other body on the social security bill, to consume unnecessary time. What we should do is refrain from asking the privilege of making speeches on outside matters. [Applause.] If we will devote ourselves to the consideration of this legislation, I repeat that every Member of this House will have the fullest opportunity to understand just what he is voting on and we can get through with the bills to which I have referred in the next 2 weeks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has again expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee may have 3 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. Is it not also of the greatest importance that the committees report out the bills as speedily as possible? There are some bills which have been before the committees for months which have not yet been acted upon. Should not the committees get busy and report those matters that are before them?

Mr. BYRNS. Of course, I am not asking any committee to report any bill until it has given such consideration as it thinks necessary, but the point is that several bills have been reported and are now on the calendar and they can be taken up while the other bills are being considered before the committees.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman referred to an adjournment within a reasonable time. Has the gentleman any definite time in mind that he would desire to make public, which he would consider a reasonable time, or would he rather leave that in abeyance?

Mr. BYRNS. I would rather leave that in abeyance. I made a prediction once that we would adjourn on June 15. I was such a poor prophet that I do not care to make any other prophecy, but I hope we can get away from here not later than the middle of July, and we can do so if we will make up our minds to attend to the legislation here on this floor. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. I agree with what the gentleman has said. We ought to expedite this legislation as much as possible. The utilities bill has been before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for more than 5 months. It has already passed the Senate. I should like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee, the distinguished Speaker, if he can give us any information or any suggestion as to when that bill is likely to come out and when we will have an opportunity to vote on it.

Mr. BYRNS. No. I have understood that it will possibly be reported the latter part of this week, but I have no information on that subject, and it is not my purpose in what I have said to complain about any committee for failure to report out any bill. The utilities bill and the bus and truck bill are two of the most important pieces of legislation that have come before the Congress in many months. We expect the committees to give fullest consideration to this legislation, because evidently we cannot do it on the floor and we must rely upon the committees to give us proper information.

Mr. RANKIN. I should like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee about the T. V. A. bill that is now tied up in the Committee on Military Affairs. I think this information would be interesting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has again expired.

Mr. ZIONCHEK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be granted 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. I want to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that Washington is full of power lobbyists who have been blocking this legislation all winter, all spring, and all summer. There are many Members of the House who are anxious to vote on it. We would like to have some information, if we can get it, as to when these two bills will come out: The T. V. A. bill and also the utilities bill which is now before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. BYRNS. I cannot give the gentleman any information on that subject. I hope that the committees will report out the bills at the earliest possible moment. That is all I can say.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. I should like to say for the benefit of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] and for the benefit of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] that there has been no unnecessary delay with reference to the holding-company bill so far as any intent on the part of the chairman or a vast majority of the committee is concerned.

Mr. RANKIN. We know that as to the chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Texas; but somebody seems to be holding this legislation up.

Mr. RAYBURN. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, however, I think, long ago established the reputation in this House and before the country of not reporting legislation they did not fully consider. We had the securities bill before us in 1933, one of the most controversial bills ever before Congress. We were a long time on that, but we reported a bill and passed a bill that did a good job.

We had the stock-exchange bill in 1934. That was as controversial as the holding-company bill we are now considering. We considered it, we heard people on it, we took it into the full committee and into executive session, and brought forward a bill that works and does the job; and that is exactly what we intend to do with the utilities bill. I trust we will have the bill out of the committee the latter part of this week, ready as soon as the House can act on it next week.

Mr. RANKIN. That is the information I wanted from the gentleman from Texas. I hope we may get to a vote on it without delay.

Mr. RAYBURN. And I want to say this, that the bus and truck bill is ready for report by the subcommittee, or will be on Thursday, and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for the next week or two, if we can get the opportunity, will keep the House very busy.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. It might help the Speaker to make the announcement that the fish are biting ravenously in every one of Minnesota's 10,000 sparkling lakes. [Applause.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. I wish to question the gentleman with reference to the conference at the White House the other day at which the President is reported to have pounded the table and laid down his "must" program. Can the gentleman, or will the gentleman—I know he can if he will—will the gentleman inform the House just what part of the "must" program must be enacted before we will be permitted to adjourn?

Mr. BYRNS. I never attended a conference where the President pounded the table as the gentleman suggested.

Mr. KNUTSON. I did not mean to say that our Speaker was there.

Mr. BYRNS. And I am not undertaking to say that all these bills are on the "must" program, but a number of them, the gentleman will readily understand, must be considered before Congress adjourns. I think he himself will agree to that. Now, whether all these bills must be considered, I do not know; but what I do say is that if we are to consider these bills we must proceed with a little dispatch, for there are conference reports and various other matters which will intervene to take time of Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. KNUTSON. I agree with the gentleman.

LABOR-DISPUTES BILL

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a privileged status be given to the bill (S. 1958) to promote equality of bargaining power between employers and employees, to diminish the causes of labor disputes, to create a national labor relations board, and for other purposes, that general debate be confined to the bill, and continue not to exceed 4 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. SNELL. What is the bill?

Mr. CONNERY. It is the Wagner labor-disputes bill.

Mr. SNELL. For the present, Mr. Speaker, I object. We have a Rules Committee to take care of such matters.

SHOSHONE POWER PLANT

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file a supplemental report on the bill (H. R. 6875) providing for the allocation of net revenues of the Shoshone power plant of the Shoshone reclamation project in Wyoming.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

RICHMOND, FREDERICKSBURG & POTOMAC RAILROAD CO.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 18, which is on the Speaker's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 18

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, in the enrollment of the bill (S. 1611) to authorize an exchange of lands between the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Co. and the United States at Quantico, Va., to make the following correction, viz: On page 5, line 22, of the Senate engrossed bill, in lieu of the numeral "4" insert the numeral "14."

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 230.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 8052, a bill to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 6 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture, the bill shall be read for amendments under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendments the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to amend the rule as follows: On page 1, line 4, strike out the figures "8052" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "8492."

The Clerk read the amendment as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: Page 1, line 4, strike out the figures "8052" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "8492."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not contemplate objecting under certain circumstances to the unanimous-consent request, but the point occurs to me that the amendment is clearly out of order.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is why I am asking unanimous consent to make the change. I admit it is not in order to offer the amendment.

Mr. LEHLBACH. It is to protect the procedure of the House that I make this statement. The rules provide that by motion from the floor one bill may not be substituted for another bill upon the same subject.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY].

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts who has yielded to me for a half minute in order that I may make an announcement in connection with legislation affecting veterans of the World War.

The gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. SUTPHIN, on January 3 introduced a bill, H. R. 1421, in the House to waive all interest on veterans' service-compensation certificates. This particular measure seems to be the best drawn of all the bills which have been introduced to accomplish its purpose for the veterans. On Saturday I filed a petition at the Clerk's desk to discharge the Ways and Means Committee from the consideration of this bill, so that the Members will have an opportunity to vote upon it. I understand the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars are solidly behind this measure.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The processing tax is a Roosevelt tax on the necessities of life; upon the poor man's food and clothing. It falls hardest upon the submerged millions and prevents them from seeing a little sunshine. These taxes bring poverty, distress, and despair to millions of Americans and benefits temporarily to only a small part of our farming population. In the end, the tax will be a Frankenstein to the southern and western farmers, who are being lured into a blind alley, at the end of which is destruction to the farming industry through the loss of markets both at home and abroad.

This bill not only seeks to strengthen the legal status of the processing taxes but also would bar equity suits for the recovery of such taxes which it is claimed were unlawfully assessed. Think of that. They take taxes from a man and then deprive him of the opportunity of seeking justice in courts. If such legislation can be held constitutional, I would be greatly surprised. As a matter of fact, the constitutionality doubt runs all through this legislation and is prompted through the spirit of might makes right and does not contemplate the even justice for which England and America have hitherto been noted.

A new policy of export subsidy is included in this measure. It has been only slightly debated and may have far-reaching effects on industry. Unquestionably it will for a while cause exports to be suspended. No one will care to buy goods unless urgently needed while they wait for the announcement of how much of a subsidy is to be paid. Its effect on home industries and particularly the cotton-spinning industry is quite likely to be harmful. With all his present handicaps the cotton spinner of the North and South will be obliged to compete with a foreign manufacturer getting his raw material at a cheaper figure. It may result in a two-price system and that can result only in uncertainty and unsettlement at a time when business needs most stabilization.

When the bonus to veterans was pending the President came out strongly to insist upon some method of paying the increased costs. I ask if he will take a similar position on a bill which would divert one-third of the custom receipts to an export subsidy. That will leave the Treasury $125,000,000 at least poorer off and eventually will mean new taxes. Why not demand now, as in the case of the veterans, that the taxes be provided? Who is going to be assessed for this new adventure?

Let us look at the record of the 2 years of cotton-processing tax.

There is distress and increased unemployment in the cotton mills; many factories have closed their doors for all time and the employees have been forced upon the tender mercy of charity. And it is no small disaster to a country when an industry employing 500,000 workers and giving a livelihood in one way or another to 10,000,000 people is pushed to the brink of disaster. Hundreds of thousands of cotton-field workers and handlers of cotton have lost their employment. The suffering in some of the cotton-field sections has not been so acute at any time since the days following the close of the Civil War. The promised abundant life is a ghastly joke to these undernourished and suffering Americans. The politically minded farmers may be improved but not the real workers and the toilers of the South. They have been forced in many instances to leave their homes and in a number unparalleled in modern times have sought an opportunity elsewhere. I have read a newspaper item where it is estimated in the State of New Jersey alone there are over 100,000 former workers in the southern cotton fields on the relief rolls.

More unemployment in the cotton mills means more on the relief rolls. It means declining valuations of mill property for tax purposes, and that in turn means no hope of restored pay cuts to underpaid policemen, firemen, school teachers, and other city employees. It means declining revenues for the merchant, the baker, and the candlestick maker. In brief, I know of no better way to spread the poverty of cotton manufacturing communities than to pass this bill.

The avalanche of protests from cotton manufacturing communities a few weeks ago spurred the President to appoint a Cabinet committee to investigate the effects of the processing tax and foreign importations upon the American textile industry. Hearings were held and the industry presented its case. Weeks have passed and we have been waiting patiently for a report upon the results of that study. And before any report has been made as to whether the cotton-processing tax is for good or evil, this bill is brought in to strengthen the law and to freeze the tax. Moreover, it is brought in with the full approval of the administration or manifestly it would not be here.

Does this mean, as many suspect, that the supposed investigation of the Cabinet committee was merely for show purposes, to put the industry and its employees off their guard? Does it mean the case was tried before a hung jury? Does it mean we were licked before we started? I ask, in all earnestness, is this the kind of treatment the cotton-textile communities of this country must expect from this administration? There is one thing which the enactment of this law will do. It will tell us in no uncertain terms just where we stand in the consideration of this administration and what we can expect for the future.

New York City lately has been the scene of many food riots. Food shops have been picketed and the people have demanded prices which will permit them to live. A California city has experienced similar demonstrations. Continue this administration policy and you will find the scene enacted in every densely populated city in this country. The people who dwell in the cities are willing to pay good farm prices but they must have the earning power to pay the prices. They will not tolerate a policy which stands for high living costs and a low wage scale.

How is the poor man going to pay these high prices, when his purchasing power is at a very low level? How much food and clothing can he buy at the new wage scale recently established for relief workers by President Roosevelt, in some instances $19 a month and varying from 23 cents an hour in towns under 5,000 population and 31.7 cents in cities in excess of 100,000 population? With 23,000,000 people being cared for through relief, the demand is not for higher prices, which further impoverish the under dog, but for increased purchasing power that he may buy these necessary goods.

The farmer can read his answer in the 22,000,000 more pounds of fish handled through New England ports in the first 3 months of this year over the same period in 1934. He can read his fate when it is realized in the same period the American people consumed 756,000,000 less pounds of beef, veal, and pork than they did in 1934.

Continue this policy of scarcity and high prices and the end is ruin to the farmer who now thinks he is being aided.

The farmer can read his future in the increased importations from foreign countries. Bleached cotton cloth rose from 6,043,845 yards in the entire year of 1934, to 10,835,284 yards in the first 3 months of 1935. Cottonseed meal and cake importations were 474,014 pounds in the first 3 months of 1934, and in the same period this year there were 35,402,698 pounds.

Butter was imported to the extent of 127,501 pounds in the first 3 months of 1934, and this year, in the same period, the importations were 8,538,140 pounds. Corn entered in the amount of 50,051 bushels in the first 3 months of last year, and for the same period this year the importations were 7,017,558 bushels. Oats in March of 1934 were imported to the extent of 153 bushels, and in March this year, 2,596,241 bushels were brought in from foreign countries.

This administration talks of expanding foreign markets and then with characteristic zigzagging does everything to stifle the expansion. In the 9 months ending April 1, the cotton exports were 3,044,240 bales less and the accumulation of cotton in the hands of the Government are over 5,000,000 bales. These figures are worthy of serious consideration. We may continue through Government manipulation to postpone the evil day of adjustment, but come it will eventually, and when it does come it will shake the very foundations of the South.

Higher prices for the American fiber than its world prices bring brighter hopes to Brazil, Egypt, and India. They can continue to expand their fields and gain a firm grip on the foreign market. Brazil alone can raise more cotton than the South is now raising and with their ships running regularly to New England, there is something for the American cotton grower to think about when he scans the horizon of the future. If he can complacently contemplate a South with a 6,000,000-bale maximum production, he should support this legislation, for that is the goal toward which we are drifting.

Mr. FISH. I would like to ask the gentleman where he got his figures.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. These are supposed to be official figures.

Mr. FISH. The figures, as I understand them, are very much below the ones I have received. The gentleman, referred to imports of oats amounting to 2,000,000 bushels.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Two and one-half million bushels in 1 month.

Mr. FISH. My information is that the imports amounted to about 12,000,000 bushels during the year.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. They went from 153 bushels to over two and a half million in just 1 month.

These figures show that there is no surplus or overproduction in this country.

There is eternal talk of surpluses and overproduction. It is idle chatter. There are no surpluses in this country. Millions of people are clamoring for food; millions more have gone for years without the clothing absolutely necessary for decency. Instead of making their plight worse by putting the costs beyond their reach, we should devote our energies to getting them work at real wages; to increase their purchasing powers. Do this and surpluses will vanish and we will have a sustained prosperity.

In the State of Alabama, last September, to show you the need for cotton cloth, there were thousands of school children who could not go to school until the relief authorities gave the cloth necessary to properly clothe them.

The progress of the rest of the world along the road to recovery in comparison to our record shows the folly of many of the Roosevelt experiments. Fifteen countries have started back on the recovery trail, Sweden leading with a 41-percent gain; Hungary is 33 percent ahead of 2 years ago; Italy, 31 percent; Germany, 26 percent; Japan, 17 percent; Canada, 17 percent. Only four countries are worse off than they were 2 years ago; Norway, 1 percent; Belgium, 3 percent; United States, 9 percent; and France, 16 percent.

When this legislation was brought into existence the President said frankly it was experimental, and if it proved unwise he would be the first to urge their discontinuance. The record shows plainly what is apparent to all except those who have a selfish interest, and in behalf of the American people he should discontinue a ruinous policy.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. The country the gentleman represents has been made wealthy and prosperous by the tariff law. Does the gentleman think it is right to have a tariff law in the interest of a special group and deny it to the agricultural interests of the West?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. In reply to the gentleman, I do not believe in giving special tariff laws to any group of people. I believe in giving a tariff that will spread its benefits into the 48 States and give full protection to all of the American people. I do not believe in class legislation, I do not believe in special legislation, I do not believe in legislation that takes from one class of people and gives it to another class of people, whether they live in the North, the South, the East, or the West. That is the type of legislation now presented.

Mr. PIERCE. Is that the result of the tariff law?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Oh, the gentleman is trying to draw a red herring across the trail.

Mr. HARLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. HARLAN. The gentleman in the early part of his speech gave out some figures. I should like to ask him where he got those figures?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. They were printed in yesterday's Sunday newspapers, in a report quoted from the League of Nations.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. The gentleman gave the figures and said that the United States had fallen off 9 percent since 1932.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The figures so show, taking the country as a whole.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. The gentleman would favor a protective tariff to keep out the importation of farm products?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Absolutely.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. What would be the difference between a tariff on farm products and the processing tax?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is vastly different. If you put a processing tax on one industry—take cotton for instance—you put a 50-percent tax on the pay roll of that industry, and that industry is unable to bear the burden. The result is that you bring misery to great communities, you diminish purchasing power.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Is not the processing tax spread out over all, the same as the tariff?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. No; I wish I had the time to go into that and explain the difference. In some instances it is spread out; where one is making novelties and has a monopoly; but in many mills in Georgia, North Carolina, and New England, where competition is keen, it cannot be passed along.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Does not the gentleman think that the same argument would apply against the tariff now on manufactured articles?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. My answer is "no."

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Would not that be——

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I want to complete my answer. The people who work in the factories in New England, the South, and all over the country cannot compete with Japan and Czechoslovakia. They must have protection or they perish. When you pay good wages to the factory workers you give them the purchasing power that makes it possible to buy the products of the South and the West. I do not yield any more.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I think we should give serious consideration to the pending legislation, because it is vital. It is vital to a hundred million consumers of the country, who already are finding it impossible to pay the high prices. It is important to the farmer, and we all want a prosperous agriculture; but we do not want to ruin him while striving to give a little temporary aid. I do not believe this is a sound way to bring prosperity to the agricultural section of the country. I know it is very detrimental to 90 percent of the people. Let us go slowly with these un-American experiments. Let us stop trying to make water run up hill. Let us stop trying to do the fantastic and the spectacular, and let us give the American people a chance to live. In the last 150 years the American people have done fairly well when they had the opportunity to do so, and I believe they would again if given half a chance. What we need in this country is less experimenting and a restoration of confidence. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to myself. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] began his discussion by saying that the Rules Committee had not discussed this particular bill in granting the rule. We had discussed the amendments offered by the Committee on Agriculture which covered all the points covered by the present bill, and a rule was granted. In the meantime the Supreme Court decision was rendered and they felt that the Committee on Agriculture should take some further time in revamping some of their amendments to make them come within the decision of the Supreme Court. Substituting the present bill with its amendments is merely granting the privilege of consideration that was granted by the first rule.

The gentleman from Massachusetts, of course, is opposed to farm relief that is based on the theory of the processing tax. I am a little surprised that a man from his part of the Nation that has used the powers of Federal taxation for more than half a century to build up manufacturing industries in New England, at a sacrifice of the consumers of the Nation of manufactured goods, should find fault with the theory of taxation which permits the Federal Government to levy a tax to bring relief to agriculture. By this bill we are not stifling production. We are doing what the manufacturers of New England and other portions of the Nation have done for many decades. We are planning a better production, a better marketing, a better distribution of farm products, so as to develop a better purchasing power in that largest group of all the American people, those who live on the farms of our Nation, so that they might buy the products from the factories. Because this tax is working there seems to be some opposition to it, but under the levying of a processing tax and paying that to the farmer who will cooperate with his Nation to curtail and plan his production there can be a better control of marketing and marketing processes and give more purchasing power to the farming class. We have raised the price of cotton from 5 cents as it was under Mr. Hoover's administration to 12 and 13 cents under this plan of agricultural relief. We have raised the price of hogs from 2½ to 7½ cents per pound and the price of wheat from 30 to 35 cents a bushel to in the neighborhood of $1. And the farmer is now going to receive some return on his investment and his labor, then he can buy shoes and clothing and other products of the factory in New England and other parts of the country. By this processing tax we are bringing a more uniform prosperity to all the people. The gentleman will remember that the farmers for 10 or 12 years have been in a position where they could not buy the products of manufacturing.

It is true that this bill proposes to use some of the money that is raised by tariff taxation to provide a subsidy to sell the surplus abroad if found necessary. Whether it will be necessary or not will be determined by whether the processing tax will bring returns to the farmer. The use of these tariff taxes will supplement present methods if found necessary

Mr. Wallace, before the Committee on Rules, said that they were reducing the surplus carry-over of cotton by approximately 1,000,000 bales a year.

In other words, the surplus inherited from the Republican Party by the Democratic is now being consistently reduced every year, and the price of cotton is up to around 12 cents per pound. I do not agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts that this is an unwise program or policy. It is right to solve the problems of the depression among 30,000,000 who live on the farms and give them a new hope and a purchasing power that they have not had, helping them to pay their debts and buy commodities which will promote industrial employment. Upon this foundation the hope of these 30,000,000 people for any permanent prosperity must rest, because it is the largest group of all and who are engaged in raising the raw materials that feed and clothe this Nation.

Mr. O'MALLEY. What is the sense of paying the farmers to curtail their crops when on the other hand the Department of the Interior is opening up new land to raise crops by irrigation and reclamation?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I would not divert the attention of the House to the policies of the Department of the Interior. I am not responsible for any particular project. I am arguing about the general policies of the administration of this law. The gentleman can reach his own conclusion about whether any particular project is wise or not. It does not enter into this debate.

Mr. FARLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. FARLEY. Is it not true that the Department of the Interior is likewise buying up a great deal of submarginal land and retiring it at this time?

Mr. GREENWOOD. That is true. The Interior Department is retiring nonproductive land and helping to build up the Department of Forestry Reservation. In other words, we are engaged in a gigantic enterprise, and you can always check some one project against some other policy if you desire to do it. But this is a general principle of helping all classes that are producing farm products, to lift the prices of their products and their purchasing power, in order to help turn the wheels of industry and help all people.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Has the gentleman's committee, or has the gentleman himself given any study to the constitutionality of this processing tax? If I am correctly informed, I feel that if the N. R. A. was unconstitutional, certainly the confiscation of property and the restraint of trade as it appears in the gentleman's own report, would seem to me to be unconstitutional.

Mr. GREENWOOD. The gentleman can take that up with the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture after the House goes into the Committee of the Whole. I assume that that committee did study the constitutional features of this bill, because they revamped their amendments after the decision of the Supreme Court. I am sure he can give more and better information about that than a member of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. The gentleman has given some figures showing that there have been increases in prices of agricultural products, and has told us that the increases were due to a reduction in the production. Does not the gentleman concede that most of that reduction was accomplished by the weather man and not by the Democratic Party?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I am not making that concession. I would say it was a contributing factor, but, according to my mind, it was a minor contributing factor.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Has the gentleman considered the fact that since the crop prospects have improved the price of wheat has dropped 20 cents?

Mr. GREENWOOD. There are always seasonal variations in that, according to the future production. I would not enter into any split-penny argument on that. There are variations at all times in the year because of future production. The prospect of next crop and the manipulation of buyers frequently cause fluctuations.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. How much actual net reduction of acreage does the gentleman think the allotment plan has accomplished?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I am making the comparison that under the Republican administration under Mr. Hoover, wheat went down to 30 cents a bushel, and now it is a dollar a bushel. I say that on a comparative basis it justifies what we have done to decrease the acreage of wheat.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I assume, therefore, that the gentleman would give Mr. Hoover and the Republican Party credit for the good weather which produced the good crops?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I will give them credit for one of the worst depressions that ever hit the farming class in this Nation. It happened under a high protective tariff and under a gold standard and all of the sacred policies which they have always claimed was a guaranty to prosperity.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I would like to remind the gentleman that the agricultural depression did not begin in October 1929, but followed the adoption of the Federal Reserve order of May 1920, when Woodrow Wilson was President of the United States, a policy which was initiated by the Federal Reserve Board which he created.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I did not yield for a speech; but we had some pretty good times after that happened, between 1920 and 1930.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Under Republican administrations; yes.

Mr. GREENWOOD. The gentleman can get time from his side and can discuss all he desires these policies to which he has referred.

Mr. MEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. MEAD. The interjection of a partisan motive by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CHRISTIANSON] permits me to interject this little partisan idea: I understand that the "grass roots convention" O. K'd. the McNary-Haugen policy, and I understand that one of the distinguished leaders on the Republican side, candidate for President, also approves the McNary-Haugen bill. I wanted to ask the gentleman if that bill and every other similar effort to relieve agriculture was not killed under the administration of President Hoover and his immediate predecessor?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Certainly. I voted for every one of those, and a Republican President proceeded to kill them by veto.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. During the last 2 years the President of the United States and the Secretary of Agriculture have had the power to put into effect the principles of the McNary-Haugen bill, and they have not done so. Therefore, the present Democratic President is taking exactly the same position that two Republican Presidents took when they vetoed the bill.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I do not yield further.

Mr. MEAD. At least the Democratic President is taking an affirmative attitude.

Mr. GREENWOOD. The Democratic Secretary of Agriculture is putting into effect, and it is working, the contents of this bill which we are now proposing to continue with certain amendments which we think are essential.

I take it that the constituency of the gentleman from Minnesota is pretty well satisfied with the conditions as they now are compared to what they were under the former administration.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will permit this observation, under Mr. Hoover they started out with the Farm Board and 16-cent cotton and wound up with 4-cent cotton. This program started out with 4-cent cotton and wound up with 12-cent cotton.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. To be fair, the gentleman should note that the price declines during the latter part of Hoover's administration which he has cited were world-wide and resulted from a world-wide depression.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield further to the gentleman from Minnesota. I do not yield to him now and have not yielded to him for a speech. He can make his speech later on.

Mr. Speaker, I have given comparative figures showing the progress we have made in agriculture under this bill. The farmers are now able to plan on a cooperative basis with the right to sign a contract with their Government, which they certainly have the right to do under the Constitution of the United States, and where they do they are compensated for cooperating with their Government. Crop reduction is encouraged and the surplus is being controlled, even in regard to cotton. The surplus is being reduced, and the price is holding up under crop reduction.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. FOCHT. May I ask the gentleman in the matter of importation of agricultural products if he will please tell the House and tell the world how it contributes to the prosperity of the American farmer to import millions of tons of lard, millions of tons of butter, and hundreds of thousands of cattle from South America?

Mr. GREENWOOD. If my memory serves me right, we are operating under a Republican tariff at the present time, a tariff that was passed at a special session called by Mr. Hoover for the purpose, he said, of revising the tariff for the benefit of American agriculture.

Mr. FOCHT. If the gentleman will yield further, we are operating under a flexible tariff bill with a flexibility of 50 percent.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I do not recall that the President has used his powers to reduce on any of the items the gentleman has mentioned.

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman still has not answered my question. Does the gentleman think it contributes to the happiness and prosperity of the American farmer to have this lard, this butter, and these cattle come in here in competition with his products?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I can agree with the gentleman on that, but I can say that a lot of those figures are not applicable; that farm policy has been effective in a great many places in stopping importations.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, must we again say to this House, and in emphatic language, that the cotton textile industry is not fighting farm relief? To say it is, is unwarranted, is insidious and false. In spite of the propaganda of the Department of Agriculture, in spite of the obstinacy of the Secretary of Agriculture, in spite of the 5,000 articles that have been issued from that Department, many of which have been strictly propaganda, tending to aline one section of the country against another, the cotton textile industry is not fighting agriculture. It is high time that these unwarranted attacks upon the textile industry are terminated.

We wish the farmer success. We will join in almost any form of relief for him that would not ruin our industry. Why help one industry only to ruin another and at the same time draw a picture depicting us as against farm relief? It is unfair; it is wrong; it may lead to serious trouble.

All we ask is that the tax be not placed on the back of one industry; find a broader base. We are not complaining about the benefits paid to the farmer. Take $100,000,000, if you please, by this bill from the customs revenues and pay it to the farmer and we shall not object. But why has Mr. Wallace been over the country attacking the textile industry? At Peoria, Ill.—think of such a speech, in which he flatly stated that New England is opposed to the farmers' tariff! It is an absolute misstatement. Sixteen thousand farmers applauded and were made to believe it. As if the farmer already did not have all the benefits of a tariff on all agricultural products; and we want him to have it. Certainly he must be satisfied or he would have asked for more. If he needs more we would want him to have all he requires to protect him against foreign competition. Again I ask how it can be satisfying to collect this all from one industry and ruin that industry. That is the whole problem. Do not try to drag any other red herrings across this trail. We want the farmers to prosper and we shall be glad to vote for this bill if you will put in it any other way of financing the cotton-processing taxes.

There is another phase of which I must speak, the moral break-down of the nations of the world has made men everywhere fearful of their own governments. There has been put into this bill a provision—and I ask you to consider it carefully—that if any taxes have been illegally collected we shall have no redress against our Government for their recovery. That is indeed a new doctrine. It does not apply to any other taxpayer in the country. The only argument you can possibly make in favor of it is that it has already been collected from the consumer, and therefore the Government should not pay it back.

We have an abundance of evidence, which has been presented week after week to the Cabinet officers in their special sessions, that the textile mills have not been able to pass that tax on and have lost a lot of money in consequence; and it is their right under the law, their moral right, to reclaim it. It is dishonest to take it away from them. Practically all of these payments of taxes were made under protest, yet now the payers are to be stripped of their lawful rights.

If it is found they were illegally collected, they should have the right of recovery, and God knows they need it. Do not go on the assumption that they have taken it out of the consuming public, because generally they have not. Do not commit another unmoral act and again deliberately violate the Constitution.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PARSONS. Naturally, of course, the gentleman would like to have the tariff for manufactured goods for New England, but the gentleman very well knows that the tariff for the protection of farm products, this being an export nation, has not worked.

Mr. GIFFORD. We will give you all the tariff you want. If you have not enough, we will give you more. We will give you all there is in this bill if you will not ruin our industry. I should like to have the gentleman take my place in New England today. I represent an industry that is being ruined, and there is no necessity for doing it. Why persist in this?

Mr. Speaker, why is it that the New England manufacturing industry is always attacked especially? Are there no industries located in Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, and many other States? The finger, however, is always pointed at New England, where exists only a small part of the manufacturing industry of this country. Why purposely destroy our textile industry?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I want the gentleman to have clearly in the RECORD that there is just as much industry in Illinois that shares in this as any other part of the country.

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes. But New England is always mentioned.

Mr. Speaker, we may take the floor again later, as we must do everything that is humanly possible to save our textile industry. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] and myself are particularly affected. Why not let the burden of this tax fall upon a broader base or provide it from general revenue? The so-called "tax bill" reenacted today, was not for any one particular purpose.

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman knows that for the last 15 or 20 years the American farmers of the Middle West and West have paid the tariff duties which have been levied for the protection of the industries in the gentleman's region.

Mr. GIFFORD. Perhaps, in a measure, but we have been very good customers of yours. When the South was down and out and could not build manufacturing plants, New England built them for it, that it might have a larger market for its cotton. We have lived in reasonable harmony ever since, until now this sectionalism feeling is brought forward. We want you to have this relief. We want you to have all there is in the bill, if you will remedy the one condition which can easily be done. Is that not fair?

Mr. KNUTE HILL. The gentleman said the farmer has been protected by the protective tariff.

Mr. GIFFORD. He is supposed to be protected.

Mr. KNUTE HILL. Will the gentleman explain how the wheat farmer was protected by the 42-cent wheat tariff when they were selling wheat for far less than that?

Mr. GIFFORD. Would he have that tariff repealed? Our industries have actually been threatened! Secretary Wallace said at Peoria that if this processing tax is defeated they will take the tariff off manufacture. Would they still retain the tariff for the farmer?

Mr. KNUTE HILL. But just explain how the wheat farmers are protected. A 42-cent wheat tariff is of no value to the farmer when we export millions of bushels. The tariff could be $1 per bushel and of no benefit, as price on exported wheat sets price on all domestic wheat.

Mr. GIFFORD. It may not be effective, I agree with the gentleman. The "whole" question is, why make this one industry bear the tax, and bring about its ruin? That is all there is to the question.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Why did not the "grass roots" convention condemn the A. A. A. then?

Mr. GIFFORD. Are we condemning the A. A. A.? No. We want you to have it. Are you people over there so blind that you cannot understand all we are criticizing is the method of collections?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Where would you put the tax?

Mr. GIFFORD. Place it under the general revenues, of course.

Mr. McFARLANE. The gentleman wants a general sales tax.

Mr. GIFFORD. In whatever general tax is levied. You raised $500,000,000 today. Take it out of that.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. How can the tariff do the farmers any good when we are an exporting Nation?

Mr. GIFFORD. That is not the question. All that I am objecting to is the method of the collection of this tax. Can you not get that? Are you going to allow Secretary Wallace to portray it in this unjust manner, and pay for all the propaganda stuff out of the taxpayers' money? Why should he be allowed to poison the minds of the farmers against New England? It is wrong. It will have a lasting unfavorable effect on the Nation.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. Have we not had that same kind of propaganda coming out of New England for years and years?

Mr. GIFFORD. No.

Mr. McFARLANE. Poisoning the rest of the country. We have heard all about the protective tariff to protect your industry and the South has heard it for years until you bled us to death and now we are tired of it.

Mr. GIFFORD. No. We had to build mills in order to manufacture your cotton. The people down there were delighted to have us do it. In general, farmers are protected today from foreign goods coming into this country exactly as the manufacturers are protected. A tariff is not required for cotton and we are glad to assist in this relief, if the collection of the tax is differently made so as not to destroy the industry itself.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days after the House concludes its consideration of this bill to extend their own remarks on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8492) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8492, with Mr. Cox in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I shall yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BEAM] 45 minutes, with the understanding he will take care of those on this side who are opposed to the bill.

I now yield myself 30 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I was a little surprised this morning to hear the gentleman from Massachusetts quoting with approval statistics furnished by the League of Nations.

This is not a partisan bill. The Committee on Agriculture for weeks has been trying to fashion a bill that would accomplish the purpose which was sought by the measure which was first enacted, a purpose which I believe is desired by all right-thinking American people. How well we have succeeded may be a matter of opinion, but I want to say that Members on both sides of the aisle, in the Committee on Agriculture, have worked earnestly. I regard this as the most important bill that that committee has ever presented to the House of Representatives.

The business of farming is the biggest individual business in America.

The farms and ranches of America include 986,000,000 acres. The total estimated value of these lands and improvements is $31,655,000,000. This does not include the value of farm personal property and equipment, nor does it include livestock. In round numbers there are 65,000,000 cattle, 26,000,000 milk cows, 51,000,000 sheep and lambs, 61,000,000 hogs. We produce annually great quantities of corn, wheat, cotton, barley, rice, flax, and many other commodities.

There is no other business in this land comparable to it either in value, volume, or number of people affected.

Engaged directly on the farm and ranch in the United States are about 30,000,000 people. Until recent years they were almost wholly unorganized. The farmer is the last great American individualist.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JONES. I am sorry, but I want to finish my statement. I will yield a little later. If I get into questioning now I shall not finish my statement.

Living thousands of miles apart, producing an infinite variety of crops in widely separated areas, the farmer has been hedged about by organized groups on every side. Had there been no legislation in behalf of these groups, had there been no regulations of commerce, had there been no trade barriers and no monopolies, he would have needed no legislation. I subscribe to the doctrine here and now that we ought to have a tariff for all or a tariff for none. [Applause.] Standing on a dead level with every other citizen, he could have fought his own battles, protected his own interests, and carved his own niche in the affairs of our common country.

However, for more than a half century this country has been breaking up into groups. These groups have descended upon our State and National capitals, insisting upon legislation to protect their interests. They have insisted upon trade barriers; they have insisted upon commercial regulations; they have insisted upon corporate organizations. They have secured all these privileges; they have organized vast companies and engaged in monopolistic practices.

Regardless of the merits or demerits of any of these matters, they have produced a situation and certain advantages in which the farmer could have no part. In the very nature of things the agricultural sections were bled white, with inevitable final paralysis. Just as the human body cannot properly function with a portion of it paralyzed, our economic structure is subject to the same inexorable rules. It became necessary to restore the purchasing power of the farmer if our Nation was to live and prosper.

This is the basis of the present move. It may not be—it is not—perfect. In many respects it may be crude, but it is an essential piece of machinery, and it is a short-sighted citizen who would scrap it because of apparent defects.

If these gentlemen whose sections have had some of these advantages—right or wrong, I am not going into that—can suggest a better plan, let them come in and lay it on the table, and we will talk to them; but we will not talk about backing up until they back up or present something else. [Applause.]

ACTION NECESSARY

Of course, this program is not perfect. If you will go down to the Smithsonian Institution and look at the first automobile that was built, you will find it almost has to be labeled an auto in order to be recognized as such. A man would be foolish to start anywhere in it; but did they run it into a ditch and junk it just because it was not perfect? We would not have done any of the fine things that have been done in America if we had deserted every new mechanical contrivance simply because it did not attain overnight the acme of perfection. I am proud of the fact that the Committee on Agriculture, representing the greatest industry in America, is determined to complete this circle and put every American on the same dead level of equality with every other American. [Applause.]

That is what we earnestly tried to do in this bill. Has the agricultural program accomplished anything? If you will put in deadly parallel the prices before the program started and the prices today, you will see that it has. Here are some of them:

Farm price of basic agricultural commodities

Commodity	Farm price, December 1932	Present price (May 15, 1935)
Wheat	31.6 cents per bushel	87.8 cents per bushel.
Rye	21.1 cents per bushel	62 cents per bushel.
Flaxseed	82.8 cents per bushel	1.56 cents per bushel.
Barley	19.3 cents per bushel	66 cents per bushel.
Cotton	5.4 cents per pound	12 cents per pound.
Corn	18.8 cents per bushel	84.8 cents per bushel.
Hogs	$2.73 per hundredweight	$7.92 per hundredweight.
Beef cattle	$3.41 per hundredweight	$6.80 per hundredweight.
Rice	40 cents per bushel	86 cents per bushel.
Peanuts	1.2 cents per pound	4.4 cents per pound.
Wholesale milk	$1.26 per hundredweight	$1.73 per hundredweight.
Butterfat	21.1 cents per pound	27.5 cents per pound.
Butter	21.3 cents per pound	27 cents per pound.

SEASONAL CROPS

	1932 seasonal price	1934 seasonal price
Tobacco	10.5 cents per pound	22 cents per pound.
Grain sorghums	19.1 cents per bushel	1.15 cents per bushel (May 15 price).

These increased prices were necessary to restore the purchasing power of the farmer in the interest of the common welfare of the country. This has not brought any commodity up beyond the range of a fair and just price.

BUSINESS PRACTICES

We grow used to certain things and they seem commonplace. A new practice causes comment.

It is interesting to hear business men criticize the farmers for adjusting their production when they themselves have been practicing the same thing for years and take it for granted.

No merchant buys a double stock of goods when conditions are bad; no manufacturer runs his mills full tilt when there is no demand for the goods he is producing; no manufacturer of automobiles or implements constructs vast thousands of cars and plows which he knows he cannot sell simply because he does not believe in the doctrine of scarcity. And yet he criticizes the farmers for practicing the same policy which he would not think of abandoning in his own business, simply because overproduction would ruin his prices and bankrupt him. It will have the same effect on the farmer or anybody else. It is the A B C of business.

Through depression years industry in the main reduced its volume and largely maintained its prices. Agriculture largely maintained its volume and its prices were greatly reduced.

I have in my hand an interesting table. Let us assume that both agricultural production and industrial production were 100 percent in 1929. In 1932, agriculture had reduced her production 18 percent, while industry had reduced her production 59 percent. By what species of logic can industry criticize agriculture when industry had decreased its volume three times as much as agriculture?

What was the result of this reduction on the price structure of the two? Agricultural prices went down to 46 percent of the 1929 level, while industrial prices went down to only 79 percent. In other words, industry reduced its production nearly three times as much as agriculture, and by inverse ratio agricultural prices went down nearly three times as much as industrial prices went down. By what form of glorified logic can the business man justify the one while criticizing the other?

If industrial production had been continued at the same ratio during the depression years that agricultural volume was maintained, automobiles would probably have sold for $100 apiece, plows would probably have sold for $10 apiece, and other commodities in proportion. No; the whole philosophy of the agricultural adjustment program is to apply business principles to agriculture.

In spite of defects; in spite of captious criticism; in spite of violent protests by affected interests that have long profited at the expense of the farmer, many fine results have been achieved without unfairness to the other citizens of our country.

NECESSARY CHANGES

The whole reduction program was an adjustment, a deck-clearing proposition. We are now moving into the long-range program, not to abandon what we already have, but to improve it. We strike out the word "reduction" by this amendment, and we insert the word "adjustment." The processing taxes are collected and paid into the Treasury. It is a general tax. The money is paid into the General Treasury, and a similar amount is appropriated for specified purposes. Under the original program, the benefit payment could be made only for reduction. We realize that world trade is important. Any man who does not, any man who will simply cry that we have better prices and therefore do not need to pay any attention to world trade, has not half thought through this proposition. We all recognize the importance of world trade. Of course, other countries will have to recover before they can purchase our commodities in large quantities. Much of their trade during the period from 1925 to 1929 was carried on with the money that was borrowed from us. It is not of very great value if you have to furnish the money to the man who buys your commodity, but as we get out of the mist of this thing, of course, our world trade must be increased.

PURPOSES

We add to the purposes for which the funds may be used not only adjustment in production but expansion of domestic and foreign markets, a removal of surpluses, and the paying of premiums on the domestic percentage, a two-price system that is used in many countries; and the Secretary may use any or all or a combination of any or all of the various plans in carrying out the purpose of the Agricultural Adjustment Act which is simply to restore the price of the farmer's product to a parity, to the same purchasing power that he had before we got into all this trouble through which we have passed since 1929. With the processing fee added it simply makes up that price and compels a fair price to the farmer for his product. The amendments broaden the program and fit it into the new and changing conditions.

A special fund is made available for the exportation of products of American agriculture. That may be very desirable. It certainly tallies with the program many of the critics say they are interested in. We cannot see anything wrong with that course. So long as we have trade barriers and tariffs which protect certain commodities, I cannot see any reason why that protection should not also go to the others. When a man grows a bale of cotton or a bushel of wheat, harvesting one in the hot July sun and picking the other under a blazing September sky, and carries them to market, he has a right as an American citizen to the same market conditions as any other man, and until somebody can show us a better plan I say let us ride on this train.

NONBASIC COMMODITIES

There are certain commodities classed as basic commodities; a distinct program is available for them. There are about 2,000,000 farmers engaged in the production of other commodities that do not lend themselves to the character of program that has been handled in the main as covering basic commodities. An effort was made at the time of the passage of the original act to have marketing agreements and a licensing provision to carry out those agreements so that these other commodities could be given a part of the protection in price adjustments in markets that was given to the basic commodities. The principal ones on which there seems to be an opportunity of planning something are milk and its products and fruits and vegetables. In the light of the Supreme Court decision it was thought wise to limit those products at least to the main ones until such time as we could work out a program that would meet all the requirements of the Supreme Court decision. I believe that especially on milk and its products we have succeeded in accomplishing that purpose.

ORDERS

The program for these commodities is covered by what is termed "orders" in the proposed amendments. These orders may cover only the marketing in interstate commerce of milk and its products, fruits, and vegetables, and two or three other named commodities, but do not include canned fruits and vegetables. We have undertaken to set out specifically just what these orders may and may not contain, thus furnishing a definite yardstick to guide the Department of Agriculture in making out the program under these "orders."

In reference to milk, the Secretary is given the authority to establish a minimum price to the producer. We believe this course is justified under the terms of the Supreme Court decision in the case of Nebbia v. New York (291 U. S. 502). In that particular case a State law fixing a minimum price to the producer as well as the resale price on the part of the handler was sustained by the Court. The Court commented on the fact that milk is an essential item of diet, that it is an excellent medium for the growth of bacteria, and that these facts necessitate safeguards in its production and handling for human consumption which greatly increase the cost of the business; that failure of producers to receive a reasonable return for their labor and investment over an extended period threatens a relaxation of vigilance against contamination; that it is a very important industry and that if price chaos is to prevail it would be difficult to maintain proper sanitary regulations in the field of production in such a way as to protect public health.

In passing on this question, the Court states that—

Neither property rights nor contract rights are absolute, for government cannot exist if the citizen may at will use his property to the detriment of his fellows or exercise his freedom of contract to work them harm. Equally fundamental with the private right is that of the public to regulate it in the common interest.

The Court also uses the following language:

The Court has repeatedly sustained curtailment of enjoyment of private property in the public interest. The owner's rights may be subordinated to the needs of other private owners whose pursuits are vital to the paramount interests of the community. The State may control the use of property in various ways; may prohibit advertising billboards except of a prescribed size and location, or their use for certain kinds of advertising; may, in certain circumstances, authorize encroachments by party walls in cities; may fix the height of buildings, the character of materials, and methods of construction, the adjoining area which must be left open, and may exclude from residential sections offensive trades, industries, and structures likely injuriously to affect the public health or safety; or may establish zones within which certain types of buildings or businesses are permitted and others excluded. And, although the fourteenth amendment extends protection to aliens as well as citizens, a State may for adequate reasons of policy exclude aliens altogether from the use and occupancy of land.

Laws passed for the suppression of immorality, in the interest of health, to secure fair trade practices, and to safeguard the interests of depositors in banks, have been found consistent with due process. These measures not only affected the use of private property, but also interfered with the right of private contract. Other instances are numerous where valid regulation has restricted the right of contract, while less directly affecting property rights.

The Constitution does not guarantee the unrestricted privilege to engage in a business or to conduct it as one pleases. Certain kinds of business may be prohibited; and the right to conduct a business, or to pursue a calling, may be conditioned. Regulation of a business to prevent waste of the State's resources may be justified. And statutes prescribing the terms upon which those conducting certain businesses may contract, or imposing terms if they do enter into agreements, are within the State's competency.

Legislation concerning sales of goods, and incidentally affecting prices, has repeatedly been held valid. In this class fall laws forbidding unfair competition by the charging of lower prices in one locality than those exacted in another, by giving trade inducements to purchasers, and by other forms of price discrimination. The public policy with respect to free competition has engendered State and Federal statutes prohibiting monopolies, which have been upheld. On the other hand, where the policy of the State dictated that a monopoly should be granted, statutes having that effect have been held inoffensive to the constitutional guarantees. Moreover, the State or a municipality may itself enter into business in competition with private proprietors, and thus effectively although indirectly control the prices charged by them.

Again, the Court says:

The due-process clause makes no mention of sales or of prices any more than it speaks of business or contracts or buildings or other incidents of property. The thought seems nevertheless to have persisted that there is something peculiarly sacrosanct about the price one may charge for what he makes or sells, and that, however able to regulate other elements of manufacture or trade, with incidental effect upon price, the State is incapable of directly controlling the price itself. This view was negatived many years ago.

I quote further:

If the law-making body within its sphere of government concludes that the conditions or practices in an industry make unrestricted competition an inadequate safeguard of the consumer's interests, produce waste harmful to the public, threaten ultimately to cut off the supply of a commodity needed by the public, or portend the destruction of the industry itself, appropriate statutes passed in an honest effort to correct the threatened consequences may not be set aside because the regulation adopted fixes prices reasonably deemed by the legislature to be fair to those engaged in the industry and to the consuming public. And this is especially so where, as here, the economic maladjustment is one of price, which threatens harm to the producer at one end of the series and the consumer at the other. The Constitution does not secure to anyone liberty to conduct his business in such fashion as to inflict injury upon the public at large, or upon any substantial group of the people. Price control, like any other form of regulation, is unconstitutional only if arbitrary, discriminatory, or demonstrably irrelevant to the policy the legislature is free to adopt, and hence an unnecessary and unwarranted interference with individual liberty.

I have quoted rather liberally from this opinion, because I believe the principles announced in the decision are controlling.

The decision of the Court sustains the price fixing on the part of the State of New York on the subject of milk. In the case of Baldwin v. Seelig (55 Sup. Ct. Rep. 497) the Supreme Court held that the State of New York could not constitutionally prohibit the sale within its borders of milk produced outside of the State and purchased from producers at less than the minimum prices fixed under the statute for the purchase of milk in New York. The Supreme Court held that this attempt by the State of New York to fix minimum producer prices for milk moving in interstate commerce was unconstitutional because it constituted an attempted regulation of interstate commerce.

In the case of Lemke v. Farmers Grain Co. (258 U. S. 50) it was held that a North Dakota statute which fixed the price to be paid for grain purchased from growers in that State was unconstitutional because the fixing of such producer prices was a regulation of interstate commerce and hence was subject to regulation only by Congress and not by the States.

The case of Hammer v. Dagenhart (247 U. S. 251)—the Child Labor case—for example, is not an authority against the constitutionality of the fixing of minimum producer prices for milk going into interstate commerce. In that case the Supreme Court held that the real purpose and effect of the child-labor law was to regulate the hours of labor of children in factories within States—a matter which has no relation whatever to interstate commerce.

The cases above discussed demonstrate that the purchase and sale of milk for shipment in interstate commerce is itself a part of interstate commerce. Congress is regulating a transaction which is a part of interstate commerce, not one unrelated to interstate commerce, as was the employment of child labor involved in the Dagenhart case. The only transaction regulated is the purchase of such milk by the distributor from the producer, and that purchase initiates the movement of milk in interstate commerce and is itself a part of interstate commerce.

In the proposed amendments we have painstakingly limited the application of orders that may be made by the Secretary to transactions in the current of interstate commerce which directly burden, obstruct, or affect interstate commerce. One phase of the definition used is approved by the Supreme Court in the case of the Chicago Board of Trade against Olson, and the other phase we believe to be authorized by the decision in the Schechter case.

Those are the principal things authorized by the proposed amendments, namely, allocation of the market and minimum price to the producer, and a fair division of that money to the producer without any discrimination as between different sections of the country.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. JONES. Yes; I yield.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Is there anything in the milk section of the bill which gives the Secretary authority to set up trade barriers and stop the free flow in commerce throughout the United States of dairy products?

Mr. JONES. No. There is nothing in the bill that would authorize that. The Secretary may require that in crossing from one region to another that they comply with the same conditions which the farmers and distributors comply with in that region.

Mr. ANDRESEN. That is, sanitary regulations?

Mr. JONES. Sanitary and other uniform regulations; but he cannot set up any trade barriers which would keep them out.

Mr. ANDRESEN. A great many Members have inquired about that feature, and I just wanted the gentleman to bring that out.

Mr. JONES. The amendments require a uniform price and uniform set of conditions and fair distribution. In the first place, I do not believe we could give authority to set up these barriers. In the second place, the bill does not do that. It simply enables them to have a program in one of these regions, and in developing these orders which the Secretary issues, he uses the word "region" wherever possible. Those on the outside must come into that.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield briefly.

Mr. CULKIN. Under subdivision (b) on page 20, an exception is made of milk and its products. That is, the smallest regional production area shall be followed, except in the case of milk and its products.

Mr. JONES. But there is another place where it says that no order having a national application shall be issued where a regional order is practical. The reason we had to put this exception in this part as to milk was the fact that in certain sections like the New York area there are two or three States that must be considered together in a regional application, and it may not be practicable to use the smallest region. It is subject to the requirement that if practical, the Secretary must use a regional rather than a national application.

I want to say that in reference to milk, we gave broad powers in handling the question of milk to the Secretary of Agriculture. The orders section takes the place of the old license provision, but with much more limited application.

I am very much interested to have something done for the milk producers of America. That is one of the most important groups engaged in the farming business. They have probably been about as helpless as any other group possibly could be, because they produce a perishable commodity. It is an essential food. They haul their milk to town and turn it over to somebody else, as a rule. I am going to show you some conditions that impelled the Committee on Agriculture to give full powers in the handling of milk and its products. If you will get the Federal Trade Commission's report which came out in the early part of April and see what an amazing combination has controlled the distribution of milk in the industrial centers of America, and how they have paid the farmer a mere pittance while sustaining their distribution price, you will realize that something must be done in regard to milk.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield briefly?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. HAMLIN. I had before me in the office a week ago two men, both milk producers from Maine, one of them a big grange man, one of the leaders in Maine. He informed me that they were well suited with the way the milk business had been going in the State of Maine, and especially the way that it was pointing in the propositions which the Committee on Agriculture had before it. Was he justified in that?

Mr. JONES. I think we have gone as far as we can legally go in giving authority to handle this milk proposition.

Let me call attention to two things which were shown about these big milk companies. They averaged, during the depression years, 1929 to 1934, from 13- to 20-percent profit. One of the big companies, according to the report of the Federal Trade Commission, the National Dairy Products Corporation, received returns from two subsidiaries during the period 1929–34, which practically paid for the original purchase, when they were not paying the farmer enough to feed the old cow. I say that is not right. You cannot expect to have pure milk, you cannot expect to maintain sanitary conditions in the production areas if you allow those people, simply because they have the power, to charge the consumer prices that will bring about such profits as that, while they hold down what the producer is to receive.

The question of the powers conferred in connection with fruits and vegetables, and so forth, included in the terms of the proposed orders is not quite so clear. However, some of the elements involved in the milk decisions also apply to fruits and vegetables. The case is not as strong. The legality is not quite so certain. However, fruits and vegetables are of a perishable nature. The seasonal character of their production frequently causes gluts in the market which without some sort of orderly marketing arrangements produce chaos and tend to wreck the industry. There did not seem to be any other way of working out a practical program—at least no such program was presented. In order that an attempt might be made to work out a practical program for a vast and important industry, these items were included, with specific directions as to what the program might or might not include.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The committee's report, on page 1, in the second paragraph, reads:

> The bill proposes to supplement the Agricultural Adjustment program by (1) providing for the so-called "ever normal granary plan"; (2) providing for payments in connection with the exportation of basic agricultural commodities and products and for removal of quantities thereof from the normal channels of trade and providing for payments on that part of the production thereof which is for domestic consumption.

Will the gentleman briefly tell us what that provision is in the bill and how that is to be brought about?

Mr. JONES. If the gentleman will turn to the back of the report, to the page dealing with rental or benefit payments, he will find the particular section that is inserted and just how it will operate. I think he can go through that more quickly than I can explain it. That is among the enumerated purposes for which the proceeds of the processing fees may be used. The gentleman will find the new part set out in brackets, together with all of the old part of every section.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes, and I ask not to be interrupted during this period because there are two or three things I want to cover.

I believe this measure was originally drafted so that these processing fees would be sustained, but out of an abundance of caution, or precaution, we have stipulated in the bill that the Congress enacts the processing fees as they existed on June 1. Then we provide that they may be varied, may be decreased even to zero under certain circumstances by the Secretary of Agriculture, with a further stipulation that if that second provision for variation is held unconstitutional, the other taxes immediately become and remain effective.

It is also provided in certain sections of the bill that if any of the processing fees are held unconstitutional, a recovery cannot be had by the person who paid the tax. The reason for this is that in practically no instance has the processor actually paid the tax. He physically pays the tax, to be sure, but it is passed back either to the farmer or on to the consumer; so he has sold his commodity on the basis of the processing fee and the money could not be returned to the people who would be entitled to it. That phase of the matter, therefore, is foreclosed.

A SPECIAL FUND

The bill contains another provision to the effect that 30 percent of the annual customs receipts, or rather, a sum equivalent to that, may be used in the promotion of foreign trade and for other purposes designated in the act. About 30 percent of the American people are engaged in farming. It is thought that in many instances this provision will be helpful in restoring world trade, in which we are all interested. These premiums may be paid on the products of the commodity as well as on the commodity itself; and in most instances they probably will be paid on the products of the commodity. This will help restore American trade, and in addition it may soften some of the burdens of the other parts of the processing-fee program. In other words, it may in some instances reduce some of the burdens that are occasioned by the application of the various processing-fee provisions.

Among other things, a portion of this fund may be used for the paying of the premium for exporting farm commodities or the products thereof, or for indemnifying against losses in such exportation. The use of these premiums can in some cases and under some circumstances be made to serve the double purpose of removing surpluses and of increasing the price of that portion of the production which flows into the domestic market.

As shown by the experience in other countries, the domestic price immediately rises practically the amount of the premium. For example, let us assume that the world price of cotton is 11 cents per pound. A premium of 2 cents per pound is placed upon the exportation of raw cotton. Immediately the local price becomes something near 13 cents. Otherwise it will all be purchased by exporters and sent into foreign lands. If the exporters refuse to bid up the price, the cooperatives could make a good deal of money in doing so.

In Germany, where they have for years had what is called the "Einfuhrscheine" system—an export-import certificate—the domestic price of the entire commodity was immediately lifted practically the amount of the export certificate, according to Dr. Grunzell, the German writer. It has exactly the same effect that the paying of premiums on a domestic percentage through the processing fee has. In both cases the domestic spinner is protected by virtue of the fact that he gets his premium in the one case and his refund in the other when he exports the products of cotton. As a matter of fact, I would expect it to be largely used in exporting the products of the various commodities, but the exporting of the raw commodity, in my judgment, would not have anything like the effect indicated by some. At least it has not proven so in other countries.

The following countries have export premiums in varying forms: Australia, Argentina, Chile, Estonia, Finland, France, Greece, Hungary, Irish Free State, Italy, Latvia, Lithuania, Netherlands, Poland, Union of South Africa, Uruguay, and Yugoslavia. Belgium used it for many years, as did England. In practically all these countries the raw commodity as well as the finished product was included within the terms of the bounty.

I wish I might take the time to go through the various provisions of the bill, but I will not in view of the limitations we have. There is one other provision to which I wish to refer.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield before he leaves this particular phase of the bill?

Mr. JONES. I yield for a question only.

Mr. MOTT. I was very much interested in the gentleman's discussion of the way in which the control of milk was brought within the constitutional limitations. I think his argument is very good. I was wondering, though, whether he thinks the same argument would apply to other commodities, for example, walnuts.

Mr. JONES. I think certain phases of it would apply. The gentleman understands they are not required to use all of the powers that may be conferred. I freely admit that it is less certain about walnuts and commodities of that kind, but they have a marketing agreement under which they seem to be operating with satisfaction in certain areas; and it is thought they might be able to continue at least certain of those powers. It will vary with the locality. The program will be dependent upon subsequent decisions by the Supreme Court. They could use the marketing provisions and also orders that may seem to apply to those commodities. If we did not permit many of the commodities to be included in that way, we would have to have a different set of forms for every specified commodity.

Mr. MOTT. If the gentleman has time to discuss the constitutional aspects of the law as applied to some of these other commodities, I think it would be very enlightening to the House. I want to take this occasion to compliment the gentleman on his argument.

Mr. JONES. I thank the gentleman. The gentleman will find a brief discussion in the report, and I expect to touch on those particular commodities later. I will state that some of the provisions probably cannot be applied as to certain of these commodities. The only reason we give the full powers to milk and its products is because the situation was so desperate; and the operations of some of these concerns amounted almost to the acts of highwaymen. They have been so outrageous that it seems to me we ought to try to see if we cannot bring them to account. I believe we have brought them literally within the terms of the Schechter case, followed by some of the implications in the Minnesota case, the Lemke grain case, and also the Baldwin case.

I shall not have time to go into a discussion of all the phases of the bill because of the limitation of time, but there is one other matter which I regard as important, and that is in regard to the measure of feeling with which certain gentlemen have complained of this bill. I believe if they fully understood the terms of this measure they would vote for it, even those who criticize it here today.

IMPORTS

We have included a provision covering imports to the effect that if the levy of a processing fee is causing an increase in the importation of a competing commodity, that commodity may be quotaed so far as its importation is concerned, just as sugar has been quotaed. In other words, if some competing commodity is brought in in increasing quantities, authority is given to freeze the importation on the basis of previous importations and thus prevent a further destruction of the domestic market. This has proved successful in the handling of sugar. This is much more effective than the gentleman's tariff that he talks so much about because that may be nullified through a variation in the exchange value of money. I believe the situation can be controlled by a quota. If it is logical and natural to say to a farmer what he may sell, the foreign producer who exports to this country should also be put on a like quota.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. With reference to the proposed tariff on imports, there is a feature a good deal like that appearing in the National Industrial Recovery Act.

Mr. JONES. I am sorry. I do not have time to discuss that act. The provision is somewhat similar, though I think this one is infinitely better.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. It is very important to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. JONES. This is greatly improved over the National Recovery Act.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Under the National Industrial Recovery Act, industry has not been——

Mr. JONES. I am sorry. I cannot yield to the gentleman further. I apologize to all the Members for not being able to yield further, because I have used 7 minutes more time than I had allowed myself.

This will give the authority to take certain action. It is mandatory only under certain circumstances. I am not going into a full discussion of the other matter, because there would be no end.

A SOUND PROGRAM

Mr. Chairman, I believe in the agricultural program. I believe in its purposes. I believe that it is in the interest of the future of America. I do not take any stock in what certain people say who are afraid our Government is going to fall or something is going wrong. I believe in the United States Government, her history, her institutions, and her purposes. Knowing the glory of her past, I believe in her future. There is too much stamina, too much character, too much industry in the background of the American people to have our country destroyed in a few years. The point is that we must keep our heads above water and keep right on working. It does not do any good to stand on the side lines and howl. We must get together, consult with one another, and work toward a program that will be fair to every citizen in this land.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the measure which we have presented here today in the form of amendments to the A. A. A. Act will go a long way toward perfecting a farm program. It will go a long way toward making it more workable and allowing for a generous supply of all commodities of the farm to be available at all times. It will contribute materially to the welfare of our country. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute to answer a question.

Mr. LORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LORD. I should like to ask the gentleman how this bill will affect the milkshed of the city of New York. For instance, in New York there is what is called a "milkshed" set up by the board of health around New York. Beyond that territory they cannot ship into the city. What effect would this have upon that situation?

Mr. JONES. This will not have any effect on that matter, because we do not forbid the milk being shipped in. We cannot control intrastate operations. If it is wholly within the State we have nothing to do with it. The courts have held that a State cannot keep it from being shipped in from without the State. We undertake to control only the latter.

Local people will largely control the program. Within the State, of course, such laws may be enacted as the State deems proper. We do not undertake to keep them from shipping in, and we do not authorize them to ship in. We say when they ship from some other State they must ship in subject to the same regulatory measures that exist in the particular area. In many instances the States may wish to enact supplementary legislation, if they wish to make the program fully effective.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MARSHALL].

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Chairman, I wish there was time available to discuss the terms and conditions of this bill. As stated by the distinguished gentleman who just finished speaking, the Committee on Agriculture has spent several weeks in an earnest effort in regard to this measure. There has been much propaganda put out about this bill. I do not believe there has ever been a measure that has been less understood than has this bill; at least in its original form. There was propaganda put out that every merchant and storekeeper would be licensed under this act. Of course, there was some justification for that in its original form, but this bill has been rewritten time and time again in committee. There was propaganda, which was equally false, that the Agricultural Adjustment Act itself was under attack and that if these amendments were not passed it meant the downfall of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. Neither of those contentions was correct.

Mr. Chairman, I have stood in opposition in the past, and I still stand in opposition, to delegation of any further authority of a compulsory nature to the Secretary of Agriculture. That has been one of the things that I have been fighting against in the consideration of this bill in the Committee on Agriculture. May I say particularly to the Members on the minority side that the only particular in which I am able to determine that there is any additional authority conferred upon the Secretary is found on page 10. On that page there are named the commodities concerning which it may be truthfully said that some additional authority has been conferred.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARSHALL. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is not the Secretary's power to issue orders on those particular commodities limited to a marketing agreement first?

Mr. MARSHALL. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Which marketing agreement has to be approved by the producers of those commodities?

Mr. MARSHALL. Yes; by at least 50 percent of them. If 50 percent of the processors, regarding milk and tobacco, will not accept the marketing agreement as submitted to them, then an order may be issued by the Secretary if 75 percent of the producers ask for it. That is the extent of the additional authority that is conferred under this bill upon the Secretary of Agriculture.

When you take the bill as a whole I am willing to say there has been no further delegation of authority to the Secretary of Agriculture, because this bill sets out the terms and conditions of these marketing agreements, whereas the original act left that almost as a roving commission in the Secretary. He could put almost anything he pleased in these marketing agreements. These marketing agreements are now limited and the measure now under consideration specifies one or the other of two things that must go into these marketing agreements and none other.

So I have come to the conclusion that it cannot justly be said with respect to this measure that as a whole any further authority is conferred upon the Secretary of Agriculture.

There is also in this bill a provision that further curtails the authority of the Secretary, a provision in regard to the processing taxes. In the original act there was not much said about that, except it gave the Secretary authority to levy the processing tax; but in this measure there has been an attempt made in the rewriting of it, particularly since the decision of the Supreme Court in the N. R. A. case, to restrict and define as nearly as possible in advance, what these processing taxes are to be. So, again, I say that in some particulars the powers conferred upon the Secretary have been restricted rather than enlarged.

In the brief time I have I want to call your attention to the part of this bill, beginning on page 49, which is about the last of the bill, section 22, dealing with imports. This is something, of course, that is not in the original A. A. A. act. There is given to the President of the United States authority to make an investigation and refer the matter to the Tariff Commission, and without reading the language of the bill I may say that it places in the President and the Secretary of Agriculture the power to stop the importation into this country of farm commodities.

Now, I hope that the President of the United States will use this part of the bill. To my mind it is the best part of the bill. The President has had authority to act along this line under existing law, but he has not yet done so; but the provisions of this bill, in my opinion, become almost mandatory upon the President of the United States when this investigation is made if he finds that the imports are doing harm to this country.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MARSHALL. Just briefly.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. The provision in the National Industrial Recovery Act is a good deal the same as this provision and many of the industries affected, because of the increase in the cost of production, asked for the application of that tariff restriction and the imposition of a quota under that act and the request was not granted by the President. What reason has the gentleman to believe now that the President is going to accede to the request in this instance and apply the tariff to this proposition?

Mr. MARSHALL. I cannot speak for the President and I do not know whether he is going to do so or not, but I just got through expressing the hope he would use what I consider the best feature of the bill.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. I am wondering if anyone on the committee has any such assurance.

Mr. MARSHALL. Of course, the gentleman knows that I would not know about that.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. May I also call attention to the fact that the tariff on butter now is 14 cents——

Mr. MARSHALL. I only yielded for a question, and I hope the gentleman will ask his question.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. The parity price of butter now is 39 cents, and the world price, plus the processing tariff, is 28 cents, or a differential of 11 cents, and applications have been made to the President for an increase in this tariff to protect the dairy industry, and yet it has been impossible to get an increase in this tariff, and with this situation in mind, how can we expect the enforcement of this provision if the President is opposed to an increase in the tariff?

Mr. MARSHALL. I cannot give the gentleman any assurance. The gentleman knows I could not give him any assurance about what the President is going to do.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. I think the House ought to have that information if anybody here has it.

Mr. MARSHALL. The gentleman will have to ask somebody on the other side. The gentleman cannot burden me with a question of that kind. I wish I could assure the gentleman that he would use this provision of the bill.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question on that point?

Mr. MARSHALL. I would rather finish my statement first, but I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. Since the gentleman has expressed the hope that the President might put this provision into effect, and since we know from past experience that he will not do it, is not the gentleman of the opinion that an amendment ought to be offered making the imposition of a quota or an embargo mandatory, and write it into the bill itself?

Mr. MARSHALL. I am not going to advise the gentleman as to what kind of amendments he may offer. The gentleman has that privilege under the rule, and I personally would not object to it, I may assure him.

Mr. MOTT. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MARSHALL. Now, in regard to these imports, I want to submit the following data showing the vast increase of farm-commodity imports.

CORN

In January and February of this year our corn imports were at the yearly rate of 22,000,000 bushels, as compared with 160,000 bushels in 1933.

CATTLE

In January and February of 1935 cattle imports into the United States amounted to 729,500, as compared with only 591,000 for all 12 months of the previous year. Cattle are coming into the United States at a time when up to April 18 we have spent $111,000,000 at home to destroy cattle and to take care of the destruction of cattle. The imports were nearly 30 percent greater in 2 months than they were in all of last year.

CANNED MEATS

In January and February of this year we imported 8,390,000 pounds. If continued this would amount to 50,000,000 pounds a year of canned meats.

BUTTER

In January and February of this year we imported butter at the rate of $4,000,000 a year, compared with $160,000 in all of 1933 and $183,000 in all of 1934.

OATS

We imported 3,762,000 bushels in 2 months as compared with 132,000 bushels in all of 1933.

BARLEY

We imported 1,500,000 bushels in 2 months, as compared with 24,000 bushels in all of 1933.

COTTONSEED-OIL CAKE

We imported in the first 2 months of this year at the rate of 312,000,000 pounds a year, compared with only 7,000,000 pounds in all of 1933.

It is contended that the volume of the imports that are coming in is so small when compared with the total production, that it does not mean anything, but I may say to you that the tendency is so strong and that the rate of increase of these imports is so great that you will be fooling yourselves if you do not wake up to the fact that the farmers of the United States realize the vast rapidity with which these imports are increasing into this country. I am not going to take the time to read the figures, because they have been given you.

I may say, further, in regard to the original Adjustment Act, that I think it is a little early for anyone to point to the success or failure of the act under which we have been living for a couple of years, and the reason I say this is because, as you all know, it is hard to legislate in regard to agriculture, because you have the element of nature with which to contend, and I do not believe there is anyone who can point out just how much of the increased price of farm commodities to the farmer is due to the curtailment program, under the A. A. A., and how much of it is due to the drought.

I am fearful that if we have good weather, favorable weather, for a couple of years we may again have a surplus which always breaks the price. I feel that we must look to the future, and in some way put ourselves in the position of taking care of the surplus in a manner that will not break the price, and we must curtail production to that end, until we do solve the surplus problem.

Here is another thing to which I want to call your attention. It looks to me that it would be an act of insanity to levy a process tax, which we will have to admit increases the cost of that article to the consumers of America, and at the same time permit the farmers of Europe to send their products into this country in competition with the products raised by our farmers. Under this bill the Secretary can use the fund derived from the processing tax to pay a benefit to the exporter in financing exports and 30 percent of the customs receipts can be used for that purpose also.

Mr. GILLETTE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARSHALL. I yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. Speaking of the increased power given the Secretary of Agriculture, does not the gentleman think that under the change to the word "adjustment" it is possible for the Secretary to pay for an increase in crops as well as reducing crops?

Mr. MARSHALL. Yes; he can.

Now, as to whether or not the Agricultural Adjustment Act and the levying of the processing tax is a sound proposition, I want to say that if it is not a sound proposition it will not continue to survive.

I have tried to justify the processing tax on the same line of reasoning that I always justified a protective tariff. I am one of those who used to believe and still believe in the good American principle of protection. I am trying to justify the processing tax along the same line. What is the parallel? When you levy a tariff you not only increase the price of that commodity but you increase wages for the benefit of the American workman, and he spends the money which is for the benefit of the country at large.

The processing tax is in the same situation. It increases the price to the consumer but it also increases the purchasing power of the farmer, and to that extent it is for the welfare and benefit of the country at large. I like to justify the processing tax on that theory. If you cannot do it on that I do not know on what theory it can be justified.

Mr. FULMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARSHALL. I yield.

Mr. FULMER. In the line of what the gentleman has just said, I cannot see any difference between a processing tax and my paying 20 percent tariff tax on the shoes I have on my feet, which tax is to protect the shoe manufacturer of New England.

Mr. MARSHALL. I have said that I am trying to justify it in my mind on that same ground. So far as the constitutional question is concerned, I am not going to discuss, particularly because, after all, it will be the Supreme Court that will have to determine that question, but I do believe that the bill will come more nearly standing up under the scrutiny of the Supreme Court with the adoption of these amendments than it would have before they were adopted. I believe the bill has been rewritten in the committee with that in mind and without expressing my own opinion as to what I think the Supreme Court decision will be when the measure reaches the Supreme Court, I believe the bill's position has been strengthened along that line.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARSHALL. Yes.

Mr. ENGEL. One question in my mind, and perhaps in the mind of many, is this: If I understand this bill correctly, 75 percent of the farmers can ratify or sign the agreement, or two-thirds.

Mr. MARSHALL. Yes; I do not know just exactly to what part of the bill you refer. Of course, marketing agreements must be entered into purely as a voluntary proposition with 50 percent of the processors. That is the only kind of a marketing agreement possible under this law, except as to milk and its products, and tobacco. Turn to page 10; you will find the commodities to which applicable. In other words, the most controversial feature of the bill before it was rewritten was what was called the imposed license.

This bill has no imposed license feature, but it does grant authority for the Secretary to issue orders, and page 10 tells what commodities these orders apply to, except in the case of milk and its products, fruits, but not for canning, vegetables, but not for canning, and tobacco. Those are the only commodities in regard to which orders can be issued. As to other commodities, for instance, fruit except for canning, there can be marketing agreements entered into, but they must be purely voluntary. There is no provision for marketing agreements to be forced on people at all. In other words, the only place wherein this bill confers any additional authority on the Secretary is to issue orders in regard to milk and its products, and tobacco, and fruits and vegetables, except for canning. Outside of that there is no compulsion.

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARSHALL. Yes.

Mr. EKWALL. I have had a lot of protests from my district over what the gentleman has mentioned in the old bill. What is the difference between the old bill and the new bill? How much more far-reaching was the old bill as to commodities and the number of commodities to be licensed?

Mr. MARSHALL. Until last week when the bill was rewritten there were several more commodities that came in under the compulsory license or what was then called an "imposed license." Several more articles came in, but it is limited to the things I mentioned—milk and its products, tobacco, and fruits and vegetables, except for canning.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARSHALL. Yes.

Mr. DITTER. Page 25, section 8 (d), is an entirely new delegation of power to the Secretary, is it not?

Mr. MARSHALL. Yes.

Mr. DITTER. In other words, the Secretary is clothed under this section with very extensive powers to inquire into, determine, and procure records of not only producers themselves, that entered into the agreements, but even those that are subsidiaries or indirectly connected with it. Will the gentleman give us his opinion with respect to that delegation?

Mr. MARSHALL. That authority is much more limited than it was when the bill was first considered in our committee, because it is confined here, if the gentleman will notice, to the commodities concerning which orders have been issued, which is milk and its products, tobacco, fruits and vegetables except for canning, and also where there is a voluntary marketing agreement. In other words, if the processors of some commodity, over 50 percent of them, agreed on a voluntary marketing agreement and adopted it, then they come under this provision and their books would be subject to investigation.

Mr. DITTER. And anybody directly or indirectly identified with them.

Mr. MARSHALL. I question just how far that will be extended.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, reverting again to the marketing agreements, if this bill is enacted can the processors of basic commodities engage in marketing agreements provided 51 percent of those enter into it?

Mr. MARSHALL. The marketing agreements never applied to any commodity that had been made a basic commodity.

Mr. WOODRUFF. And cannot under this bill?

Mr. MARSHALL. No.

Mr. DONDERO. And what becomes of the other 49 percent? Suppose 51 percent agree to a marketing agreement voluntarily, what effect does that have on the other 49 percent?

Mr. MARSHALL. They must comply.

Mr. DONDERO. What will happen if they do not?

Mr. MARSHALL. I do not know.

Mr. CHURCH. Does the gentleman consider that feature constitutional in his own mind?

Mr. MARSHALL. I seriously questioned the constitutionality of the original A. A. A. Act. I think it has been safeguarded somewhat by these amendments. I believe it will more nearly comply with the Constitution.

Mr. CHURCH. Then I have to assume that from the gentleman's answer that it is unconstitutional in his opinion?

Mr. MARSHALL. I am not asking the gentleman to assume that.

Mr. CHURCH. The gentleman does not deny it.

Mr. MARSHALL. I am not denying it. Why should I when we have a Supreme Court?

Mr. DONDERO. The gentleman has made a fine statement on this bill. I want to know what the gentleman's personal opinion is as to whether or not the 49 percent would be bound by the provisions of this act if they did not sign the marketing agreement?

Mr. MARSHALL. The law says they are. Whether they will be or not, I am not going to attempt to answer. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I want to direct my remarks to the section of the bill that relates to imports. This section has been referred to by both the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MARSHALL], but this section is of such great importance that I want to consume most of my time in trying to explain, if I can, some of the important features of that provision of the bill.

Let me say at the outset that this provision was written into the bill at the suggestion of a committee of midwestern farmers known as the "Northwest Farmers' Union Legislative Committee", representing the States of Montana, North Dakota, Minnesota, and Wisconsin. The farmers' union organizations of those various States, during the past winter, supported this group of 10 farm leaders of those States who were in the city of Washington in the interest of the farmers of the Nation. They spent a great deal of the winter here, and this provision relating to imports is, in their mind, of extreme importance and represents their principal recommendation to the committee. I had the honor of having been asked by that committee to submit the amendment to your Committee on Agriculture. I wish to say that the distinguished Chairman of our Committee on Agriculture and the distinguished ranking minority member of that committee and other members of the committee cooperated in every respect to write this provision so that it now has teeth and will be of immeasurable benefit to those States that produce agricultural commodities that have, during the past few years, been suffering as the result of increased importations of those commodities from foreign lands.

The bill provides that whenever the President has reason to believe that any one or more articles are being imported, or are likely to be imported, into the United States under such conditions and in sufficient quantities to render ineffective or materially interfere with any program or operation undertaken under this title, he, the President, shall cause an immediate investigation to be made by the Tariff Commission; and then it sets up certain regulations to be followed which will result in the fixing of a quota or the imposition of a tax upon the imports of those commodities, if the Tariff Commission finds that those imports or threatened imports actually are depressing the price of our domestically produced commodities.

Now, this is not anything new in the form of legislation, but it is new so far as the Agricultural Adjustment Act is concerned. In the National Industrial Recovery Act there is a provision similar to the provision that has been written into this bill. I refer to subsection (e) of section 3 of the National Industrial Recovery Act. It has been said by some that that provision has not been of real benefit in the protection of industries from foreign importations. I agree that it has not been; but the reason it has not been is because of the fact that the direction was not specific enough to the Administrator to put this provision of the law into effect. In that similar provision in the National Industrial Recovery Act it states that the President may cause an investigation to be made under certain circumstances. So far the President has not seen fit—at least I assume he has not seen fit—to use this power very generally, and for that reason very few of these investigations have been initiated; but in this bill the word "may" is not there, but the word "shall" is written into the bill; and whenever the President has reason to believe that the importation or threatened importation of agricultural commodities has caused the depression of prices for domestically produced farm commodities, he shall cause an investigation to be made and he shall cause this machinery to be set into operation.

I am satisfied that this provision of the bill will be of immeasurable benefit to many of the farmers in this country, particularly the dairy farmers, who have, during the past few months, suffered as a result of the importation of butter, which has depressed our price level and kept it below a fair exchange value. I maintain that that change in the language from "may" to "shall" will insure the effective operation of this provision of the bill.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. In the gentleman's opinion, does this affect all farm products, or only those on which a processing tax is levied?

Mr. BOILEAU. It provides for all commodities upon which there is a program in operation. It does not necessarily mean a processing-tax program. Any kind of a program carried out under the A. A. A. would be sufficient. For instance, in the case of butter, which is a basic commodity, there is no processing tax, but if the Agricultural Department should enter into a program of buying butter for the purpose of relieving bad conditions in the market, that would be a program put into effect under the provisions of this title, and in that case the President would be compelled, if he found that the importations of butter were affecting the price, to either put on a tax or impose a quota, or in some other way restrict the importation of that commodity. What I said refers to butter. That is a basic commodity. I want to answer the gentleman's question more completely. It applies to any commodity for which there is a program, whether it be a processing-tax program of a marketing agreement or any other type of program, and is not confined to basic commodities.

Mr. FERGUSON. I had in mind broomcorn, which is suffering now on account of importations.

Mr. BOILEAU. It would not help broomcorn unless there was some kind of a program in effect relating to that particular commodity.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I wonder if the gentleman is not attaching too much importance to the substitution of the word "shall" for the word "may"?

Mr. BOILEAU. I do not believe so.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. The gentleman realizes, does he not, that there is no way in which the President of the United States can be required to do it unless he wants to, because if he showed an indisposition to make an investigation of the effect of low tariff upon importation of agricultural commodities he could not be compelled to make it.

Mr. BOILEAU. Answering the gentleman from Minnesota, I should like to say that this bill provides that whenever the President of the United States has reason to believe that any one or more articles are being imported or are likely to be imported into the United States under such conditions and in sufficient quantities to render ineffective or materially ineffective a given program or operation undertaken under this title, he shall cause an investigation to be made. I maintain that if butter, for instance, is selling at 10 cents below parity, and we can prove that there have been millions of pounds of butter imported into this country since the first of the year, and if we can show that this importation of butter has caused the price of butter to be below parity, as I believe we can, then there is no discretion left in the President, because under those circumstances he shall cause this investigation to be made.

I grant you that if we were to assume that there is to be bad faith on the part of the President, if we were to assume that his advisers were going to urge him to betray the farmers, if we were to assume that the President would close his eyes to the mandate of Congress outlined in a bill signed by him, then, I say, there would be danger. I have no fear, however, because we say to him that he shall cause the investigation to be made. In the other act to which I referred, the N. I. R. A., the language used was "may" and there was no compulsion upon him whatsoever to put the machinery of the act into operation.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I sympathize very much with the gentleman's proposition, but I do not share his optimism because I called to the President's attention several times the importation of rye into the United States from Poland. The President has the power to help us out but he has neglected, failed, and refused to do so.

Mr. BOILEAU. That is because under the provisions of the present law he has the right to use the flexible tariff, but there is no definite formula fixed for him, there is no compulsion on him to put that machinery into motion. Here we use the strongest language possible to devise for the purpose of compelling the President to put the machinery into motion; and I, for one, cannot believe that the President will disregard the clear mandate of the law.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. There is no language this Congress can use to compel the President of the United States to do anything he does not want to do.

Mr. BOILEAU. I do not believe that. I believe there are many things that Congress could compel him to do. I do not believe we could go into court and sue the President to make him do certain things; but I do not believe that President Roosevelt or any man who assumes the office of President of the United States will disregard his duty. This provision, in my mind, would make it so clear that no person need fear that the President will ignore it.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I had that experience in the case of rye, he neglected it.

Mr. BOILEAU. I am not familiar with the case to which the gentleman refers, but I do not think there is any compulsion in the flexible tariff law at the present time. But if we incorporate this provision in the pending bill there will be a clear mandate to the President and he will protect the farmers against commodities imported from foreign countries.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. Would this provision protect the producers of pork, beef, and corn against importations?

Mr. BOILEAU. It absolutely will; it protects all of our farm commodities provided there are imports and provided the President has the right to believe that the importation of these commodities does depress our domestic price, in which case he puts this machinery into operation; and once he puts this machinery into operation then it is compulsory to levy this tax or to put into operation these various quotas to protect American farmers.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, the gentleman from Nebraska said beef. Beef has no program at the present time. It would not be protected by this provision, I take it.

Mr. BOILEAU. Not unless there is a program for beef. I did not understand the gentleman to say beef.

Mr. STEFAN. I asked about beef.

Mr. BOILEAU. I will say that if in future there is a program for beef, then this provision will be applicable. It does not mean there must be a processing tax, but a marketing agreement would be such a program as to make this provision operative. If there is no program, of course, this provision would not be applicable to beef.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. With reference to the Jones-McNary Act, which was an amendment to the A. A. A., would that in any way bring beef within the scope of this provision against importations?

Mr. BOILEAU. No; because there is no program for beef. Beef is a basic agricultural commodity, and cattle raisers could easily have a program if they wanted it. If the farmers are sufficiently interested to have a program on beef, they can have it; if they do not want it, they do not have to have it; but at the present time there is no program on beef, and this provision would not be applicable.

Mr. COFFEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. COFFEE. I am very much interested in this import section. The provision states that whenever it interferes with any program. In case beef importation should interfere with the program of pork, could not the provisions of this section be invoked to restrict importations of beef, so as not to interfere with the pork program?

Mr. BOILEAU. If it could be proved that the importation of beef interfered with the pork program, then they could put this provision of the act into operation as regards beef.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDRESEN. The gentleman comes from a great dairy State. What is the gentleman's understanding as to the dairy provisions of this bill?

Mr. BOILEAU. I want to conclude speaking on other provisions of this same subject matter which I am now discussing; then I shall use a few minutes to discuss that matter.

Mr. RYAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. RYAN. In connection with this import question, does the gentleman believe that so long as our domestic prices continue to rise, as they have during the past 2 years, we need be concerned about imports of agricultural products?

Mr. BOILEAU. Yes. During the past winter, just as soon as butter got near the parity price, they started shipping in boatloads of butter from foreign countries, which depreciated the price of our butter. It is impossible under the present circumstances to get prices above the world level and our 14-cent tariff. Just as soon as it gets above that price they start importing butter from foreign countries and it puts the price of our butter down. A small amount of butter coming in from New Zealand, Australia, and other countries will absolutely depress our price to ruinous levels.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. WITHROW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to my friend and colleague.

Mr. WITHROW. During the past few years how many times have the farmers received the parity price for butter fat?

Mr. BOILEAU. Back in March it came up close to parity, but never right up to parity. Just as soon as the price got up that high, in came importations of butter from foreign countries and ruined our price.

Mr. Chairman, I want to refer now to the reciprocal-tariff provisions, and I think this may be of some interest to our Republican colleagues who are taking a very decided position against reciprocal-tariff agreements. In the event that we should enter into a reciprocal-tariff agreement with any foreign country which permitted them to send into this country certain agricultural commodities and as a result of those importations the price of our domestic commodity goes below the fair exchange value, then under the provisions of this bill the President of the United States could restrict the importation of those commodities, even in the face of a reciprocal-trade agreement. I think that is of vital importance.

Mr. DITTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DITTER. Do I understand the gentleman to feel that this particular provision of the act would enable the President to supersede any agreement entered into by the Secretary of State with a foreign country?

Mr. BOILEAU. Yes; the gentleman states my position perfectly, and, if he will permit, I will try to explain.

Mr. Chairman, I am advised that each and every one of the treaties that have thus far been negotiated contains a provision to the effect that the quotas may be changed if such change is made to effectuate any adjustment program. I call the gentleman's attention to the treaty with Sweden, one of the recent treaties entered into, and refer particularly to article VII. That article starts out with this language:

> No prohibitions, import quotas, imports licenses, or any other form of quantitative regulation, whether or not operated in connection with any agency of centralized control, shall be imposed by Sweden or by the United States.

In other words, it starts out by saying that these quotas cannot be changed; then it goes on to say:

> The foregoing provision shall not apply to quantitative restrictions in whatever form imposed by either country on the importation or sale of any article the growth, produce, or manufacture of the other country in conjunction with governmental measures operating to regulate or control the production, market, supply, or prices of like domestic articles.

In the press release of May 25 there is a more thorough explanation, and I commend that to the gentleman's consideration. I am informed by a representative of the State Department that each and every one of these treaties has carried such a provision.

Of course, it would require delay; it would require notice to be given to the other country and opportunity for hearing within 30 days. The other country, then, would have the right to disregard the treaty, or our country would have the right to provide quotas on the importation of these commodities. I believe that the provision in and of itself is of vital importance, and it should be of vital importance to the textile interests of this country. It should be of vital importance to all the producers of agricultural commodities, and the processors of agricultural commodities in this country. I believe this section is deserving of the support of all of the Membership of the House. I believe the provision will be of material help.

Mr. Chairman, in the 1 or 2 minutes I have remaining I want to refer briefly to the milk provisions. They have been discussed at some length by the chairman of the committee. I regret I have not more time, because I would like to discuss them in greater detail. I confess to the Membership of the House that this milk program is not all I should like it to be. However, I do not believe there is one thing in this bill, and I say "this bill" advisedly, that the dairy sections of the country should be the least bit worried about. My State is a large dairy State that is primarily interested in the production of cheese, and it also produces a good deal of butter and other milk products. I do not believe there is anything in this bill that is inimical to their best interests, but I believe the bill will materially assist them.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. DOXEY].

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say at the outset that I do not think there ever was a committee chairman who worked harder or more earnestly than the Chairman of our Agriculture Committee, MARVIN JONES, of Texas, with reference to this particular legislation. I am not ordinarily given to flattery, but I want to say for the entire membership of the Committee on Agriculture, both the majority and the minority, that our distinguished chairman had cooperation and that we have all endeavored to uphold his hands and work together.

The authorities of the Department of Agriculture charged with the administration of this act, have in every way cooperated and rendered most valuable assistance to our committee in shaping this particular legislation.

I think the results speak for themselves.

I also want to say that the ranking minority member of our committee, the gentleman from Kansas, my good friend CLIFFORD HOPE—and I do not mean to pick him out any more than anyone else—has at all times shown a wonderful spirit of cooperation with regard to the fundamentals of this bill. As members of the committee, we had different views about a question as broad as this, but we were willing to surrender here, accept over there, and by means of compromise this committee has brought to you this legislation, which, we feel, is the best piece of legislation that we could bring under the circumstances.

The Committee on Agriculture had done a great deal of work in fashioning, shaping, and reporting to the House the Agricultural Adjustment Act amendments known as "H. R. 8052." The program of the House was to consider this bill some time ago. However, in the meantime the Supreme Court of the United States handed down its famous decision in the Schechter case, declaring the present

N. R. A. unconstitutional, which necessarily changed the legislative program of the House of Representatives.

Thereupon agricultural leaders of both the Senate and the House conferred as to what would be the future program regarding this A. A. A. legislation. The entire agricultural program was generally discussed with the President, and immediately a select group of the House Committee on Agriculture, together with authorities of the Agriculture Department, having charge of the administration of the present agricultural program, began work on fashioning legislation to strengthen the present Agricultural Adjustment Act and to revamp the provisions of H. R. 8052 and the original act which might be affected by an adverse decision of the Supreme Court as was the N. R. A.

I attended those conferences and was one among those who helped draft the amendments that were later submitted to the entire membership of the Committee on Agriculture. The full committee, then in executive session, considered them in detail and spent much time and effort in bringing to the full Membership of this House this legislation that we are considering here today—H. R. 8492.

Time will not permit me to tell you the purposes of the legislation, and this is not necessary, but I do want to give you a brief outline and try to explain, if I can, just what this bill contains and also mention its salient points.

Of course, the first part of it deals with the declared policy. The second part defines and specifically sets out the powers of the Secretary of Agriculture. The third subdivision is the order feature where he exercises his powers over what? Over not the basic agricultural crops but the specialty crops therein named which are milk and its products, fruits including walnuts and pecans, vegetables including soybeans, but not vegetables or fruits for canning purposes; tobacco, and naval stores, but not the products of naval stores, as defined by the Naval Stores Act.

Then there is the levying of the processing tax. The bill strengthens that feature of the present Agricultural Adjustment Act and provides that none of the processing taxes that have been paid, which up to now amount to something over $800,000,000, that has gone into direct benefits paid to the farmer, can be recovered in a court of law by suits should this bill be declared unconstitutional. It freezes the processing taxes that we are now levying and it provides for the use of the processing taxes continuously for the payment of the benefits directly to the producer, and also not only sets up a program of domestic market expansion but provides for foreign-market expansion and it provides for better cooperation and for a more uniform and unified cooperation between the State and Federal authorities.

Now, in regard to the declared policy, this only means, briefly, that the purpose of this bill is to get for the producer the price that we call the parity price which means this: You have a current average farm price, and if the basis is from August 1909 to July 1914, with some exceptions, the purpose is to increase that price up to what is called the "fair-exchange value."

Now, the Secretary of Agriculture in using this yardstick, as is set out in the declared policy, in dealing with the basic agricultural commodities, which are wheat, cotton, tobacco, milk and its products, rice, corn, and hogs—and corn and hogs are considered as one product—deals with the producer. He uses for the benefit of the producers the reduction plan which in this legislation is called the "adjustment plan" and the benefits are paid as rental benefits and others, and in addition to this program there is what we have seen and heard a lot about, the "ever-normal granary plan", which is simply giving the Secretary of Agriculture the authority and the power in the fat years to store up something for the lean years.

This is the broad machinery with reference to the basic agricultural commodities, but when we come to deal with the specialty crops, in regard to which there are no licenses, because they have been abolished—the present Agricultural Adjustment Act provides for a license fee and license system but for many reasons, with which we are somewhat familiar in view of the recent decision of the Supreme Court, we have, you may say, done away with the licensing features and you might say the powers of the Secretary of Agriculture are spelled out, and these orders are not issued on these specialty crops unless 50 percent of the handlers by volume enters into a market agreement, and if this 50 percent enters into such a market agreement, of course, the Secretary of Agriculture, to determine whether or not your current average farm price meets the fair exchange value, investigates by giving everybody an opportunity to be present at a hearing; and if these handlers agree, under the marketing agreement, the orders and the provisions and stipulations are set out by the Secretary of Agriculture as to how the trade will be handled, with reference to the commodity affected by the marketing agreements.

I forgot to mention that apples are excepted, I may say to my friend from Virginia who has arisen.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I simply want the splendid remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi to show in the RECORD what I understand subsection (a), on page 14, means. This provision would seem to give the Government control over purely State transactions by using the words "which may be marketed in or transported to any or all markets during any specified period or periods by all handlers thereof", but this is simply permissive in these voluntary agreements, with no intention to use compulsion upon anyone.

Mr. DOXEY. And there is no intention to restrict this to anything except interstate commerce, and it is not intended to apply it to intrastate commerce, because that is one of the provisions we have adopted in order to provide for cooperation and to let the States set up their programs, but we all know that in the practical administration of the act the State program will be somewhat similar to the Government program.

Now, you may have a situation where the handlers would not want to make a marketing agreement and you would see unfair practices in the trade detrimental to the producer, and I am trying to show you the practical machinery we have provided and the judgment and the consideration we have given this bill in order to make it a farmers' bill.

Then we say if you, Mr. Handler or Processor, do not want to enter into a marketing agreement with reference to perishable crops—if two-thirds of the producers in a given area enter into a marketing agreement, they can protect the producer of a commodity against any unfair practice and secure for the producer a better price for his commodity.

There is a price-fixing feature of the bill, because we provide for a minimum price for the producer.

My friends, you cannot have a workable situation without that feature, regardless of what the opposition might be or the constitutional question involved. You cannot have effective administration without that, and also a provision for violation.

Now we come to that which has been discussed in your hearing by a number of distinguished speakers who have preceded me, and that is with reference to the foreign market.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Before the gentleman comes to that, will he yield?

Mr. DOXEY. I yield gladly to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The gentleman has mentioned the minimum cost to the producer. Is there any provision in the bill for a maximum cost to the consumer?

Mr. DOXEY. If the gentleman can show us how we can fix a maximum cost to the consumer, after the many people through whose hands the commodity passes, I am sure as one Member I would be grateful for his contribution. No; there is nothing in the bill which fixes a maximum cost to the consumer. That is to be left to competition and the law of supply and demand.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOXEY. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The cost to the consumer is regulated by the law of supply and demand. Why should not that apply to the producer?

Mr. DOXEY. The gentleman from Wisconsin does not have the same philosophy in relation to the bill that we have.

How could you in one piece of legislation do that where the interests are opposed and take care of both of them?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman accept an amendment fixing a maximum cost to the consumer?

Mr. DOXEY. Let the gentleman offer it and see.

Now, gentlemen, I say that the import feature in this bill is a new feature, for the reason that it gives the President the power, after proper investigation by the Tariff Commission, which finds that imports are coming into this country and destroying the home program of any commodity, to limit the quantity of importation. The power is there if the facts found by the Tariff Commission warrant such action, and also 30 percent of the gross customs receipts are appropriated for the purpose of extending our foreign trade in the commodities that are considered major.

There are several new and outstanding features in this bill beneficial to agriculture. None of us know how they will work, and nobody can tell how these laws will be administered until they are administered; and I say to you that we have had a sympathetic administration of the present laws relating to our agricultural program, and an efficient and faithful one, considering the many complex problems with which the administration has been faced, and when you try to increase your foreign markets with reference to wheat or cotton, if you have a world price below the domestic price it will encourage our people to find a world market and to sell it on the world market, and there will be a subsidy to pay and make the seller whole, you might say, for the difference between the domestic price and what you sell it for in the world market, just as the farmer is paid the benefit for reducing his production by limiting his acreage.

The general outline that I have briefly given here sets forth the high points of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, full well do I realize that especially since the decision of our United States Supreme Court in regard to the constitutionality of the N. R. A. many of you desire to speak on this measure. I shall not consume too much of your time, nor shall I attempt to comment at length upon that decision nor phophesy to what extent, in my judgment, it will affect the present A. A. A. or these proposed amendments to it. This will be given considerable attention when we begin to read the bill and offer amendments under the rule. However, I earnestly urge the friends of this measure not to be stampeded by the opposition to it and not to vote for amendments to this committee bill that will wreck it or impede our farm program. Let us keep it intact and pass it as nearly as possible just as it was written and reported by our committee to this House.

Regardless of the constitutional questions involved, we are faced with facts that cannot be controverted with reference to the efforts of this administration in behalf of agriculture. The benefits accruing to the farmer during the past 2 years as the result of the laws we have passed here are self-evident.

We know that in the winter of 1932 and in the spring of 1933 the farmer was receiving for his cotton 5 cents per pound; today he is receiving, and has received for this 1934 crop, at least 12 cents per pound. Under our program he will get at least that much for his 1935 crop.

The farm price then for wheat was 32 cents per bushel. Today it is 85 cents per bushel. Then corn was 19 cents per bushel. Today it is 85 cents. Hogs were then selling for about $2.75 per hundred. Today they are selling for around $9 per 100 pounds.

You can go down the list and call the roll and you will find in every instance that prices paid the producer for the crops he raises have increased in somewhat similar proportions as a result of the enactment of the original Agriculture Adjustment Act by Congress in 1933.

Who can conscientiously oppose, on grounds real or imaginary, legislation that really benefits the farmer?

Who begrudges the farmer the cash benefit checks that he has been receiving from his Government as a result of this legislation?

The increased purchasing power of the farmer during the last few years has benefited all. The farmer is just now getting on his feet, so to speak. He will now buy your manufactured goods and is buying them because he has a little money now to spend. The farmer will stimulate your business, if you do not grind him down by starvation prices for the things he has to sell. Give him a chance and he is your best customer. "Live and let live" is the purpose of this legislation.

You men who represent industry, banking, business, capital, and the manufacturing interests know this is true.

Those of you who have so vigorously opposed the processing tax and the benefits that are being paid out of this fund to the farmer also know this is the first piece of legislation ever enacted by any Congress that passed the benefits directly into the hands of the farmer.

Give forgotten agriculture a square deal. The tariff policies of this country have bled agriculture white. By this legislation we are just providing a bounty for agriculture that will to some degree offset the Republican tariff policies that for the last 100 years have protected you and your interests and almost destroyed us and our interests.

We have suffered long and patiently, but I firmly believe the farming interests of this country will come into their own under this Democratic administration if we will just stick together and work for what we know to be right, just, and proper—a well planned, organized, and balanced agricultural program. Cooperation has brought results.

Thus far under the courageous and sympathetic leadership of our great President we have passed more constructive legislation for the relief of agriculture in the last 2 years than was enacted by Congress during the preceding 50 years.

The Agricultural Adjustment Act was one of the first major pieces of legislation considered by the House Committee on Agriculture under the Roosevelt administration.

Time will not permit me to give you a graphic picture of conditions as they then existed in this country. Suffice it to say agriculture was prostrated, industry was paralyzed, business was stagnant, and the whole country was in the throes of one of the worst depressions this Nation has ever experienced.

Quick action was imperative. Results were necessary in order to avert an utter collapse.

Our committee had jurisdiction of the agricultural program and we immediately began to function and to map out the plans and program and devise the ways and means of helping distressed agriculture. We worked at this job night and day.

In March 1933 we reported and brought to the floor of this House for the consideration and vote of this Membership a bill known as the "Agricultural Adjustment Act." It was debated here, and on March 21, 1933, I made a speech on the floor of this House favoring its passage, and endeavored to explain its provisions. It passed this House on March 22, 1933. It passed the Senate on April 28, 1933. Conferees were appointed to adjust the differences between the Senate and the House. I was selected as one of the House conferees. After several days of hard work, the Senate and House conferees agreed on the provisions of the bill. The conference report was accepted by both the House and the Senate, and the bill was then signed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House. Then it went to President Roosevelt for his signature. The day he decided to sign it—May 12, 1933—I was among those invited to the White House to be present when he signed it. I was there, and never shall I forget that eventful day and what President Roosevelt said when he signed it. Among other things he said, "Wall, if it works at all it surely will work for the benefit of cotton." Our great President spoke at that time even more wisely than he knew, for the Agricultural Adjustment Act has been the salvation of the cotton South and the cotton farmer as well as agriculture in general.

It has worked and has worked wonders.

No right-thinking person can deny the benefits that the Agricultural Adjustment Act has brought to the farmers in general. Without this or some similar legislation, agriculture could not have survived. However, time and experience have proven that some amendments are necessary in order to make the agricultural-adjustment program more effective.

Our Committee on Agriculture has given this a great deal of thought and study and we have fashioned and submitted to you H. R. 8492, proposing certain amendments to the existing law that will permit a more flexible program by providing the use of different plans to be fitted to the particular commodity.

It can be readily seen that there is a vast difference between this proposed bill, H. R. 8492, and the original bill, H. R. 5585. The House Committee on Agriculture has rewritten this bill. We had long and extensive hearings and executive meetings and finally worked out what we believe to be the best bill possible under existing circumstances, H. R. 8492.

This bill is complicated, technical, and far-reaching. It contains 53 pages and 33 sections. Time will not permit an explanation of this bill section by section. Even a general analysis of this bill would require more time than any one Member has at his disposal during this debate.

I shall endeavor within the time allotted to me, not to discuss at any length the amendments to the various sections of the original Agricultural Adjustment Act, but to explain and discuss generally new and additional features and sections contained in this bill that are not a part of the original Agricultural Adjustment Act.

I am one of those of the Agriculture Committee who were determined, if possible, to bring before this House at this session of Congress legislation that would not only continue the processing tax and continue to pay the farmer—the producer—rental and other cash benefits but also some legislation that would give us a better world market for our exportable surplus of such commodities as cotton.

A portion of this bill is designed to create markets in foreign countries and not only to encourage and help our domestic markets but also to provide for an expansion of our foreign markets and payments of benefits toward this end.

We are well aware of the opposition to this bill. All kinds of propaganda have been circulated against it. Those of us who are friends of agriculture know that no benefits at all will be paid the farmer if the processing tax is done away with. That is collected from the processor of the raw material and paid to the producer of the commodity. This bill strengthens that feature of the original act.

In some instances in the administration of the act, it broadens the powers of the Secretary of Agriculture, and in other instances it limits and curtails the powers of the Secretary of Agriculture. It endeavors to make his powers more definite and specific.

This bill is designed to help the producer. It is a farmer's bill. Its purpose is to help obtain a better price to the producer for the agricultural commodities he raises. Also to establish and maintain such balance between the production and consumption of agricultural commodities, and such marketing conditions therefor, as will reestablish prices to farmers at a level that will give agricultural commodities a purchasing power with respect to articles that farmers buy, equivalent to the purchasing power of agricultural commodities in the base period, which is the pre-war period from August 1909 to July 1914.

The contract and sign-up policy between the Government and the farmer is entirely optional with the farmer. There is nothing compulsory in it regarding the producer. If the farmer desires to cooperate, all well and good. If he does not want to, he does not have to. It is entirely up to him.

In my humble judgment, the success of the present agricultural program is self-evident, especially with reference to our domestic situation. If we can keep what we have and continue our present program in regard to domestic markets and domestic policies, we will be doing mighty well. My great concern now is our foreign markets and foreign policies.

With that in view, those of us on the Agriculture Committee who represent districts and States that produce cotton and those commodities which necessarily must be sold to foreign countries, have incorporated in this bill certain provisions and sections that we believe if enacted into law will open up to the producers of exportable surplus commodities the markets of the world. At any rate it is a step in the right direction and sets up governmental machinery for that purpose.

Our Committee on Agriculture, of course, has no jurisdiction in regard to tariff. That is, within the exclusive jurisdiction of the House Committee on Ways and Means. However, the Agriculture Committee has worked out and fashioned legislation that, by indirect methods—employing the processing tax to be used as benefit payments to the producer—benefits the farmer just as in the past the levying of direct tariffs has been in the interest of the manufacturer.

Using all the powers that we are invested with as a committee in Congress, we have shaped our legislation in the interest of the farmer. We have met and are still meeting with all kinds of opposition from organized and protected interests, but I feel sure that the majority of the Membership of this House are willing to help us secure for the farmer as nearly as possible a fair share of the Nation's income and thereby restore economic recovery to all our people and all classes of industry.

The success of our present farm program, and the effective and sympathetic manner in which it has been administered, has thus far contributed greatly toward our onward march to the general economic recovery of this Nation.

My colleagues, the continuation, furtherance, expansion, and more effective administration of this farm program on behalf of the producer, relating to the production, handling, and marketing of agricultural commodities, is the purpose of of this proposed legislation.

The original Agricultural Adjustment Act provides for a "reduction" in the acreage or production of the commodity. This proposal provides for an "adjustment" of acreage and production.

Thus, under the provisions of the bill we are now considering, it is possible for the farmer to be paid benefits not only for reducing his acreage and cutting his production, but, if found necessary, from the proceeds of the processing tax, the farmer is also to be paid benefits, even though he increases his acreage and production, if we can more nearly balance our law of supply and demand by not only expanding our domestic markets but also our foreign markets.

In this bill we provide ways and means to increase our agricultural exports. It lends substantial encouragement and pays benefits for the removal of our agricultural surpluses of basic commodities by finding a market for them in foreign countries. The original Senate bill did not contain this feature with reference to helping our farmers by expanding our foreign trade.

I am aware of the opposition to this new feature of the bill, but I here and now say to you, my colleagues, if we pass this bill here in the House with this provision in it, I more than likely will be selected as one of the House conferees when it comes to ironing out these differences with the Senate conferees on this bill. In that event you may count on me to do all in my power as one House conferee to keep this expansion of our foreign market provision in the conference report and do all I can to have it enacted into the law.

Necessarily, my friends, I have talked to you in rather a general manner concerning the many provisions and broad purposes of this bill; but before I conclude permit me to specifically direct your attention to the provisions of a few new and specific sections of this bill in connection with the outline I have given you in this discussion.

On page 5, line 4, subsection (b) of the bill, and the language following is one of the new provisions of this bill that is not included in the original Agricultural Adjustment Act. This new paragraph specifically gives the Secretary of Agriculture the power to make payments for the expansion of domestic or foreign markets of a basic agricultural commodity, payments for the removal of surpluses of or surplus products of a basic agricultural commodity, or payments in connection with the production of that part of a basic agricultural commodity required for domestic consumption. Such payments may be made with respect to a commodity whether or not an adjustment program is in effect on that commodity, but the payments may be made in combination with rental or benefit payments. Any one or more of such payments may be made and the payments may be made in kind. This new paragraph also contains a provision which applies generally throughout the Agricultural Adjustment Act to payments in kind, the effect of which is to prohibit the payment for the program on one commodity from being made in another commodity. For instance, cotton may not be used to make rental or benefit payments or payments for expansion of markets, removal of surpluses, or domestic production payments in carrying out the wheat or tobacco program, but may be used in connection with the cotton program.

Page 51 of the bill, line 5, section 31, adds a new section to the Agricultural Adjustment Act. This portion of the new section authorizes an additional appropriation for each fiscal year of an amount equal to 30 percent of the gross customs receipts during the preceding year ending December 31.

Amounts which may be appropriated under this subsection are to be maintained in a separate fund. The fund may be used for three major purposes. The first is the encouragement of exportation of agricultural commodities and products thereof by the payment of benefits in connection with their exportation or indemnifying for losses incurred in connection with exportation and by payments to producers in connection with the production of that part of the production of any agricultural commodity required for domestic consumption. The second use is the purchase or lease, on behalf of the United States, of submarginal agricultural and grazing lands. The third use to which sums may be put is the making of payments (which for the purposes of the act are not considered rental or benefit payments and hence do not require the levy of a processing tax as a condition of their payment) in connection with acreage or production adjustment of basic agricultural commodities. The Secretary is to expend the amounts as he deems will best effectuate the policy of restoring agricultural purchasing power as contemplated by the Agricultural Adjustment Act consistently with the fullest utilization of the productive capacity of land which can be profitably cultivated and with the most rapid expansion of agricultural exports.

Page 40, line 4, section 19 of the bill adds a new subsection to the original Agricultural Adjustment Act and in substance provides that all taxes and incomes derived from a certain commodity, such as the processing tax on cotton that is to be paid by the processor who turns the raw material into the finished product, must be expended in carrying out the cotton program. In other words, every tub stands on its own bottom. You cannot take the proceeds of the cotton program and use it for the benefit of the wheat program and vice versa. Hogs and corn however are considered as a single commodity.

Section 30 of the proposed bill, including all the language on pages 50 and 51 down to section 31, adds a new section to the Agricultural Adjustment Act to be known as "section 22" which provides another entirely new feature to the existing law.

It authorizes certain limitations on imports in connection with the agricultural-adjustment program. Whenever the current average farm price of an agricultural commodity is less than parity, if the President has reason to believe that any article or articles are being imported or are likely to be imported under such conditions and in sufficient quantities to prevent the price from reaching parity and to render ineffective any operation or program under the act, he is to order an investigation to determine these facts. The Secretary of Agriculture, or the United States Tariff Commission, whichever the President designates, is to conduct the investigation. The investigation is to be made after such notice and hearing and subject to such regulations as the President specifies.

If the President finds the existence of the facts required, after the investigation and report to him, he is to direct that the article or articles causing such situation shall be imported subject to such terms and conditions, such limitations on quantity, or the payment of such compensating taxes as he finds necessary to prescribe so that the entry of the things specified will not prevent attainment of parity and will not render or tend to render ineffective the operation or program. If compensating taxes are levied, they are to become available for expenditure under the act, and they are not to be in substitution for the processing tax on imported articles imposed under the present law. The President's decision on facts is final, the Secretary of the Treasury is required to carry out the order of the President, and the President, after investigation and finding, may suspend, revoke, or modify an order issued under the section.

If this bill becomes a law, the importation into this country of foreign-grown cattle that is so vitally affecting the present price of our domestic cattle can, to some extent, be regulated. Also such commodities as foreign oils and fats that are coming into this country at an alarming rate and which are competing with our cottonseed oils, beef fats, and so forth, and necessarily affect the price of cottonseed, beef cattle, and so forth, can be adjusted by a Presidential order, after each case is thoroughly investigated and all the facts ascertained.

In my judgment, there is no chance for us at this session of Congress to pass any tariff laws. During the early part of this session I introduced a bill in regard to lowering and adjusting our present tariff, but no action has been taken by the Ways and Means Committee on my bill or on any other tariff bill at this session. My committee has no right to frame or deal with the tariff laws, but we have brought to you the nearest approach to it that we are permitted to within the limited jurisdiction that prevails under the rules of the House.

We think the provisions of this bill in that regard are sound and will prove of great benefit to the farmer if we can succeed in enacting them into law.

We earnestly ask your help with these added features to the Agricultural Adjustment Act that I have discussed, together with the amendments strengthening the present law.

I am convinced that no single piece of legislation enacted by any Congress will be of greater benefit to the American people than the Agricultural Adjustment Act and these amendments thereto.

On account of the wonderful and whole-hearted cooperation given this program by the farmers themselves, the able, efficient, and effective administration of this law in the past by those in authority, we have every reason to believe that in this complex and broad program, even greater benefits are in store for the farmer in the future. The weak places in the existing law will be strengthened and many of the rough places made smooth.

We all know when you help agriculture you help everybody. We can, and I feel sure you will, help by voting for this legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired. [Applause.]

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, the subject of farm legislation and the best methods to improve agriculture generally has been one of the most perplexing questions which has confronted the Congress of the United States. We are all happy to observe the fact that the hysteria and fear which paralyzed our entire agricultural industry from 1930 to 1933 has now abated and subsided. The farmers of America have had a new deal under our democratic form of government and a sympathetic and understanding Congress has passed legislation in their behalf, which has accomplished the desired results.

A great deal of this credit is due to the congenial and fair-minded chairman and the entire membership of the great Agriculture Committee of the House for their wisdom, foresight, and judgment, which they have contributed both in executive sessions of the committee and upon the floor of the House in the advancement of legislation in behalf of agriculture.

There is not a Member in the House who does not realize and believe that if the agricultural interests of our country are in a state of prosperity, that condition is reflected to a large extent throughout the entire Nation; and by the same token it can also logically be inferred that if agriculture is not successful, the disastrous and far-reaching ill effects of such a condition take heavy tolls upon the success and prosperity of the great masses of our people.

But the question which must necessarily be the concern of every Member of this body at the present time is, "Are we going too far?" "Are we proceeding with the wisdom and the foresight justifying the tremendous expenditures of huge sums of money which we have appropriated and are advancing and the regulatory measures we have imposed, and are endeavoring to make more stringent, upon the industrial and consuming public for the benefit and interest of agriculture?"

Notwithstanding the legislative program we have enacted, we are confronted today with the unfortunate situation of vast numbers of our people on the relief rolls of the Federal Government and upward of 11,000,000 of our able-bodied citizens unemployed and without lucrative occupation in this great land of opportunity.

I sometimes wonder: Are we saddling upon the business of the Nation too great a load and too heavy an obligation?

Are we neglecting a program for the revival and rehabilitation of industry, or are we making it too involved, too interwoven with governmental regulatory measures, for the successful operation of business, whether it be great or small?

Can we legislate in behalf of one industry without analyzing and understanding the ultimate effects upon kindred industries and upon the Nation as a whole?

Agriculture has been the recipient of much legislation in an earnest attempt and desire to revive its stability, and I speak advisedly, for as a member of the House Agriculture Committee I supported all measures pertaining to the benefit of this all-important industry.

I respectfully desire to call to the attention of the House some of the bills we have passed since 1933, in furtherance of the agricultural program, together with the amounts authorized therein.

Seventy-third Congress appropriations for agriculture

H. R. 3835: Agricultural Adjustment Act	$2,505,000,000
H. R. 5790: Farm Credit Act of 1933	120,000,000
H. R. 5755: National Industrial Recovery Act, for A. A. A.	100,000,000
H. R. 6670: Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation Act	2,000,000,000
S. 1975: Crop production and harvesting loans	40,000,000
H. R. 7478: To include cattle as basic agricultural commodity	250,000,000
H. R. 8402: To place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, etc	150,000,000
Total	5,265,000,000

The following is a list of bills introduced and favorably reported from the House Committee on Agriculture during the Seventy-fourth Congress, together with the amounts authorized to be expended.

Seventy-fourth Congress

S. 1384: To amend Emergency Farm Act of 1933; Federal Farm Loan Act; Agriculture Marketing Act, and Farm Credit Act of 1933	$2,500,000,000
H. R. 3247: Crop production and harvesting loans	60,000,000
H. R. 2066: Lemke farmers' farm relief bill	3,000,000,000
H. R. 6914: Fulmer forest land management bill	20,000,000
H. R. 7593: Jones agricultural bank note bill	800,000,000
Total	6,380,000,000

Now let us compare one industry which forms the source of half the Nation's wealth, and by a comparison, see if we have not been just a little oversolicitous in furthering the agricultural industry of the Nation, and have not directed enough of our attention to the revival of business and to the welfare of the industrial population of the United States.

I have here a letter which was mailed to me by Congressman JOE L. SMITH, Chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining, and in that connection he says:

The mineral industry forms the source of half the Nation's wealth, and has an invested capital of approximately $15,000,000,000, directly and indirectly furnishes the livelihood of some 25,000,000 people, employing in production and processing about 1,700,000 people, pays an annual wage of $2,000,000,000, pays approximately $200,000,000 annually in Federal taxes, and furnishes 55 percent of the total freight revenue on the railroads.

Now let us see what agriculture has paid in taxes. For the years 1924 to 1928 mineral producers paid almost six times as much as farmers in Federal taxes, totaling $800,064,024, compared to the agricultural tax of $151,251,405.

From the above it is perfectly obvious that the friends of agriculture have been most active and industrious and have accomplished great results for the agricultural interests of the country.

The hearings before the Agricultural Committee disclose the fact that the farm population of the United States is approximately thirty millions of people, or about 25 percent of the total population of the country. The testimony also shows, however, that the purchasing power of the entire farm population constitutes only 15 percent of the total. Seventy-five percent of the people gainfully employed are engaged in industry, trade, and transportation. The 11,000,000 people who are out of employment today represent twice as many as those profitably employed in agriculture, and it is my contention and my strong belief that the greatest relief that can come to the agricultural population of the United States is represented by recovery of industrial wages and earnings and the extensive and improved markets for agricultural products which would naturally follow as a result of business and industrial recovery.

We must not forget the fact that we look to business and industry to restore private employment and reduce and eliminate the necessity for public-relief and public-emergency work programs, and it is incumbent upon us to do what can be done to aid business and industry to accomplish the desired results. We should remove or alleviate burdens which have been unnecessarily imposed and which have hindered and delayed industrial recovery.

It therefore is self-evident, Members of the House, that agriculture has received most sympathetic and considerate treatment from a Democratic Congress, and I sincerely feel that before we pass the so-called "triple A amendments bill" we might with good grace pause and hesitate and give some consideration and some reflection on the effect of its passage upon the entire country.

If the passage of these amendments under consideration are for the best interests and welfare of the Nation as a whole, they should be adopted by this Congress. On the other hand, if it is the philosophy of this proposed legislation to restrain, handicap, regulate, and control the various industries affected thereby, and consequently further delay and retard the successful operation of business, they should be overwhelmingly rejected.

Mr. Chairman, many changes have taken place in the bill as now presented for our consideration from the one originally introduced. These changes, however, have occurred in the unimportant details of the proposed act, so it is doubtful to my mind whether we fully understand just what now is contained in this new bill—what powers would be conferred upon the Secretary of Agriculture and what are the implications of the legislation involved.

During the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture many of the grants of dictatorial and drastic power in the original proposal have been modified and temporized to some extent. However, the broad licensing power conferred upon the Secretary of Agriculture is still contained in the draft as presented with the exception that they have substituted the word "order" for "license", but the force and effect and the purpose sought to be accomplished are identically the same.

If this bill is adopted, it would enable some governmental clerk to formulate rules and regulations affecting cooperative creameries, fruit and vegetable associations, cheese factories, and other cooperatives, individuals, and concerns dealing in farm commodities, as enumerated in section 5 of the proposed bill, processed or otherwise.

In other words, we are going to permit some Government employee, no doubt unenlightened and unaware of the ramifications involved in the business management of great industries, to issue orders and decrees, regulating the control and operations of these business concerns, representing investments of hundreds of millions of dollars; affecting perhaps the employment of many thousands of our citizens engaged in industry; hamstring and impede the successful conduct of business by imposing regulations and measures unworkable in theory, impractical in operation, and keeping alive that uncertainty and fear which has stifled business and prevented the industrial workers from assuming their place in the commercial life of the Nation.

Now, Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, in order to picture to you how far-reaching the effect of these amendments will be, if adopted, and the drastic and dictatorial provisions therein contained, I respectfully refer to the testimony of Mr. Chester Davis, Administrator of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, before the House Agricultural Committee.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Davis, I want to ask you just one or two questions: Have you given thought or consideration to the number of processors that would come under the licensing features?

Mr. DAVIS. I have seen some statement that this would bring a million firms under that feature, but, Mr. BEAM, I want to point out that the same firms are subject to the licensing power under the existing act.

Mr. BEAM. I understand. But here is what I am trying to get at: I am talking about the wholesale processor, and I think conservatively there are 100,000.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes.

Mr. BEAM. And in addition to the wholesale-distributor another sixty or sixty-five thousand would be a conservative estimate?

Mr. DAVIS. I am sure that I would not say. I would say that the license feature would only be applied to a limited number of handlers, in a few commodities, where marketing or licensing plans are developed.

Mr. BEAM. I see.

Mr. DAVIS. I imagine that there would be comparatively a few thousand who would be actually brought under the licensing plan.

Mr. BEAM. But it is within the power of the Secretary to impose that on the retailer, is it not?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes; he could do that.

Mr. BEAM. Yes. So that in the aggregate a million licenses would be subject to the provisions of this act?

Mr. DAVIS. I would say that he could do that under the present act.

That is what I want to impress upon you Members of the House this afternoon. If he has that power in the present act, then why hamstring business and put upon the consuming public of America all this additional burden and expense to do something which the testimony discloses, without contradiction, he already has the authority to do under the present law?

Mr. HOPE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEAM. Will the gentleman wait until I finish, please.

Mr. KLEBERG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEAM. Not at this time. I decline to yield further, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Davis, is it not true also that under the power delegated to the Secretary of Agriculture that he can fix the amount, quantity, a processor may sell?

Mr. DAVIS. If that were one of the conditions set forth in the marketing agreement and the marketing agreement had passed through the steps indicated in the proposed amendment and was finally approved by the President that might become one of the terms of the agreement.

Mr. BEAM. Is it not also true that he may prescribe the manner in which the processor enters into agreements with producers?

Mr. DAVIS. No; I would not say that would be correct; that would be carrying it a great deal beyond anything that is in the marketing plan, and all of this is tied up to make the marketing plan effective.

Mr. BEAM. But nevertheless he still has that power, does he not, under this amendment? The power is given to the Secretary, and he could exercise that prerogative of control?

Mr. DAVIS. I will say, Mr. BEAM, you might say that under the existing act and our interpretation, the Secretary of Agriculture could, with reference to marketing agreements—at least impose conditions in a license which would affect a man's business in the way you indicate; that is, under the existing law.

I want to say to you, here is the testimony of the Administrator of the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

If the conditions disclosed and described by him are under the law as it now exists, why insist on these amendments which it has taken the Committee on Agriculture since last February to bring forth on this floor for discussion here today?

Mr. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEAM. Yes; I yield.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Does the gentleman think that the bill before us limits the authority of the Secretary with reference to the present act?

Mr BEAM. It does in some respects, which I will point out as I proceed.

Mr. KLEBERG. Will the gentleman tell us whether the hearings from which the gentleman read were on consideration of the bill which the House now has before it, or were the hearings on the bill H. R. 5585, which were the original disputed set of amendments which gave all this unconstitutional power, which the gentleman knows the committee has corrected in the bill which the House is now considering?

Mr. BEAM. This bill has been amended so many times, as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. DOXEY] stated, in an attempt to meet the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Schechter case, recently decided.

Mr. KLEBERG. Will the gentleman admit this is the hearing on the bill H. R. 5585?

Mr. BEAM. I will admit that is on the same bill. The provisions are identical in terms except the phraseology has somewhat been changed and additional provisions provided.

No person can listen to that testimony and not view with alarm the granting of such tremendous power, of regulation and control over the important industries of the Nation, as the facts therein disclose.

If, according to the testimony of the Administrator, the power to license and regulate is already implicit in the original act, why the necessity for the passage of the present bill? Why not continue as we are under the original Agricultural Adjustment Act and give business and industry an opportunity to proceed without the phantom of governmental bureaucratic regulation and control constantly arising and creating hesitation, doubt, and uncertainty in the path of normal recovery and progress?

But no, they desire more power and more control and more regulation of industry, which is the primary and fundamental purpose of H. R. 8492.

For example, under section 8 (c) the Secretary of Agriculture, after notice and a hearing, would have the right to impose license orders, rules, and regulations on processors, distributors, and wholesale handlers of such important agricultural commodities and products thereof as milk, fresh fruits, fresh vegetables, tobacco, and naval stores as defined in the Naval Stores Act, whenever in his judgment the issuance of such decree will tend to effectuate the policy of the act with respect to any commodity or product thereof, just above mentioned.

Processors and handlers of such commodities, including farmers, who also are handlers, could be compelled, if the Secretary of Agriculture so decreed, to conduct their business under a license "order" issued by him and according to rules and regulations promulgated by his Department.

The bill also contains a provision that no license "order" shall be applied to producers or retailers in their capacity as such, yet the minute the producer attempts to sell commercially his farm products, he immediately becomes subject to the regulations imposed by the Secretary.

Every retailer of milk and its products, throughout the country, will be compelled, under the bill as presented, to sell his commodities under rules and regulations issued and imposed by the Department of Agriculture.

Although the Secretary has been stripped of some of his potential powers sought by the bill as originally introduced, due to changes which have been made by our committee, nevertheless, it is an uncontroverted fact that the powers which would be conferred on him by the passage of H. R. 8492 are still such that we would have a substantial step in the direction of a controlled agriculture, a situation which is fundamentally unsound and contrary to our American form of government.

Why does the Agricultural Adjustment Administration want the tremendous powers that H. R. 8492 would give?

Why was its request for powers so general that if the bill had gone through as it was originally conceived the breadth of the Secretary's power would have been almost unlimited?

The Agricultural Adjustment Administration says it needs the amendments "to clarify" the act, to give the benefits of the adjustment program to a certain small group of agricultural products. If this is true, why does the Agricultural Adjustment Administration ask for blanket powers which would enable them to practically control American agriculture in its entirety, make the producers, the processors, the distributors, and consumers subservient and dependent upon regulations and decrees issued by the Department of Agriculture?

We have had 2 years of governmental control over agriculture. To a large extent the cooperation given by the farmers of this country to the program has been voluntary; but if this bill which we are now considering should become law, the power would be placed in the hands of a Secretary of Agriculture to compel and force a minority of producers or processors to comply with the Government's plan.

It cannot be denied but that considerable pressure has been brought to bear on some farmers of the country to insure their cooperation in the Government's plan.

The immense extent of the propaganda activities of the twin publicity bureaus of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration and the United States Department of Agriculture has had a deciding influence on a great many of the farmers of the United States.

It may be true that representatives of the Government have told farmers that if this measure does not pass the farmer's corn-hog checks, his cotton checks, and his wheat checks may stop. They say, in other words, that the existence of the Agricultural Adjustment Act is threatened unless the amendments are adopted.

Mr. HOPE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEAM. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. The gentleman is making an excellent speech against the original bill, H. R. 5585. I was wondering whether the gentleman was under the impression that that is the bill which the House is now considering?

Mr. BEAM. I have the bill in mind. I am glad to receive the gentleman's suggestion and his enlightening information, which I appreciate.

Surely we all know that this is not the fact and the defeat of this proposed legislation will in no way threaten the adjustment checks farmers have been receiving, or the other phases of the Government's agricultural program, but is simply a snare and a delusion to bring additional pressure and strength to the support of the proposed legislation, and decree to an administrative officer power unheard of in the history of the Republic, the delegation of which is fundamentally wrong and contrary to the best interests of our Nation.

But let us look a little more closely into the opponents of this legislation. The Secretary of Agriculture in a radio address delivered a few weeks ago, pointed out to the farmers of this country that they should support this legislation. He said the middlemen were opposed to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BEAM] has again expired.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

I should like to say a word or two about those "middlemen."

The products of a man's farm or ranch would be worth very little if there were not, as the Secretary says, an "army" of middlemen to bring these products to the consumers.

Under our present civilization, residents of the city of New York are not in a position to buy direct from the farmer in Iowa, or the fruit grower in Florida or California, but they demand that the products be delivered to them where they reside and where they are to be consumed. I fail to see that it is a reflection on the middleman or a reflection on the present system of economics that the processing and distribution of agricultural products is a major business in this country.

The fact that in some instances the cost of distribution is a major element in determining the value of the raw material to the farmer, is not in any sense a condemnation of the system of today. Any farmer who desires to sell his product direct to the consumer and receive 100 percent of the consumers' dollar, has still that prerogative and that right; but in most instances it is more desirable and more economical for him to let the industries that are equipped to perform that job, take his products from his farm, convert them into products as desired, and transport these commodities to the places where they will sell and thereby dispose of them.

We could not do without the processors and distributors and they perform an efficient, economical function for the most part, in the industrial life of our Nation.

It is true that the processors and distributors have been almost unanimous in their opposition to these amendments, because with the powers conferred on the Secretary of Agriculture by this proposed bill, the Secretary would have almost iron-clad dictatorial control over their business and all would be practically dependent upon orders and regulations emanating from the Department of Agriculture, as to the operation of their respective industries.

The Secretary has given no evidence that his proposed amendments will do anything to help the handlers of agricultural products, nor has he given any concrete evidence that this measure will give any specific permanent benefit to the farmers of the Nation.

I ask you, Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, why the handlers and distributors of agricultural products should not oppose this type of legislation?

They oppose it for the same reason that I appear in opposition to it—for the same reason that many other gentlemen in this Chamber oppose it—because it threatens the existence of independent business; it is class legislation for a particular group of our citizens, and is not in the interest of the great masses of our consuming public.

It simply further retards industrial recovery and puts a highly important branch of American commerce under a system of political control, which would be contrary to our American principles and American ideals.

Mr. RYAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEAM. I yield.

Mr. RYAN. The gentleman realizes that farm prices have not yet reached parity, as defined under the act, does he not?

Mr. BEAM. That is the situation which they are trying to put up here, but I am trying to show that when they are attempting to place unnecessary burdens on the consuming public, it cannot be done. It cannot work out, in justice.

Much has been said by the proponents of this legislation to the effect that the amendments are needed to help accomplish the purposes of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. It seems to me, and I say this with all respect to those who hold an opposite viewpoint, that the purposes of the act have been pretty well achieved and that the granting of additional powers to the Secretary of Agriculture, especially when they are so broad in scope, is no longer necessary.

I respectfully call the attention of the House to the booklet issued monthly by the Department of Agriculture entitled "The Agricultural Situation", and refer to page 21 of the May issue, which I feel sets forth in no unmistakable terms the fact that agriculture today is in a fairly healthy state.

These figures show that in March of 1933 the index number of farm prices was 55. The index numbers are based on the average from August 1909 to July 1914. It is commonly believed that during such period prices of the commodities the farmers sold were in a very favorable position, as compared with the prices of the commodities which the farmers had to buy.

As I have stated, in March 1933 the index number of farm prices stood at 55. By May 1935 farm prices had doubled and the index stood at 111.

The prices paid by the farmers for the commodities bought also stood at a relatively low point in March 1933. The index, which is based on the years 1910–14 as equaling 100, then stood at that same figure. In March 1935 the index was only 128. In other words, while farm prices had doubled, the prices paid by the farmers for the commodities bought had gone up only about 28 percent.

In March 1933 the index of employment stood at 58.8. In March 1935 it was 82.4, a gain of approximately 40 percent. During the same period the index number of pay rolls in manufacturing industries gained approximately 90 percent, which was less than the gain in farm prices. (Figures from Bureau of Labor Statistics, U. S. Department of Labor.)

It seems to me, therefore, Members of the House, that the advance which has occurred in farm prices since the passage of the Agricultural Adjustment Act indicates clearly that no strengthening of the act is needed.

While the act cannot be credited entirely as the cause of higher farm prices, the comparison of the increase in farm prices with the increase in employment and pay rolls leads one to the obvious conclusion that a further increase in returns to agriculture, without a corresponding increase in returns to industry, will work a real hardship on the vast majority of our people. Certainly I believe that the laments of so many people of their inability to buy food at present prices indicates that no strengthening of the Agricultural Adjustment Act is vitally needed at the present time.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, I respectfully submit that it should not be the purpose of Congress to adopt legislation which clearly contravenes the principles stated in the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Schechter poultry case, rendered on May 27, 1935. I earnestly submit that the provisions of this bill, which are similar to those in the National Industrial Recovery Act condemned in the Schechter case, should be given careful consideration by this body before they are adopted into law.

One of the principal grounds upon which the codes in the Schechter case were found unconstitutional was that the National Industrial Recovery Act before the Court in that case involved an attempt by the Federal Government to exercise a control over intrastate commerce.

The policy of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as declared in section 2 thereof, is " to reestablish prices to farmers at a level that will give agricultural commodities a purchasing power with respect to articles that farmers buy equivalent to the purchasing power of agricultural commodities in the base period." Briefly the purpose of the act is to adjust farm prices.

The whole tenor of H. R. 8492 is to carry out this policy of adjusting farm prices. Under section 2, page 2, of H. R. 8492, based upon his judgment relating to farm prices and to production, marketing, and consumption of such commodities, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to enter into voluntary agreements with producers for adjustment of acreage or of production for market and for rental or benefit payments to producers in connection with such agreements.

While under subsection 13 (b) of section 5, page 21, line 20, " orders " provided for in section 5 are not applicable to any producer in his capacity as a producer, and, therefore, it would seem that producers are not subject to the regulation and control which is authorized under this section. Nevertheless, under this same section, page 9, line 16, and so forth, processors, associations of producers, and others engaged in the handling of agricultural commodities specified in subsection 2 of section 5 are subject to " orders ", and those regulations may contain provisions for classification, grading, size, or quality of the commodity.

They may fix minimum prices which the producer shall pay and they may contain other provisions which may be incidental to effectuate the other provisions of the decree. The Department rules may also limit the total quantity of commodities or products specified in subsection 2 of section 5 produced during any specified period which may be marketed, and the orders issued may allot amounts of such commodities or products which any handler may purchase of producer during a specified period. Thus, production, although not directly regulated and controlled, is more effectively, more conveniently, and more practically regulated and controlled through the purchasers of the producers' commodities than if production had been directly regulated.

Production is not commerce and does not fall within the power delegated to Congress to regulate interstate and foreign commerce. Congress has no power to control or regulate production.

The orders likewise apply to processors, associations of producers, and others engaged in the handling of any agricultural commodities or products thereof specified in subsection 2 of section 5. Processing is the same as manufacturing and, like production, is not commerce. It precedes commerce as production precedes manufacturing and, like production, control or regulation of processing or manufacturing is not delegated to Congress under the power to regulate interstate and foreign commerce.

The United States Supreme Court, in Kidd v. Pearson (128 U. S. 1, 20), stated this principle as applying to manufacturing in very clear and emphatic terms:

> No distinction is more popular to the common mind, or more clearly expressed in economic and political literature, than that between manufactures and commerce. Manufacture is transformation—the fashioning of raw materials into a change of form for use. The functions of commerce are different. The buying and selling and the transportation incidental thereto constitute commerce; and the regulation of commerce in the constitutional sense embraces the regulation at least of such transportation. The legal definition of the term as given by this Court in County of Mobile v. Kimball (102 U. S. 619, 702; 26, 238, 241) is as follows: " Commerce with foreign nations and among the States, strictly considered, consists in intercourse and traffic, including in these terms navigation and the transportation and transit of persons and property, as well as the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities." If it be held that the term includes the regulation of all such manufactures as are intended to be the subject of commercial transactions in the future, it is impossible to deny that it would also include all productive industries that contemplate the same thing. The result would be that Congress would be vested, to the exclusion of the States, with the power to regulate not only manufacture, but also agriculture, horticulture, stock raising, domestic fisheries, mining—in short, every branch of human industry. For is there one of them that does not contemplate more or less clearly an interstate or foreign market? Does not the wheat grower of the Northwest and the cotton planter of the South plant, cultivate, and harvest his crop with an eye on the prices at Liverpool, New York, and Chicago? The power being vested in Congress and denied to the States, it would follow as an inevitable result that the duty would devolve on Congress to regulate all of these delicate, multiform, and vital interests—interests which in their nature are and must be local in all the details of their successful management.

This case was cited with approval by the Supreme Court in the Schechter case.

The policy of the act and the policy of the amendments are to control and regulate production and processing, and the provisions of the bill, as I have pointed out, clearly aim to accomplish that purpose, and so far as the amendments attempt to control and regulate production and processing, they are unconstitutional.

The price-fixing provisions of section 5 of H. R. 8492, to which I have referred, and the provisions also of section 5 imposing agreements upon minorities—subsection 8 of section 5—and imposing agreements upon majorities under subsection 9 of section 5 are likewise unconstitutional in that they are a deprivation of property of private citizens without their consent and without compensation.

We are just now emerging from a period of enforced governmental regulation and control as evidenced by the prohibition experiment, and we are all familiar with the lamentable and disastrous effects therein contained. Let us profit by our experience from that embarkation of enforced governmental regulation.

The people of the United States will voluntarily cooperate in any enterprise for the welfare of their country, but any attempt on behalf of a governmental bureau to enforce and compel that which they cannot voluntarily obtain surely is repugnant and contrary to all the traditions upon which our country was founded and upon which it has grown great and prosperous.

I, for one, will not vote to sacrifice and destroy on the altar of temporary expediency the initiative, the courage, and the individualism of our people, which has been their proud boast and acclaim and their noblest heritage since the foundation of the Union. [Applause.]

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEAM. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The gentleman from Illinois is a very distinguished and successful lawyer of the city of Chicago, and, from the dissertation he has just delivered to the House, I take it the gentleman has made a very careful study of the constitutionality of the bill now before us. May I ask the gentleman whether any other outstanding lawyers of the country corroborate the gentleman's view as to the constitutionality of the pending measure?

Mr. BEAM. I can submit to the gentleman in private many other opinions of outstanding and distinguished lawyers substantiating my position. One of the principal grounds in declaring the Schechter case unconstitutional was an attempt by the Federal authorities to exercise a control over intrastate commerce.

They are attempting in this proposed legislation by regulating production to do that which the Supreme Court says cannot be accomplished by direct legislation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN].

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, the triple A legislation has caused a good deal of controversy during the past 4 or 5 months, and considerable misinformation and misunderstanding has been had in regard to this legislation. From both sides a good deal of propaganda has been sent throughout the country, and I know that most of the Members have received letters and telegrams to support or oppose the triple A amendments, but the people sending the telegrams could not know what the amendments were about, as most of the Members did not know from day to day just what form the triple A amendments would take. In the first place the Secretary of Agriculture and the Administrator of the Agricultural Adjustment Act said that they already had sufficient authority in the law but thought it would be necessary to pass some additional legislation to clarify the present law. So a bill was introduced by the chairman of our committee which apparently represented the ideas of the Department of Agriculture, which bill was numbered H. R. 5585, and consisted of nine pages. Hearings were held on this bill. The bill, no doubt, clarified the present law, but it also gave the Secretary blanket authority to do almost anything he wanted to regiment agriculture and industry relating to agriculture. The committee did not consider that bill very long, but finally brought in another draft of triple A amendments, known as "H. R. 7088", on March 28 of this year. The bill H. R. 7088 contained 20 pages and attempted to circumscribe and limit the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture—and it did—but there was still considerable opposition in the committee to this bill. So, on April 24, H. R. 7713 was brought out from the committee, which made certain other changes in the triple A amendments. This bill materially changed the former bills and was considered by the committee. There was still objection to the triple A legislation, and on May 14 of this year H. R. 8052, consisting of 23 pages, further circumscribing and limiting the authority of the Secretary and modifying existing law, was presented to Congress with a report. Then the Supreme Court rendered the N. R. A. decision in the Schechter case, and all of the work done by the Committee on Agriculture went by the board. Without holding hearings, but having very deliberate executive sessions, the committee finally reported out the bill H. R. 8492, consisting of 53 pages, which is now before us, and which definitely limits and circumscribes the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture.

I opposed the other bills, not in full, but there were many instances where I felt that the authority sought to be conferred upon the Secretary went altogether too far.

I am supporting H. R. 8492 because most of the objections I had to the former legislation have been removed.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. It is the gentleman's opinion, I gather, that the Agriculture Adjustment Act will, if this amendment is adopted, give to the Secretary of Agriculture less power than he now has.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Decidedly so. It limits the power that he can exercise not only under the amendments but also under existing law, because the existing law is here rewritten in a great many instances, limiting his power.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. In just what respect is the power of the Secretary limited with regard to the licensing features of the bill?

Mr. ANDRESEN. The licensing features, or the order features, are limited to certain definite commodities—milk and its products, tobacco, fruits and vegetables, turpentine, rosin, and soybeans. These are the commodities covered.

Mr. MOTT. I understand that; but as to the commodities included, how is the authority limited?

Mr. ANDRESEN. The bill prescribes just the extent of the authority; just how far the Secretary can go and what he may not do. He can go no further in issuing orders or licenses regulating the handlers of the agricultural commodities mentioned in the order section.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. CHURCH. Does the gentleman think this bill constitutional when he considers the Supreme Court's decision in the Schechter case?

Mr. ANDRESEN. There is some doubt as to its constitutionality. We discussed the constitutional features in the committee, as well as some of the other features of the bill.

Mr. CHURCH. What does the gentleman think?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I am in doubt, to be honest about it; and while I might feel that certain provisions of the bill, such as power on the part of the Secretary to delegate his authority to agencies that he might set up, and the powers conferred on certain groups through referenda to say what another group must do, are unconstitutional, yet we have had no direct decision on these propositions and it seemed advisable to me and to a majority of the members of the committee that the question which is now in the courts could well go through so that we would have one determination with reference to that authority on the subject of agricultural legislation.

Mr. CHURCH. Does not the gentleman think we would do more good for agriculture if we enacted amendments that were definitely constitutional instead of questionably constitutional?

Mr. ANDRESEN. We had several constitutional lawyers sitting with us for 10 days in our committee meetings. These gentlemen were from the Department. They proceeded to reply to the inquiries of the various members of the committee on the question of the constitutionality.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. When the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MARSHALL] was speaking, I asked him if 51 percent of a group signed a processing agreement what becomes of the other 49 percent of the farmers who did not wish to sign that agreement.

Mr. ANDRESEN. There is no such provision in the bill, as a matter of fact. In the first place, orders may be issued by the Secretary if 50 percent of the processors or handlers of a given commodity agree to go into a marketing agreement. If they refuse to go into a voluntary marketing agreement, then the Secretary, with the approval of the President, and with the approval of two-thirds of the producers of that particular area and of that particular commodity, may go ahead and impose a license upon the handlers of milk or its products, fresh fruits and vegetables, tobacco, soybeans, and naval stores.

Mr. DONDERO. The point I make is whether or not the minority in that kind of a case would have any voice of protest in order to get them from under the agreement in which they did not care to join.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Personally I think they would have the best kind of a day in court if they came before the court and presented their side of the question.

Mr. ARNOLD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ARNOLD. The word "license", I understand, has been eliminated, and the word "order" substituted in its place.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. Can the gentleman tell us the legal difference between licenses and orders as used in the present law and in this bill?

Mr. ANDRESEN. The word "order", as I understand it, was used principally to comply with the definition of "orders" as used by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, and the Tariff Commission. They issue orders instead of licenses. Really there is no difference between the two.

Mr. ARNOLD. Does that affect the constitutionality of the bill?

Mr. ANDRESEN. No; except that a license is something that may be revoked. We had a license provision which was not revocable, and if a person violated the license he was subjected to a penalty of $50 to $500 for each offense. So there is no difference really between order and license.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. It is not a license under the present law, because a license necessarily is revocable. These orders appear to carry a penalty, so they are properly designated as "orders", whereas under the law that is in effect at the present time the proposed licenses are revocable. Under the amendments in the bill H. R. 8052, we still called them "licenses", whereas they should have been called "orders."

Mr. ANDRESEN. That is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. Is not an order revocable, too?

Mr. ANDRESEN. No. The order will be in the form of a general proclamation taking in an entire group. It is not revocable, but the man who violates it is subject to a penalty of from $50 to $500 for each offense.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FOCHT. Was it not the purpose of the Supreme Court to eliminate all the compulsory features, and the way the matter now stands it is simply one of willingness to go ahead?

Mr. ANDRESEN. That is probably true in the Supreme Court decision on the N. R. A.

Mr. FOCHT. Is that not a fair understanding of the whole situation and this whole thing is meaningless if that is so?

Mr. ANDRESEN. No; because we have many good provisions in this bill outside of the order section, which all of the Members of the Committee are heartily in favor of.

Mr. FOCHT. That compulsory feature was very compulsory. That is removed from this bill?

Mr. ANDRESEN. Partly so; yes.

Mr. MILLARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MILLARD. Did I understand the gentleman to say that he had an opinion from the Attorney General or from someone in the Attorney General's office that this bill is constitutional?

Mr. ANDRESEN. No; there is no question from the Attorney General.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. Does the gentleman think that the license provisions of this bill are among the good provisions or among the more or less objectionable features?

Mr. ANDRESEN. The order provisions that I regard as good, if they are constitutional, are the provisions that give the farmers a fair minimum price for the products they produce and which come under the provisions of the orders. A good many farmers, as has been previously explained here, have been subjected to very severe competition and many unfair practices. If there is anything we can do to give a fair return to the farmers, I know the gentleman is for that, and I am for it on the same supposition.

Mr. MOTT. Yes; I am for that proposition. Does the gentleman believe this order provision or licensing provision will in fact do that?

Mr. ANDRESEN. If it is constitutional, it will.

Mr. HALLECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. Does the present Agricultural Adjustment Act provide for a license to be issued by the Secretary of Agriculture to certain persons as it is now constituted?

Mr. ANDRESEN. He has the general power now to impose a license under the act.

Mr. HALLECK. Do I understand that under the proposed amendment the issuance of orders will be limited solely to interstate commerce?

Mr. ANDRESEN. Absolutely. It does not affect intrastate commerce. If the gentleman is asked when he gets back home by his grocery merchant who sells milk, butter, and cheese, whether or not the merchant has to take out a license, he may tell him "no"; he does not have to take out a license and does not become subject to the Federal license issued by the Secretary of Agriculture. The same thing would apply to the small milk dealer or a farmer who has a small herd of cattle and sells the milk to the people in the cities and villages in the district. He will not be subject to a license, because the license provisions, or order provisions, deal only with commodities that move in interstate commerce.

Mr. HALLECK. May I ask the gentleman one further question? Take the case of a milk dealer in the city of Chicago who purchases milk from producers in the State of Illinois. Is it the sentiment of the committee that that man would be subject to the orders as provided for in these amendments?

Mr. ANDRESEN. If a marketing area were set up in Cook County or in Chicago, then the order provisions would affect all handlers within that marketing area. There, again, we come to the question of the constitutionality of this provision, or whether or not the milk that is sold by a farmer in Illinois to the handler within a marketing area in Chicago is in interstate commerce or not.

Mr. HALLECK. Was it not the sentiment of the committee that that would be a purely intrastate transaction in the light of the Schechter decision, which would take the transaction without the realm of Federal regulation?

Mr. ANDRESEN. If there were no marketing area set up, of course, it would be purely an intrastate transaction, but if the Federal Government goes in and sets up a marketing area and issues orders for the handlers in that area, of course, it would be a legal question as to whether or not the man who dealt in Illinois would come within the provision.

Mr. HALLECK. Assuming that the milk dealer in Chicago who bought his milk from producers in the State of Illinois would not be subject to the orders, on the theory that he was engaged in a transaction which was wholly intrastate, and then assume the case of another milk dealer in the city of Chicago who was buying his milk in my State of Indiana, he would, of course, be subject to these orders, and what would be the effect as between the two, if the dealer buying his milk from producers in Indiana had to pay a stipulated price, which was fixed in the order, while the other dealer buying his milk in the State of Illinois would buy it at a lesser price?

Mr. ANDRESEN. If there were no State law regulating the price of milk, similar to ones they have in the State of

New York and in some other States—I do not know whether there is one in Illinois or not—then, of course, it would become a constitutional or legal question to determine whether or not the dealer living in Chicago or in Illinois would have to pay the same price to his Illinois farmer as he did to the farmer living over in Indiana, and I think this is a question that will have to be determined by the court.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. If, under this law, the Secretary of Agriculture should make an order declaring or establishing an area which was entirely within one State, it is not the purpose of this bill to bring that area within the provisions of this Federal law, if so, under what possible theory could this be done?

Mr. ANDRESEN. It all depends on the commodity that is dealt with.

Mr. MOTT. Any commodity, milk, for instance.

Mr. ANDRESEN. We will take, for instance, butter, and if they were to make a marketing area for butter within your State——

Mr. MOTT. Entirely within my State; yes.

Mr. ANDRESEN. There is one thing that concerned me—and I will be very frank about it, because I think we should have an understanding about this proposition—as to the power of the Secretary to set up production areas and marketing areas. This applied to the other bill and is one reason why I opposed the other bill. This bill as our chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES], has already stated, does not give the Secretary the power to set up any marketing areas or trade barriers to stop free flow in commerce of any commodity covered by the marketing agreement or order section. My fear was that dairy products produced in the Middle West would not be permitted to be sold in the large consuming areas of the East. This feature has been definitely eliminated from the bill so that in the consuming centers the handlers of milk, butter, and other commodities covered by the bill and living in those centers, will have to pay the same price to the farmers out in the Middle West for the same commodities, as they do the farmers in their own States, with the exception of the freight rate or the transportation differential. The farmers out in our section will have to meet the grade and the sanitary requirements of the State of New York or the other States, but there is nothing in the bill that stops free flow in commerce of any commodity within the United States. Does that answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. MOTT. No; it does not. My question is this. If I am a milk handler in Chicago and you produce your milk some place in the State of Illinois, as the situation has been stated here, and our transactions in milk as producer and dealer are entirely within the State of Illinois, do we come under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. ANDRESEN. If there is no marketing area or marketing territory set up, you do not. If there is and the law is constitutional, you do. Now, that is a question for the courts.

I want now to proceed with one or two other things in the bill before I conclude. There are some very good features in this bill which we are for, because they embody the principles of the old McNary-Haugen bill and the export debenture idea.

This country should get back to normal production and get back to a reestablishment of our foreign markets. We should try to maintain in this country our American markets for the producers of this country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. ANDRESEN. We must try to preserve this market for the products of this country. This is one reason I am particularly interested in the section with regard to the power given the President to increase the duties upon all the commodities covered by this bill.

I have a table here made up from figures submitted by the Department of Commerce showing that the total value of merchandise imported for consumption into this country during the past 10 months was $1,467,000,000. This is the total value of merchandise imported for consumption. Of this amount $990,000,000 represented agricultural commodities.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. ARNOLD. Would the gentleman show in his remarks what agricultural commodities are coming in to make up that vast amount?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I am going to put the table in the RECORD.

Mr. ARNOLD. I shall be very pleased to see it.

Mr. ANDRESEN. I am not going to put in the entire table, but I want to point out some of the commodities we are particularly interested in throughout the Middle West.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I cannot yield until I have finished this statement.

During the last 6 months of 1934, 9,292 head of cattle came into this country, principally from Mexico and Canada. During the first 4 months of this year 144,919 came in.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Were they for breeding purposes or for consumption?

Mr. ANDRESEN. For consumption. I do not think that duty is paid on cattle coming in for breeding purposes. Meat products: 38,876,217 pounds of meat products came in during the last 6 months of 1934 and 38,040,917 pounds came in during the first 4 months of 1935, making a total of 76,917,134 pounds in 10 months. During the last 6 months of 1934, 822,000 pounds of butter came in, and during the first 4 months of 1935, 17,398,000 pounds came into the United States, principally from New Zealand, Argentina, and Australia.

In the last 10 months 11,269,000 bushels of corn came into the United States, 14,000,000 bushels of oats, 9,000,000 bushels of barley, 189,000,000 pounds of barley malt. Some of our good barley farmers in Minnesota are wondering why they get such low prices for their barley. That is the answer. They make the malt in Canada and ship it into this country in large amounts. Twenty-one million bushels of wheat came in in the last 10 months, and, 8,147,000 bushels of rye came into the United States. We want the President to go ahead and exercise the powers conferred in this bill, so that the American markets may be preserved not only for the cotton farmers and the textile business, but also for the other farmers in this country, who are entitled to this market, and who are unable to continue their business if they have to compete with cheaply produced agricultural products of other countries.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. These importations you have listed constitute what percentage of the total amount of the respective commodities consumed in this country?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I am unable to get those figures right now?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Are not these importations an indication of prosperity on the American farm for the reason they indicate that for the first time in many years the domestic price is sufficiently high to warrant their bringing in these foreign products over our tariff wall? Up to this time the price has been so low it did not pay the foreign importers to bring commodities into the United States and pay the tariff, and the fact that they are now bringing them in would indicate a tremendous rise in the domestic price in the last year.

Mr. ANDRESEN. The first week in February butter reached a parity price of around 34 cents, which it held for a week. Imports of butter have come in so rapidly that the price has been depressed from 34 cents a pound the first week in February to 23 cents a pound today.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Was not that followed by a cessation of importations?

Mr. ANDRESEN. No. The biggest importation we had came in the month of April, when we had 7,500,000 pounds of butter—twice as much as we had in the 3 months before that. I cannot tell how to account for it. The imports are still coming in by leaps and bounds. I do not have the figures for the last month—they were not available.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. What is the gentleman's remedy?

Mr. ANDRESEN. The remedy is to either raise the tariff or place an embargo on those commodities so that our farmers in this country may have the market for the products they produce here.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I fully agree with the gentleman. Curtail importations by tariffs or embargoes, and maintain domestic prices under the A. A. A.

Mr. MOTT. May I ask the gentleman, in view of the facts he has stated, why did not the committee provide for mandatory embargoes instead of leaving it to the discretionary authority of the President, which every one of us knows he will never exercise, because he has that authority now.

Mr. ANDRESEN. That is true; but it happens that the division on the committee is rather large, and while this committee never discusses politics because we are interested in the welfare of agriculture, we did discuss this very question, and some of them did not want to embarrass the men who might exercise this authority.

Mr. MOTT. Then they have done an entirely futile thing, if they give to the President discretionary authority when they know from experience during the last 2 years that the President never will exercise that authority.

Mr. ANDRESEN. We are in hopes that he will exercise that authority.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, I think it is distinctly unfair to say that he will not exercise the authority when the word is "shall" and not "may."

Mr. MILLARD. Does not the gentleman think it is unfortunate to have the words "when the President has reason to believe"? Cannot you make that any stronger?

Mr. ANDRESEN. We say in there that he shall do it.

Mr. MILLARD. But "when he has reason to believe."

Mr. ANDRESEN. We will have to leave it to his good judgment and we hope that he will exercise that authority.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Has the gentleman expressed any opinion as to the constitutionality of the so-called "marketing agreement order"?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I did express that there was some doubt on the part of the members of the committee, but we thought that question should be determined by the court.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Did the committee consider the fact that it had the right to enact, as a part of this law, an embargo against the importation of any farm products from abroad, to protect the American farmer?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I think the committee probably recognized that right, but sometimes committees do not function the way their good judgment dictates.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I will say there has been a great deal of criticism and suspicion expressed about what the President might or might not do. This Congress can place that embargo if they wish to do it.

Mr. ANDRESEN. The theory of some of the gentlemen in the present administration is that we are to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements and permit commodities to come into this country, of which we produce a sufficient quantity to take care of the domestic demands. I think that this administration should proceed to take care of the American producers, not only on the farms but also in industry, and protect them so that we can get back to a normal recovery in this country and again have prosperity.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have tried to answer some of the questions that have been propounded. That is the only reason I took this time. So few of the Members of the House had an opportunity to study this 53-page document that is technical in character, and, therefore, I hope that my contribution has somewhat aided in clearing up or giving an explanation to the legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Before the decision in the Schechter case the Farm Bureau and the Grange and the Milk Producers Association were down here en masse in favor of the proposed amendments. Can the gentleman advise the House as to the attitude of those farm organizations with regard to the bill which is now before the House?

Mr. ANDRESEN. We have not held any hearings on this bill, but I am satisfied that those organizations are still for the legislation. It is my hope that the enactment of this bill will materially aid agriculture throughout the United States so that our farmers may receive cost of production plus a fair profit for the products of the farm.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN] has expired.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a table from the Department of Commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The table referred to is as follows:

Agricultural imports for 10 months beginning July 1, 1934, and ending Apr. 30, 1935

[Department of Commerce figures]

	6 months ending Dec. 31, 1934	4 months ending Apr. 30, 1935	Total 10 months
Total value of merchandise imported for consumption	$804,802,254	$662,297,761	$1,467,100,015
Of the above imports for consumption the following classifications represent agricultural products:
Animals and animal products, edible	25,333,696	26,514,759	51,848,455
Animals and animal products, inedible	45,150,119	45,182,057	90,332,176
Vegetable food products and beverages	234,442,820	206,328,496	440,791,316
Vegetable products, inedible	109,490,793	95,971,433	205,462,226
Textile fibers and manufactures	111,876,989	90,587,065	202,454,054
Total for 10 months			990,898,227

List of a few important imported farm products during 10-month period

	6 months ending Dec. 31, 1934	4 months ending Apr. 30, 1935	Total 10 months
Cattle, head	9,292	144,919	154,211
Meat products, including fresh, prepared, and canned meat and pork, pounds	38,876,217	38,040,917	76,917,134
Butter, do	822,106	17,398,167	18,220,273
Corn, bushels	2,806,869	8,462,653	11,269,552
Oats, do	5,559,314	8,525,101	14,084,415
Barley, do	6,566,590	3,050,235	9,616,825
Barley malt, pounds	98,989,337	90,806,382	189,795,719
Wheat, bushels	12,936,872	8,823,494	21,760,366
Rye, do	3,678,810	4,468,858	8,147,668

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, is is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I am not a dirt farmer. I happen to belong to the local grange, the Pomona Grange, and the National Grange, and the Farm Bureau Federation, but I plead guilty to not being a dirt farmer like my eminent constituent in the White House. However, I feel very strongly that the time has come for the Republican Party to present a clear-cut and definite farm policy to try to do something to restore the vanishing world markets for our agricultural products.

Mr. RYAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I have not made my point yet.

The so-called "grass roots" convention that met a few days ago in Springfield, Ill., had this to say as to their agricultural program.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I do not yield.

National recognition of the needs of agriculture.
We hold that no economic——

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The gentleman is not speaking on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will confine his discussion to the bill.

Mr. FISH. Oh, certainly. I am talking about agriculture. I am reading the agricultural plank of the recent Republican Mid-West convention. There could be nothing more pertinent to the pending bill than that.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. We do not have "grass roots" in agriculture.

Mr. FISH. I am not yielding to anybody, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The gentleman did not yield to anybody.

Mr. FISH (reading):

National recognition of the needs of agriculture.
We hold that no economic advantage of agriculture thus far attained shall be surrendered. The farmer of right is entitled to a fair proportionate part of the national income and to receive a parity price for the products of his farm in domestic markets.

I am sorry, as a Republican, that that convention did not go much further and offer a clear-cut and definite program. Agriculture is and will continue to be one of the greatest problems and issues before the country, not only when this bill is passed but for years to come. We must do something to restore the vanishing world markets for our farm surpluses. I deplore the fact that that issue has not been raised and that no concrete program has been offered since the McNary-Haugen bill to restore these vanishing markets.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. FISH. Very well. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. At the "grass roots "convention in Springfield the article which they adopted in their platform practically approved the entire program which the Democratic Party has adopted for agriculture.

Mr. FISH. I have just read it. I believe every thinking man is in favor of giving agriculture every opportunity to make a fair profit beyond the cost of production. I feel that that solution will be accepted by all the Members of this House, that the western farmers should have a parity, an equilibrium between the prices for our agricultural products and the prices for the products of the mines and the factories. But what of that? That does not do anything to restore world markets. We are importing 15,000,000 more bushels of wheat than we are exporting. The United States, the greatest wheat-producing nation in the world, is importing 15,000,000 bushels more than we are exporting. Is it not time we talked about world markets for our American wheat, cotton, corn, and other farm produce?

Mr. ARNOLD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. ARNOLD. I understand the gentleman has introduced and has pending in the House a farm-relief bill along the lines of the old McNary-Haugen bill?

Mr. FISH. That is right.

Mr. ARNOLD. The bill we are now considering contains the provisions of the McNary-Haugen bill. The gentleman states that in addition to aiding agriculture we should do something to build up our foreign trade. What has the gentleman done in the way of introducing any bills in Congress that would restore the foreign trade he is now complaining has been lost?

Mr. FISH. I think the gentleman just said, did he not, that I had reintroduced the McNary-Haugen bill?

Mr. ARNOLD. But the provisions of that bill are contained in this bill.

Mr. FISH. Some of the principles are in it.

Mr. ARNOLD. No; the principles of the McNary-Haugen bill are here.

Mr. FISH. Have I told the gentleman I was opposed to this bill?

Mr. ARNOLD. I was trying to find out what the gentleman has done to restore the foreign markets.

Mr. FISH. I was going to say that the only thing that impels me to vote for this bill is the fact that it contains some of the principles, possibly some of the main principles, of the McNary-Haugen bill. I am opposed to the processing tax. If I had my way I would wipe out the entire A. A. A. and give the Secretary of Agriculture the right and the power to fix minimum prices for agriculture, to have two sets of prices, a domestic price fixed by the Secretary, and a world price to take care of our surplus of wheat, cotton, corn, or whatever commodity it may be, sell it in the world markets, and take whatever price it brings, and distribute the money to the farmers.

Mr. ARNOLD. Would the gentleman empower the Secretary of Agriculture to fix this upset price?

Mr. FISH. I certainly would.

Mr. PIERCE and Mr. JONES rose.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I want to inform the House, so there will be no misunderstanding about it, that I am speaking over a national radio hook-up at 6:30 this evening on the subject of our vanishing markets, giving facts and figures, so fire your questions at me now. I yield first to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. JONES. I understood the gentleman to say that he had introduced a bill which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. FISH. Yes; similar to the last McNary-Haugen bill; that was, provided the A. A. A. had been wiped out. I am opposed to all the processing taxes. I realize they have increased the cost of agricultural products, but that farmers want to maintain those benefits. I realize they are really bonuses, and the farmers will vote overwhelmingly for them, but that is not the proper system. It is, however, the system in existence. I maintain that the Republican Party should work out a clear-cut program to restore the vanishing markets and substitute something in place of the processing taxes, but I am not able to go into that angle of it at the present time in a limited debate.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. May I suggest to the gentleman from New York that a complete program such as he has suggested is already in Congress in the shape of bills? There are the Frazier-Lemke farm-mortgage refinancing bill, the old John Simpson cost-of-production bill, the McNary-Haugen bill, and the old debenture bill. They are all in Congress. The only reason they have not received the consideration of this body—successful consideration—is because the present administration happens to be opposed to them. These bills are in shape so that they could be passed at this session of Congress if we had sufficient support in this body to do it; and I may mention that in the case of at least one of these bills 36 State legislatures out of 48 in the United States have formally petitioned the Congress of the United States to enact it into law as a substitute for this measure.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman kindly inform the House and the country, inasmuch as he is running for President, how he stands on these bills?

Mr. FISH. I propose to do my own talking to the country over the radio tonight.

Mr. McFARLANE. Tell the people how he stands on these bills.

Mr. FISH. Now, let me proceed on this subject. The raising of agricultural prices has been welcomed by all the farmers, at least. Someone has asked whether the Grange and the Farm Bureau Federation are for this bill. I think both are for it. I ask the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES], if the farm organizations are not for this bill?

Mr. JONES. All of them which have made a declaration for or against it are for it. There are some State unions which have favored it, but I do not think the national unions have stated their position on it; but practically all the farm organizations, some 15 or 20 of them, I think, have endorsed the measure.

Mr. FISH. My main purpose in taking the floor at this time was to point out the undeniable fact that in 2 years the A. A. A. program, in spite of all it has done toward raising the cost of farmers' products, has lost the world markets. Let us take cotton, for instance. We have lost over 50 percent of the world market in cotton. Cotton was our single greatest export crop.

More people in America were connected with the production of cotton than any one single commodity. I have seen it estimated as high as 10,000,000 people. We have lost half of the world markets and through the reduction of 25 percent of the cotton crop hundreds of thousands of people in the South have been placed on the relief rolls. While we have lost 3,000,000 bales, Brazil, Egypt, India, North Africa, China, and Soviet Russia have increased their production more than 3,000,000 bales. We have simply lost that wealth. The question now is, How are we going to get it back? The greatest wealth this country has ever produced has been in cotton. We are losing our market for it every day. Eventually we shall lose the other 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 bales of exportable cotton produced in the Southern States. If the South wants to commit economic suicide, of course, it is not our fault. We are not responsible for it. It is due to the A. A. A. program that we have lost the foreign markets. It is due to the A. A. A. program and the processing tax that the wheat producers have lost the wheat market in Europe.

Mr. ARNOLD. How has the A. A. A. lost the foreign market?

Mr. FISH. I will tell the gentleman.

Mr. PIERCE. It was gone before the A. A. A. Act was passed.

Mr. FISH. Oh, no. When you reduce production 25 percent and increase the cost in the United States so it gets away above the world market, naturally foreign nations are not going to buy so much. That is self-evident to anyone and is exactly what has happened to our cotton and wheat surpluses. Egypt, Brazil, and other countries have undersold us in cotton, and Argentina and Australia in wheat.

Mr. ARNOLD. Our farmers want these increased prices, and it is to their benefit. Now, would the gentleman take that away from them in order to get the world trade?

Mr. FISH. One minute the gentleman denies we have lost the world trade and in the next minute he wants the increased prices at home. I say, yes, have two prices, one for our domestic market and another price for the world markets. Instead of destroying our crops and plowing them under, raise all we can and sell the surplus at whatever price we can get. [Applause.] If we can get 50 cents in the world market for wheat let us sell it. Then bring the money back to this country and distribute it to the farmers. It is a clear-cut proposition and a plan that the Republicans ought to stand for solidly.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY].

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am sure that I cannot adequately appraise the value of the services of the Chairman of your Agriculture Committee, the distinguished and splendid gentleman from Texas, Hon. MARVIN JONES. While I do not desire to unduly compliment him upon the discharge of his legislative duties, I would not be true to my inmost feelings, as one of the younger members of the committee, if I did not publicly state that he has, as chairman of the committee, demonstrated splendid leadership and great ability. With wisdom and becoming dignity he has presided over the deliberations of his committee with such fairness and with such impartiality that he has not only distinguished himself but he has endeared himself to every member of the committee and is entitled to the gratitude of this House and the country at large. Whatever may be the fate of this measure, that divine compensation of life, the luxury of enjoyment, which comes only from duty well and faithfully performed, will surely be his rightful portion.

Were I guided solely by my own inclinations, I would not permit myself to trespass upon the patience of this committee, but I am impelled by a sense of duty and perhaps motivated by an intemperate zeal, in asking your indulgence for a few brief observations upon this bill, which so vitally affects the welfare and the happiness of those whom I have the honor to represent.

With unaffected humility, I frankly confess that there are those present who more thoroughly understand this bill, and before the splendor of whose genius and ability I should bow with respectful deference. But even though I am still in my congressional swaddling clothes, I believe that I know at least a little something about the vicissitudes of the farmer and the necessity of strengthening the Agricultural Adjustment Act, to the end that it may more effectively accomplish its high service—the restoration of the farmers' purchasing power and the rehabilitation of agriculture.

I have no quarrel with those who may differ with me upon the wisdom or the efficacy of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. Neither shall I impugn the motive nor question the sincerity, nor doubt the patriotism of any man or woman who may oppose this legislation on the ground that it is a form of governmental regulation. I am glad that this is still a forum wherein men may differ and, while I am mindful of the fact that governmental regulation is repugnant, I am also conscious of the fact that poverty, desolation, and foreclosures are likewise quite repugnant. While I have sympathy with those who may differ, I have little patience with the critics of honest effort who have no better plan to offer.

I believe that the American farmer loves the fundamental philosophy of his Nation, and I believe that I know the American farmer well enough to know that he wants no legislation which does not find sanction within the framework of our Constitution. The American farmer loves this representative Government of ours—he does not want communism, fascism, or nazi-ism, or any other kind of "ism" except true Americanism. He does not want charity; he only wants justice and the protection of those blessed rights guaranteed to him by the organic law of the land. He wants his share of the national income, his rightful place in the national economy, and his rightful portion of human happiness. He wants to be freed from the merciless tyranny of that antiquated system which has enslaved him.

Of course, the farmer looks forward to the time when he can plant freely and harvest generously, in the certainty that he will have a market at home and abroad for the product of his toil, but for the present, recognizing the emergency, is willing to curtail his efforts in order to reduce the surplus which is depressing the price and which the world apparently does not want or cannot buy.

I have a genuine faith in the American farmer, and I believe that he today has an abiding faith in the leadership of the Democratic Party as it seeks to furnish him with the machinery which will enable him to gain control of his own industry and become the master of his own household.

Industry produces only that which it can profitably sell. Pray tell me why the farmer should continue to deplete his soil by producing that which the world will not buy? Neither the processor nor the manufacturer nor the consuming public has the right to eat the food nor wear the fiber produced by the sweat and toil of the farmer unless and until they are willing to pay the farmer not only the cost of production but reasonable compensation for his labor. If to pay the farmer reasonable compensation for his labor will result in closing factory doors, then let the doors close, for they have no right to remain open and expect the cotton farmer to put shirt tails on the people of the world while he himself is bled as white as the cotton he produces. Neither is the public entitled to the milk unless it is willing to feed the cow.

This is not a processors' measure. It was not designed to protect the manufacturer. It was not initiated and it is not administered for the protection of the other parasites who have in the past "farmed the farmer", and we do not intend to permit them to dictate the terms and conditions under which the program for the improvement of agriculture is carried out.

Restore to the American farmer this purchasing power and then, and only then, will the idle wheels of industry start to turn. This bill seeks to do that very thing, and at the same time it does no violence to the legitimate rights of others.

Everything from root rot to blue mold works against the farmer. Everything that crawls upon the earth, and even that which dwells beneath or falls upon the earth, fights against him. Every bug and beetle and bollweevil is his enemy. May we hope that Congressmen will be his friends and pass this act which will give strength and vitality to a program which has meant so much to him.

I need not bore you with statistics nor attempt to recapitulate nor even extol the virtues of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. Only those who are blind can fail to see the conspicuous signs of returning prosperity. It will suffice to say that the shadow is lifting from the farm; despondency is disappearing; confidence is being restored; and happiness is returning to the hearthstones of American homes.

Time will not permit me to even attempt an analysis of this bill, but I do want to say:

It will make the Agricultural Adjustment Act more certain and more effective.

It will certainly remove all doubt as to the constitutionality of at least some, if not all, of the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

It safeguards the exercise and possible abuse of the powers conferred upon the Department of Agriculture.

It gives the farmer a voice in the initiating and terminating of certain programs which seek to bring about the declared policy of the act.

It sets apart 30 percent of the import duties collected by the Government, which is estimated to be around $100,000,000, for the building up of the substandard of consumption; the development of foreign and domestic markets in the interest of a fuller utilization of our agricultural resources.

It provides for the payment of benefits to farmers cooperating in the great plan for adjustment of our national economy.

It protects the public by providing for an ever normal granary, which will provide adequate reserves of the major agricultural commodities to protect consumers from shortages.

This bill fixes, by act of Congress, the processing tax and prevents the filing of claims for refund of taxes already paid, and prevents the enjoining of the collection of processing taxes levied in the future. By fixing the tax ourselves, we certainly take care of the constitutional objection as to the delegation of power conferred upon the Secretary of Agriculture by the triple A, in this respect.

The bill spells out in certain terms the authority conferred upon the Department of Agriculture, and provides the conditions and limitations for the exercise of the power we have vested in the Secretary of Agriculture.

No farmer can be licensed or subjected to orders in his capacity as a producer.

No retailer can be licensed or subjected to orders in his capacity as a retailer.

No license or order can be imposed upon the processors of farm commodities unless the Secretary and the President first determine that it is the only practical means of accomplishing the declared policies of the act, and that two-thirds of the producers of the commodity favor the imposition of such orders. Thereupon, minimum producers' prices may be fixed so as to guarantee to the farmer a parity price.

As to the constitutionality of orders fixing minimum producers' prices, although we have no direct United States Supreme Court decision as a precedent, I desire to call your attention to a few decisions which we think justify the belief that these provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act are constitutionally sound. First, I would remind you that in many of the large metropolitan milk markets of the country by far the greater portion of the milk distributed in such markets is produced in States other than those in which such markets are located. The bulk of the milk supplied to these markets thus moves in interstate commerce directly from the producer to the distributor. As an example, approximately 90 percent of all milk distributed in the Boston metropolitan area is produced in States other than Massachusetts.

The fixing of minimum prices which distributors are required to pay producers for such milk is clearly a regulation of the contract of purchase of such milk; that is, the very transaction which initiates the movement of this milk in interstate commerce. In Baldwin v. Seelig (55 Sup. Ct. Septs. 497), decided March 4, 1935, the Supreme Court held that the State of New York could not constitutionally prohibit the sale within its borders of milk produced outside of the State and purchased from producers at less than the minimum prices fixed under the statute for the purchase of milk in New York. The Supreme Court held that this attempt by the State of New York to fix minimum producer prices for milk moving in interstate commerce was unconstitutional, because it constituted a regulation of interstate commerce. The holding in this case that New York could not fix producer prices for interstate milk was tantamount to a holding that the Federal Government could fix such prices. Otherwise, it would mean that this aspect of commerce was beyond the control of both the States and Congress, a result which is logically inconceivable.

Another Supreme Court decision affirming the power of Congress to provide for the fixing of minimum producer prices for commodities which move in interstate commerce is Lemke v. Farmers Grain Co. (258 U. S. 50). In that case it was held that a North Dakota statute which fixed the price to be paid for grain purchased from growers in that State—a very large percentage of which moved in interstate commerce after its purchase—was unconstitutional because the fixing of such producer prices was a regulation of interstate commerce and hence could be imposed only by Congress and not by the States. The Court said:

> It is alleged that such legislation is in the interest of the grain grower and essential to protect them from fraudulent purchasers and to secure payment to them of fair prices for the grain actually sold. This may be true, but Congress is amply authorized to pass measures to protect interstate commerce if legislation of that character is needed.

In other cases the Supreme Court has specifically stated that the buying and selling of goods for movement in interstate commerce is itself a part of interstate commerce (Shafer v. Farmers Grain Co., 258 U. S. 189; Dahnke-Walker v. Vondurant, 257 U. S. 282), and consequently the regulation of such contract of purchase by fixing of minimum producer prices is clearly a regulation of a transaction in interstate commerce.

In the Schechter case the transactions regulated by the Poultry Code occurred after the interstate journey of the poultry had ended and after the slaughterers had purchased it from commissionmen and it had come permanently to rest within the State of New York. The opinion specifically distinguished the situation before the Court from that involved here, to wit, the regulation of the purchase of a commodity for immediate shipment in interstate commerce. The Court stated that the provisions of the Poultry Code were not concerned with the purchase of such poultry from producers or their agents, the commission men, and said:

> So far as the poultry here in question is concerned, the flow in interstate commerce had ceased.
>
> The poultry had come to a permanent rest within the State. It was not held, used, or sold by defendants in relation to any further transactions in interstate commerce and was not destined for transportation to other States. Hence decisions which deal with a stream of interstate commerce—where goods come to rest within a State temporarily and are later to go forward to interstate commerce—and with the regulation of transactions involved in that practical continuity of movement are not applicable here.

Thus the Court carefully distinguished the type of regulation involved in the fixing of minimum producer prices for commodities which are purchased for immediate interstate commerce. It is significant that the Court cited at this point of its opinion, among other cases, Lemke against Farmers Grain Co., which I have discussed, as an example of the extent of constitutional regulation of interstate commerce by the Federal Government. Hence the Schechter case indicates that the fixing of minimum producer prices for commodities which move in interstate commerce is within the Federal commerce power.

Hammer v. Dagenhart (247 U. S. 251)—the child-labor case—is not an authority against the constitutionality of the fixing of minimum producer prices for interstate commodities. In that case the Supreme Court held that the real purpose and effect of the child-labor law was to regulate the hours of labor of children in factories within the States, a matter which has no relation whatever to interstate commerce. But obviously the purpose of fixing minimum producer prices for commodities named is to increase the price received by producers for a commodity which moves in interstate commerce. And the cases discussed demonstrate that the purchase and sale of the commodities named for shipment in interstate commerce is in itself a part of interstate commerce, and consequently that in regulating this contract of purchase by fixing minimum producer prices Congress is regulating a transaction which is a part of interstate commerce, not one related to interstate commerce, as was the employment of child labor involved in Hammer against Dagenhart.

In fixing minimum producer prices for such commodities, Congress is not regulating manufacture or production; the only transaction regulated is the purchase of such commodities by the distributor from the producer, and that purchase initiates the movement of such commodities in interstate commerce and is itself a part of interstate commerce.

In metropolitan milk markets such as Boston, there is, of course, a relatively small volume of milk which is produced in the same State in which it is distributed, and hence does not move in interstate commerce. The application of milk orders to this relatively small amount of milk is amply justified under the doctrine that Congress has the power to regulate intrastate commerce in connection with its regulation of interstate commerce when intrastate commerce is so intermingled with the interstate commerce regulated that effective regulation of the latter requires regulation of the former, or when the regulation of interstate commerce alone would give an unfair competitive advantage to intrastate commerce of the same character, or when intrastate commerce directly affects or burdens interstate commerce. Thus, the Interstate Commerce Commission may regulate intrastate railroad rates when such intrastate rates, if unregulated, would hinder effective regulation of interstate railroad rates, or would discriminate against those who ship goods in interstate commerce—the Shreveport case (234 U. S. 342); United States v. Louisiana (290 U. S. 70); New York v. United States (257 U. S. 591). It seems obvious that in these interstate milk markets the fixing of minimum producer prices for interstate milk could not be effective without fixing equivalent prices for intrastate milk which is in direct competition with interstate milk, and the fixing of minimum producer prices for interstate milk alone would clearly discriminate against such milk.

Therefore, it would appear that there can be no very serious question that the fixing of minimum producer prices for milk is permissible under the due-process clause of the fifth amendment. Nebbia v. New York (291 U. S. 502) and Hegeman Farms Corporation v. Baldwin (293 U. E. 163) establish that fixing such minimum producer prices for milk does not contravene the due-process clause of the fourteenth amendment, and it is well settled that the restraints of the fifth amendment upon congressional legislation are no greater than those of the fourteenth amendment upon State legislation (Heiner v. Donnan, 285 U. S. 312, 326).

We may expect new decisions upon new laws in this new and progressive age, but I am sure that no one Supreme Court decision, nor a dozen decisions, will halt the march of progress or send us back to the so-called "good old days" of starvation and woe and want.

In my State, and in the other flue-cured tobacco growing States, the situation, with reference to tobacco, is in many respects similar to the situation as to milk in the metropolitan areas. According to evidence introduced in the case of Motsinger and others against the collector of internal revenue for North Carolina and others, now pending in the United States District Court for the Middle District of North Carolina, approximately 60 percent of the entire North Carolina flue-cured crop is exported annually. At least 65 percent of the North Carolina crop is either exported and transported in interstate commerce to other States prior to its manufacture, and 98 percent of all of the flue-cured tobacco produced in North Carolina is ultimately consumed either before or after manufacture outside of the State, and, therefore, goes into the stream of foreign or interstate commerce.

It certainly follows, then, that the prostration of the tobacco farmer is well calculated to dry up the streams of commerce insofar as tobacco is concerned.

As the price of tobacco rises, increasing numbers of motor cars are sold in the tobacco-producing States. The sale of farm machinery and fertilizer and of any number of other things which the farmer must have increases in volume and accelerates the stream of interstate commerce and stimulates national prosperity.

I do not believe that the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as it will be amended by the bill under consideration, will be found wanting on the ground that it is an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power. Time will not permit a further discussion of this particular phase of the measure.

In closing, I desire to remind you of the splendid defense of the Agricultural Act delivered on the floor of this House on Tuesday, April 23, by my good friend and colleague from North Carolina the Honorable LINDSAY C. WARREN, which, I think, is a complete answer to those who have not been willing to go along with this part of the new-deal program, under which the income to cotton farmers alone rose from $464,000,000 in 1932 to $862,000,000 in 1933. Insofar as my State is concerned, when I realize that the cash income to our farmers was increased from $86,000,000 in 1932 to $216,000,000 in 1934, I am unwilling to remain silent when their program is threatened or attacked, and I want it distinctly understood that I am for this bill lock, stock, and barrel. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE].

Mr. COFFEE. Mr. Chairman, I cannot discuss very many phases of this bill in 10 minutes, so I am going to confine my remarks to the provisions of the bill that deal with our foreign trade. I should like first to answer the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]. He asks what has happened to our vanishing foreign trade. I may state that if he would search through the Tariff Acts of 1921, 1922, and 1930 he would probably find the reason for the retaliatory barriers raised by foreign countries which have practically wrecked our international trade.

There can be no general prosperity in this country until the purchasing power has been restored to the 50,000,000 people in this country who are engaged in agriculture. It was the loss of this purchasing power that largely contributed to the collapse of industry and our consequent major social problem—the army of unemployed. Agriculture was the first major industry to be forced down the toboggan into depression because of loss of foreign markets. Other industries closed as a consequence of the loss of this domestic market, throwing millions of men out of work and further reducing the purchasing power of the Nation. The chain of circumstances is known to all of you. Our problem is to rebuild that which has been destroyed; to restore national prosperity and regain what has been lost.

The Agricultural Adjustment Act has been of great benefit to agriculture. The adoption of this bill containing the amendments to the act will, in my opinion, make the Agricultural Adjustment Act the legislative machinery that will not only pull agriculture out of the bog of depression but will start the wheels of industry and help carry the army of unemployed back to work.

The amendments dealing with our foreign trade in agricultural products introduce into the Agricultural Adjustment Act a clear authority to maintain a two-price system for American agriculture. By adopting these amendments Congress will be taking a great step forward in recapturing lost world markets for American agriculture. It will be possible to maintain a domestic price level the height of our tariff above the world level on the portion of our products consumed in this country, and provide a means of exporting the surplus at the world level. In so doing, Congress will be adopting for the United States a system of marketing agricultural commodities already tried and approved in some form by practically every other country of any consequence engaged in exporting, as shown in the following table:

Two-price systems in export of certain agricultural products, by type of administration and source of funds (1929–34)

Country	Grains	Flax	Corn	Butter	Eggs	Beans	Olive oil	Pork and pork products	Beef	Cheese	Poultry	Live animals	Wine
Argentina	A–8	A (seed)–8	A–8
Australia				B–4 A–5									D–1.
Austria	E–6			E–6					E–6	E–6
Bulgaria	A–1+3 (2)		A–1+3 (2)
Chile	A–3+1+7					A–3+1+7							A–3+1+7.
Denmark									A–1+3
Egypt			D–6 (1)			D–6 (1)
Estonia				D–9+1	D–9+1			D–1+3 (9)
Finland				D–2	F–1			F–1		D–2
France	D–2 (1)	D–2 (1)
Germany	E–6			E–6	E–6			E–6	E–6
Greece							D–1.
Hungary	D(B)–3
Irish Free State				D–1	D–1						D–1	D–1
Italy	A (rice)–2
Latvia		C–1		D+C–1				C–1
Netherlands								A–1
Poland	E–6+1			E–6+1				E–6+1		E–6+1
Rumania	D–3+6 (1)		D–1 (6)
Spain	A (Rice)–3
Southern Rhodesia			A–5	B–4					D–3
Sweden	F–1
Union of South Africa			A–7+2	B+A–4					A–7+2
Uruguay	A–1							A–1
Yugoslavia	C–1 (3)

LEGEND

Administration by: A, board created by Government; B, cooperative association; C, monopoly; D, bounties paid without any special administrative unit; E, import certificates; F, export certificates.

Source of funds: 1, general taxes; 2, special sales taxes; 3, processing taxes; 4, producers' assessments; 5, equalization fee plan; 6, general customs receipts; 7, special import duties; 8, foreign exchange profits; 9, tax on foreign exchange.

The substance of these amendments is very simple. First, they give the Secretary of Agriculture permissive power to make "payments to expand domestic or foreign markets", "payments to remove surpluses of agricultural commodities or products thereof." The comprehensive language of these phrases is intended to authorize three methods of disposing of surpluses: Exportation at world prices, diversion to relief channels, and conversion into low-cost by-products. Any of these payments may be made separately or in conjunction with the familiar rental or benefit payments now authorized under the act.

Second, the amendments provide the source of funds to make these payments. A processing tax may be levied with respect to any basic commodity. If no rental or benefit payments are to be made for adjustment of production, the tax would be reduced to the very low rate necessary to pay losses on exportation or to expand markets. In any case, even if all payments are being made, the rate of tax will not exceed the present rate.

Section 31 of this bill authorizes an appropriation of 30 percent of the customs receipts for the use of the Secretary of Agriculture for the principal purpose of encouraging the exportation of the surplus major agricultural commodities and products or diversion into relief. This fund will amount to approximately $100,000,000 a year and can be used in conjunction with or independently of any funds raised through a processing tax to pay exporters a bounty to indemnify them against loss in the removal of the surplus agricultural commodities from the domestic market. Through the manipulation of this fund a dual price level can be maintained and in this way we can prevent our domestic price level from being forced to the world level when a surplus occurs.

This is about agriculture's proportionate share of the tariff duties, since approximately 30 percent of the population is engaged in agriculture. This fund is an independent fund and can be used in conjunction with funds provided through the processing tax, if there is such, or independently, to remove surplus agricultural products from the domestic market through the export channel. It will give the American farmer an opportunity to increase production as world markets are expanded and a stabilized price on that portion of his production consumed domestically.

Normally 18 percent of farm income is derived from foreign sales as against 5 percent for industry. There is nothing mandatory in these provisions which are designed to arm the American producer with a means of attaining and regaining his foreign market.

The following table indicates the trend of meat exports from the leading meat-exporting nations:

Meat and meat products, international trade, biennial, 1919–33

[In millions of pounds]

Calendar year	United States	Argentina	Denmark	New Zealand	Australia	Brazil
1919	3,118	1,596	34	552	521	254
1921	1,948	1,242	237	553	338	174
1923	2,342	1,853	492	405	212	250
1925	1,584	2,168	564	449	458	153
1927	1,290	2,280	682	441	321	93
1929	1,448	1,701	681	428	383	201
1930	1,183	1,552	875	514	344	288
1931	978	1,544	1,040	519	350	184
1932	865	1,436	1,025	581	446	116
1933	945	1,429	797	651	434	136

Third, the amendments take steps to protect our rising domestic price level against importations. A new section added to the act authorizes the President to cause the Tariff Commission to investigate the importation of any articles of commerce, and, upon their finding that such imports tend to prevent any agricultural commodity from reaching parity price, to license further imports, impose quotas, or exact compensating taxes. This section is essential to protect our domestic market against importations of competing agricultural commodities and is of particular interest to the livestock producer.

The maladjustment of tariff benefits has in general tended to force the farmer to buy on a protected market and to sell on a world market. The high tariffs provided for industrial products and the low tariffs provided on most agricultural commodities have tended to industrialize the United States at the expense of agriculture and labor. Since 1922 the trend has been toward increased exportation of industrial products and increased importation of foodstuffs.

The following figures indicate this situation better than words can tell:

Foodstuffs

[In thousands of dollars]

Year	Exports	Imports	Excess of exports (+) or imports (−)
1922	1,046,598	717,228	+329,370
1924	966,183	946,473	+19,710
1926	838,068	957,635	−119,567
1928	760,488	955,706	−195,218
1930	541,183	693,573	−152,390
1932	241,537	406,891	−165,354
1934	226,968	517,861	−290,893

Semimanufactures and finished manufactures

[In thousands of dollars]

Year	Exports	Imports	Excess of exports (+) or imports (−)
1922	1,730,037	1,215,624	+514,413
1924	2,198,720	1,405,234	+793,486
1926	2,612,328	1,680,961	+931,367
1928	2,976,354	1,669,004	+1,307,350
1930	2,410,891	1,365,174	+1,045,717
1932	820,955	557,558	+263,397
1934	1,220,671	657,525	+563,146

There are quoted below the domestic exports and imports for consumption of cattle and beef products from and into the United States during the calendar year 1934 and the period from January 1 to April 30, 1933, inclusive:

	Calendar year 1934		Jan. 1–Apr. 30, 1935
	Quantities	Dollars	Quantities	Dollars
DOMESTIC EXPORTS
Cattle for breeding.....number..	5,440	178,900	717	69,575
Other cattle.....do....	10,215	262,711	956	33,428
Beef and veal:
Fresh or frozen.....pounds..	5,470,986	735,720	1,754,032	293,494
Pickled or cured.....do....	13,940,031	823,817	2,025,949	169,330
Canned beef.....do....	2,499,665	811,822	1,044,952	350,322
Tallow.....do....	7,347,140	335,792	24,241	2,518
IMPORTS
Cattle for breeding.....number..	6,860	424,007	2,955	230,799
Other cattle.....do....	57,679	591,133	144,919	3,474,073
Beef and veal:
Beef, fresh.....pounds..	140,474	13,445	3,190,313	371,487
Veal, fresh.....do....	3,204	316	10,715	1,293
Cured, fresh.....do....	823,613	49,314	299,743	29,708
Canned beef.....do....	46,673,095	3,015,675	25,613,601	1,757,613
Tallow.....do....	42,813,299	1,624,792	88,483,408	4,240,793

Wheat, total exports of principal exporting countries and position of leading countries

[Percent of total world exports]

Year	Total	United States	Canada	Argentina	Australia
Average:
1909–13	745,194,000	13.5	12.2	12.8	6.7
1914–18	613,375,000	36.0	25.3	12.7	7.1
1924–25, and 1928–29	804,012,000	23.7	36.6	17.5	11.3
1929–30, and 1933–34	780,336,000	16.0	34.4	19.8	15.8
Crop:[1]
1929–30	973,115,000	16.8	43.4	23.3	11.1
1930–31	644,882,000	23.8	28.6	25.0	9.6
1931–32	847,225,000	15.5	31.6	14.2	16.6
1932–33	808,633,000	16.8	24.7	17.9	19.2
1933–34	627,645,000	6.6	42.7	19.2	23.7

[1] Beginning in 1922, World Exports complied from June 1 to July 30 of each following year so that these figures may be more comparable with crop years.

Source: Yearbook, Agriculture, 1920–34, with latest revisions.

The objective sought in the Agricultural Adjustment Act is to attain parity prices for agricultural products. The inclusion of these amendments will be a step toward attaining for agriculture equal footing with industry, which has always managed to obtain practically all of the tariff benefits without affording to agriculture proportionate compensation.

With a properly balanced agricultural production in conformity to domestic and foreign demand, prices on agricultural products can be stabilized at profitable levels. When this is accomplished the increased purchasing power will be immediately reflected in increased industrial activity which is so essential at this time to put the unemployed back on the pay rolls and take them off the relief rolls. There can be no general prosperity in the United States without restoring purchasing power to the consumer.

With the adoption of these amendments, the Agricultural Adjustment Act will be greatly perfected and made more flexible, so that under its provisions each surplus commodity can be dealt with in a manner most adaptable to that particular commodity.

The present act provides only one means of removing surpluses, and that is through a reduction program, and rental and benefit payments can only be made in connection with a reduction program. The amendments change the word "reduction" to "adjustment", and in connection with the other provisions will make it possible to gradually increase production as domestic and foreign markets are developed. The present policy of allowing each industry to determine upon its own program under the act will be continued. However, with the adoption of the bill, the producers of any commodity will have several options under the act of how best to utilize Government assistance in coping with the problems pertaining to their industry.

The Farm Board Act failed because it provided no means of controlling production nor any means of disposing of the surplus. The old McNary-Haugen plan, which provided for an equalization fee to provide a fund sufficient to remove surpluses from the domestic market through the export channel, passed Congress in 1927 and 1928 and was vetoed twice by President Coolidge on the theory that it provided no means of controlling production.

The present act provides the means of controlling production, and by incorporating in that act the principles of the McNary-Haugen plan and also the export-bounty plan, as provided in this bill, the Agricultural Adjustment Act will then be perfected to remove surpluses through the export channel without depending entirely upon controlled production. Weather conditions and other economic factors make it impossible to plan production to meet domestic requirements only. Consequently a means of removing any surplus that may be produced without demoralizing the domestic market is essential.

If we want to fight for foreign trade, we must be armed with the same weapons that the other countries have. There are 15 countries that are subsidizing the exportation of grain, as shown in the table above. You talk about rye coming into the United States; certainly, it comes in from Poland, and Poland pays 30 cents a bushel to get it out of that country, because they are going to maintain their domestic price, and therefore they pay 30 cents a bushel as a bounty to get it out. We only charge 15 cents a bushel tariff coming into this country, and naturally this is a good cash market.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFEE. I yield.

Mr. ANDRESEN. The gentleman is making a very fine presentation, but there is a provision in existing law which permits the President to go ahead and increase our duties to offset something on account of subsidies paid in other countries, but he has not done this.

Mr. COFFEE. The gentleman appreciates the fact that I have tried to make that provision, restricting agricultural imports, in this bill as mandatory as possible.

Mr. ANDRESEN. I know that. The gentleman is a very good Republican in that respect.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFEE. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Does not the gentleman also realize that the President has the authority to put an absolute embargo upon these products whenever they interfere with American industry?

Mr. COFFEE. I will join with any of you people at any time to try and maintain the domestic market for the American producer.

I want to quote here a statement made by President Roosevelt in an address to industrial groups in Boston on November 1, 1932, which indicates his sympathetic attitude toward the provisions of this bill:

> * * * We need to give to 50,000,000 people, who live directly or indirectly upon agriculture, a price for their products in excess of the cost of production. That will give them the buying power to start your mills and mines to work to supply their needs. They cannot buy your goods because they cannot get a fair price for their products. You are poor because they are poor. I favor—and do not let the false statements of my opponents deceive you—continued protection for American agriculture. I favor more than that. I advocate measures to give the farmer an added benefit, called a "tariff" benefit, to make the tariff effective on his products. * * *

These amendments which we are advocating are the only measures before the Congress to correct this fundamental lack of balance in our foreign trade. They apply correctives at either end of the trade channel.

Agriculture must have Government assistance in order to compete with subsidized exports from other countries. While all nations have suffered in the loss of trade, the United States has suffered more than other nations in the loss of her foreign trade. We must arm our nationals with the means of getting rid of these agricultural surpluses. Until we rehabilitate agriculture and restore the purchasing power to the farmer, we are not going to get the wheels of industry turning in the East and get unemployed back to work.

Our committee has taken the position and has included an amendment to provide that each industry must stand on its own bottom and that the processing taxes in one industry cannot be used for the benefit of another. Corn and hogs are the only commingled items. Each industry maps out its own program in collaboration with the Secretary and Administrator. Secretary Wallace and Chester Davis, the administrator of the act, have had a superhuman task to perform. Their commendable efforts to rehabilitate agriculture are showing results. By giving them this additional power and funds necessary to remove burdensome surpluses that may accumulate, and to restrict imports of foodstuffs that compete with domestic production, American agriculture will be given a better chance to fight its way back to prosperity.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF].

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, the purposes of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as set forth in the bill itself, are as follows:

First. To establish and maintain such balance between the production and consumption of agricultural commodities, and such marketing conditions therefor, as will reestablish prices to farmers at a level that will give agricultural commodities a purchasing power with respect to articles that farmers buy, equivalent to the purchasing power of agricultural commodities in the base period. The base period in the case of all agricultural commodities except tobacco shall be the pre-war period, August 1909–July 1914. In the case of tobacco, the base period shall be the post-war period, August 1919–July 1929.

Second. To approach such equality of purchasing power by gradual correction of the present inequalities therein at as rapid a rate as is deemed feasible in view of the current consumptive demand in domestic and foreign markets.

Third. To protect the consumers' interest by readjusting farm production at such level as will not increase the percentage of the consumers' retail expenditures for agricultural commodities, or products derived therefrom, which is returned to the farmer, above the percentage which was returned to the farmers in the pre-war period, August 1909–July 1914.

The bill under consideration today, H. R. 8492, seeks to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act in several particulars. It's chief provisions are as follows:

First. Secretary of Agriculture Wallace will hold hearings. As a result of these hearings orders will be issued affecting processors and distributors but not producers. These orders will be subject to changes from time to time as emergencies arise which require change. These changes will be termed "regulations." These orders and regulations will take the place of licenses and amendments to licenses.

Second. Give the Secretary of Agriculture authority to keep an "ever-normal granary" by taking up surpluses in good years and dealing them out to farmers in bad years in the form of benefit payments in kind rather than in cash.

Third. Give him one-third of the customs receipts, a sum estimated at $100,000,000 a year, to finance marketing surpluses abroad and to improve the domestic market.

Fourth. Permit him to use part of the $100,000,000 to buy up and retire marginal lands.

Fifth. Presidential imposition of quota restrictions on tariffs on imports in event imports of agricultural commodities interfere with the program.

After many weeks of careful deliberation, the House Committee on Agriculture reported favorably on the amendments, and the House was ready to proceed with the amendments, which in their original form contained licensing features, but the Supreme Court ruling declaring the National Industrial Recovery Act unconstitutional made it necessary to send these amendments back to committee for complete revision. The licensing feature had to be eliminated, but in order that some measure of control be kept alive, the Secretary of Agriculture was vested with sufficient power to have some measure of supervision over agricultural products.

Whatever measure of control this may be, the writer sincerely hopes that it will not mean the destruction of any animal and vegetable life in the future as we have had in the past. The writer was taught as a child that the destruction of any food was a grave sin, and still believes firmly that the destruction of food is indefensible. No doubt, millions of our people were shocked when they read that cattle and hogs and grains and other foodstuffs were wantonly destroyed, while millions were undernourished and underfed, going to bed hungry for lack of these provisions. The writer is unalterably opposed to the destruction of any of the wealth produced from the land, as he believes that the creation of wealth is a blessing, and not a curse, to mankind.

However, it must not be forgotten that there are grave abuses in the processing and distribution of foods, and some measure of control must be lodged some place in order to minimize these abuses. Naturally, the proper place for that control should be lodged in the Agriculture Department, because all the available data relative to agriculture is collected in that Department. What this control should consist of no one knows, but the writer suggests that some plan similar to that which exists in Wisconsin under the Department of Markets might be successfully worked out. In our State we have defined unfair competition and unfair trade practices and we could also do that nationally. Under such a plan hearings could be held, testimony taken, and findings had, based thereon, which would constitute orders similar to those of our Marketing Division. If these orders were defective, or found to be incomplete as a result of experience, they could then be altered and amended to suit conditions. The writer feels this would give some measure of control and would not be as drastic or despotic as the proposed licensing scheme. Personally, I am very happy indeed that the licensing feature has been disposed of, as many of the Members of Congress felt that it gave the Secretary of Agriculture too much power.

In this article I have previously referred to the section of the bill which provides that 30 percent of all of the money collected by import duties under our tariff laws be turned over to the Secretary of Agriculture to aid agriculture. This money could be used for the removal of surpluses, the development of foreign and domestic markets, payment of cash or rental benefits to farms, or in various other ways for the benefit of American farmers. This provision, in itself, should materially benefit our farmers.

Another amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act contained in this bill, known as H. R. 8492, will give to the President of the United States the power to fix quotas on imports, or to place a compensating tax on imports in order to keep farm prices up to the fair exchange value commonly referred to as the pre-war parity price, whenever there are actual or threatened imports of such commodities. This provision is of special importance to the dairy industry, particularly in view of the fact that in recent months there have been large imports of butter which have directly and adversely affected the price paid to American farmers for butter fat.

The legal division and the officials of the Dairy Section of the Agriculture Adjustment Administration believe that the amendment referred to will give the power which the dairymen now desire without the use of a production-control program, or a processing tax on butter fat or milk. They believe that it will be possible to reinforce a domestic butter buying program on the part of the Government to stabilize markets, by putting quotas or compensating taxes on imported foreign dairy products which compete with and tend to lower the domestic price level. The A. A. A. people believe that if they started a butter- and cheese-buying program to stabilize domestic prices, that the use of that particular section in the proposed amendment would provide them with a method of doing this without instituting a national production-control program or processing tax on dairy products. At present they feel that when they start buying butter for relief and stabilization, it simply shoots the price of butter up and invites foreign importations and increased consumption of butter substitutes.

One feature of this bill seems to have been copied directly from Joseph's advice to Pharaoh when he exhorted him to store up his grain during the 7 fat years in preparation for the 7 lean years, for this act provides for a similar policy. If there is a large crop one year, the new policy will be to reduce such crop the next year, if it seems advisable, and if there should be a short crop in any given year, the program for the next year could provide for an increase in the production of this commodity. This is in accordance with the theory, "an ever normal granary", and anticipates the production of a sufficient amount of agricultural commodities to meet the demands, first, of our domestic market, and then of our foreign market, secondly, and to keep the production of agricultural products adjusted to a point that will insure to the producer the fair exchange value of his commodity.

In a study of this difficult subject it seems to me that we should bear in mind these things:

First. The purchasing power of the consumer at home.
Second. Manipulations of speculators and racketeers.
Third. Domestic competition.
(a) Substitute for butter.
(b) Healthy herds and high standards.
Fourth. Foreign competition.
Let us consider these factors in order:

PURCHASING POWER OF CONSUMER AT HOME

In examining and studying the reports of the United States Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Agricultural Economics, I find the following:

Trade output of creamery butter, January to March 1934 and 1935

Item	1934	1935	Change 1934 to 1935
	1,000 pounds	1,000 pounds	1,000 pounds
Production	344,157	304,193	−39,964
Out-of-storage movement	95,898	41,834	−54,064
Imports	128	8,538	+8,410
Exports	491	167	−324
Trade output	439,692	354,398	−85,294

	Pounds
Gain in imports in 1935 over 1934	8,410,000
Decline in domestic production	54,000,000

In spite of import gains the domestic-butter consumption fell off one-fifth during the first quarter of 1935 under that of 1934. High butter prices placed butter beyond the reach of the average consumer, and he was forced to buy cheaper substitutes, thus reducing the butter market. Production of oleomargarine in the first quarter of 1935 was 46,000,000 pounds larger than in the same period of 1934.

The increase in imports has not been nearly as large as the decrease in production.

From a study of the foregoing we arrive at the conclusion that the sale of butter can never go beyond the power of the consumer to purchase it. The consumer wants butter and needs it, but he is prohibited from purchasing it because the price gets out of his reach. In order to increase the sale of butter we must increase the power of the consumer to buy it, and this, of course, can only be done by more employment and better wages. Prices of agricultural commodities follow very closely the prices paid for labor. When labor gets better wages the farmer gets better prices, and when wages go down the farmer's market declines.

Statistics show that wages run nearly parallel with the prices of all crops. In 1929 both fell sharply, the low being reached in 1932. From 1932 to 1934 there was a noticeable increase, wages and crop prices still maintaining almost parallel relations.

A study shows that the income of the industrial worker sets the figure of the farmer's income. This fact is clearly established. When wages were high and the industrial worker could buy, the farmer's income was on the level with the worker's wages. As soon as the wage earner's income dropped, the farmer's income dropped with it. So we see that, as far as the domestic market is concerned, and 90 percent of the farmer's products are sold in the domestic market, it is dependent almost entirely on the ability of the industrial worker to buy. Low wages and unemployment wrecks the domestic market for agricultural products. This means the destruction of the income for the farmer, and as soon as his income is destroyed, then he cannot buy what the wage earner makes, and as a result the wage earner cannot earn and buy the farmer's products. One helps to break down the other, and it is apparent from these studies that one is closely allied with the other and dependent upon it. It is to be hoped that the expenditure of the $4,880,000,000 will increase the purchasing power of the worker and thereby expand and increase the income of the farmer. However, this must be borne in mind: that the $4,880,000,000 is only 10 percent of the total amount that should be expended in industry in order to put this country back on its feet in normal business activity. With this public-works relief money we are merely priming the pump of industry. Private industry must expand the other 90 percent, or $45,000,000,000, in order that we may be back where we belong. Such a program is a vast one and cannot be accomplished in a day. It will take time, courage, and confidence to bring it about. Therefore, there must be absolute cooperation and a spirit of willingness to get together. We will not get ahead by fighting each other and wrangling among ourselves. Calm, cool judgment, clear vision, and the faith and perseverance to go on with our program as we see it will bring about the desired results. Do not place confidence in so-called "economic lightning-rod experts", "financial rain makers", and "social-security patent-medicine fakirs" to bring back the rainbow of prosperity overnight.

MANIPULATIONS OF SPECULATORS

The farmer has been the victim of the chiseler, grafter, racketeer, and manipulator in the field of food supplies. The latter's methods have been many and varied, but his objects and results have been the same. His object was, and still is, to depress the farmer's prices and then sell the farmer's products in the cities at the highest possible price, so that the consumer also is a victim to this menace's operations.

Unfortunately for the farmer, he does not sell directly to the consumer, especially in the great populous areas of the country. There is a middleman, who buys from the farmer and sells to the consumer, and here I want to point out an outstanding fact in the economics of the distribution of farm products, and that is this: The middleman always gets his margin. The unfortunate farmer may be producing at less than cost, but the middleman does not sell at less than he pays the farmer. He adds his margin, so that under no conditions, whether it is drought, insect pests, plant diseases, overproduction, floods, or any other untoward emergency which wrecks the farmer's chances to make a profit, the middleman's profit is always secure. Furthermore, the middleman wants the volume of agricultural products large, so that he can keep the price to the farmer low, but, on the other hand, increase his own profits, because if the volume of business is large and the price to the consumer is low enough, the middleman makes his greatest profits. The middleman is not interested in the farmer's profit as long as he does a big volume of business and thereby makes a large profit himself. It is evident from these facts that the middleman's desires and interests are antagonistic to that of the farmer. If we could eliminate him, we would aid both the producer and the consumer.

Let me point out two specific instances in the dairy field: One of the "rackets" in the purchase of milk is to set a base supply and price for it and then a surplus supply and price for it, the theory being that only a certain quantity of milk and cream can be consumed in a given area and that consumption constitutes the base. All milk and cream over that consumption constitutes the surplus. The price for surplus milk and cream is therefore very low, much lower than the cost of production. Let us say that Mr. Smith owns and operates a large milk-processing and distributing company. He purchases the base and surplus of 1,000 farmers in a given area. He then bottles the surplus and sells it at the same price as the base, thus reaping an unfair and enormous profit at the expense of the farmer.

There are also racketeers who go out into farming communities and buy surplus milk which they peddle in small milk stations to the consumer in such large cities as New York and Philadelphia.

Another method of racketeering is to use butter substitutes and wrap them in fancy creamery butter wrappers, leading the consumer to believe that he is buying a high-grade creamery butter when in truth and in fact he is getting an inferior substitute. This practice was exposed by the Department of Justice in the summer of 1934. The plan worked out by the racketeers was as follows: Large quantities of uncolored oleomargarine were purchased from the manufacturers in Elgin, Ill. This oleomargarine was then shipped to Massachusetts, usually to bakers, because in that way the tax on oleomargarine would be avoided. Three hundred and seventy-five thousand pounds were shipped into Boston in this manner between November 1933 and June 1934. However, the Department got hold of this practice and discovered that such shipments were being intercepted in transit and reshipped to a cheese company outside of Boston where the oleomargarine was processed to look and taste like butter. This processed oleomargarine was then cut into rolls, wrapped in beautifully colored wrappers, marked "creamery butter made from pure cream" and sold on the market as butter. About 50 creamery prosecutions were begun in Boston alone against defendants caught working these practices. When you figure that in 9 months Boston used 375,000 pounds of this fake butter, you get some conception of the havoc that this bootlegging of oleomargarine is working in the legitimate field of honest butter.

I should add one more practice to the list above and that is, the unjustifiable profits, salaries, and bonuses of such companies as the National Dairy Products Co. and the Borden Co. I have many figures to bear out this contention, but I shall add only one to give you an idea of what can and does happen as a result of monopolies in the dairy field. It must be remembered that all of this is at the expense of the farmer:

The National Dairy Products Corporation and subsidiaries last year had net profits of $6,551,930 compared with $7,051,872 in 1933. Profit was equal, after preferred dividends were paid, to 93 cents a share on 6,263,165 shares of common against $1.01 in 1933. Sales aggregated $267,414,547 in 1934 compared with $231,196,979 in 1933 an increase of 15.6 percent.

Year ending Dec. 31, 1931

